The designation of a lender as a certified lender shall be suspended or revoked at any time that the Administration determines that the lender is not adhering to its rules and regulations or that the loss experience of the lender is excessive as compared to other lenders, but such suspension or revocation shall not effect any outstanding guarantee.

"(B) In order to encourage all lending institutions and other entities making loans authorized under this subsection to provide loans of $50,000 or less in guarantees to eligible small business loan applicants, during fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991, the Administration shall (i) develop and allow participating lenders to solely utilize a uniform and simplified loan form for such loans, and (ii) allow such lenders to retain one-half of the fee collected pursuant to section (7)(a)(18) on such loans. (5) Section 303 of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 (15 U.S.C. 683) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

Provided further, That an alien who is lawfully present in the United States as a result of being granted conditional entry pursuant to section 203(a)(7) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(a)(7)) before April 1, 1980, because of persecution or fear of persecution on account of race, religion, or political opinion or because of being uprooted by catastrophic natural calamity shall be deemed, for purposes of the previous proviso, to be an alien described in clause (3) of the previous proviso: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation may be used to support or conduct training programs for the purpose of advocating particular public policies or encouraging political activities, labor or antilabor activities, boycotts, picketing, strikes, and demonstrations, including the dissemination of information about such policies or activities, except that this provision shall not be construed to prohibit the training of attorneys or paralegal personnel necessary to prepare them to provide adequate legal assistance to eligible clients or to advise any eligible client as to the nature of the legislative process or inform any eligible client of his rights under statute, order, or regulation: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation may be used to carry out the procedures established pursuant to section 1011(2) of the Legal Services Corporation Act unless the Corporation prescribes procedures to insure that financial assistance under this Act shall not be terminated, and a suspension of financial assistance shall not be continued for more than thirty days, unless the grantee, contractor, or person or entity receiving financial assistance under this Act has been afforded reasonable notice and opportunity for a timely, full, and fair hearing and, when requested, such hearing shall be conducted by an independent hearing examiner, subject to the following conditions—

(1) such request for a hearing shall be made to the Corporation within thirty days after receipt of notice to terminate financial assistance, deny an application for refunding, or suspend financial assistance and such hearing shall be conducted within thirty days of receipt of such request for a hearing;

(2) the Corporation shall make such final decision within thirty days after completion of such hearing; and

(3) hearing examiners shall be appointed by the Corporation in accordance with procedures established in regulations promulgated by the Corporation:

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation may be used to carry out the procedures established pursuant to section 1011(2) of the Legal Services Corporation Act unless the Corporation prescribes procedures to ensure that an application for refunding shall not be denied unless the grantee, contractor, or person or entity receiving assistance under this Act has been afforded reasonable notice and opportunity for a timely, full, and fair hearing to show cause why such action should not be taken and subject to all other conditions of the previous proviso: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used by the Corporation in making grants or entering into contracts for legal assistance unless the Corporation insures that the recipient is either (1) a private attorney or attorneys (for the sole purpose of furnishing legal assistance to eligible clients) or (2) a qualified nonprofit organization chartered under the laws of one of the States, a purpose of which is furnishing legal assistance to eligible clients, the majority of the board of directors or other governing body of which organization is comprised of attorneys who are admitted to practice in one of the States and who are appointed to terms of office on such board or body by the governing bodies of State, county, or municipal bar associations the membership of which represents a majority of the attorneys practicing law in the locality in which the organization is to provide legal assistance, or, with regard to national support centers, the locality where the organization maintains its principal headquarters: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Corporation shall be used, directly or indirectly, by the Corporation to promulgate new regulations or to enforce, implement, or operate in accordance with regulations effective after April 27, 1984, unless the Appropriations Committees of both Houses of Congress have been notified fifteen days prior to such use of funds as provided for in section 606 of this Act: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated to the Legal Services Corporation for fiscal years prior to fiscal year 1986 and carried over into fiscal year 1990, either by the Corporation itself or by any recipient of such funds, may be expended, unless such funds are expended in accordance with the preceding restrictions and provisos, except that such funds may be expended for the continued representation of aliens prohibited by said provisos where such representation commenced prior to January 1, 1983, or as approved by the Corporation: Provided further, That if a Presidential Order pursuant to Public Law 100-119, the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987, is issued for fiscal year 1990, funds provided to each grantee of the Legal Services Corporation shall be reduced by the percentage specified in the Presidential Order: Provided further, That if funds become available to the Legal Services Corporation because a national support center has been defunded or denied refunding pursuant to section 1011(2) of the Legal Services Corporation Act, as amended by this Act, such funds may be transferred to basic field programs to be distributed in the manner specified by this Act: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated by this Act or prior Acts or any other funds available to the Corporation or a recipient may be used by an officer, board member, employee or consultant of the Corporation or by any recipient to implement or enforce the 1984 and 1986 regulations on legislative and administrative advocacy (part 1612) or to implement, enforce or keep in effect provisions in the regulation regarding legislative and administrative advocacy and training (part 1612, 52 FR 28434 (July 29, 1987)) which impose restrictions on private funds except to the extent that such restrictions are explicitly set forth in sections 1007 (a)(5), (b)(6), (b)(7), and 1010(c) of the Legal Services Corporation Act, as amended: Provided further, That the Corporation shall not impose requirements on governing bodies of the recipients that are additional to, or more restrictive than, the provisions of this Act and section 1007(c) of the Legal Services Corporation Act, as amended, including, but not limited to (1) the procedures of appointment, including the political affiliation and the length of terms of board members, (2) the size, quorum requirements and committee operations of such governing bodies, and (3) any requirements on appointment of board members of national support centers that would preclude the bar associations in the States in which the center's principal offices are located from making all appointments required to be made by bar associations: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated under this Act to the Legal Services Corporation may be used by the Corporation or any recipient to participate in any litigation with respect to abortion: Provided further, That the Corporation shall utilize the same formula for distribution of fiscal year 1990 migrant funds as was used in fiscal year 1989: Provided further, That the fourteenth and fifteenth provisos of this section (relating to parts 1607 and 1612 of the Corporation's regulations) shall expire if such action is directed by a majority vote of a Board of Directors of the Legal Services Corporation composed of eleven individuals nominated by the President after January 20, 1989, and subsequently confirmed by the United States Senate: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated under this Act or under any prior Acts for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to consider, develop, or implement any system for the competitive award of grants or contracts until such action is authorized pursuant to a majority vote of a Board of Directors of the Legal Services Corporation composed of eleven individuals nominated by the President after January 20, 1989, and subsequently confirmed by the United States Senate, except that nothing herein shall prohibit the Corporation Board, members, or staff from engaging in in-house reviews of or holding hearings on proposals for a system for the competitive award of all grants and contracts, including support centers, and that nothing herein shall apply to any competitive awards program currently in existence; subsequent to confirmation such new Board of Directors shall develop and implement a proposed system for the competitive award of all grants and contracts: Provided further, that the Corporation shall insure that all grants and contracts made for calendar year 1990 to all grantees receiving funds under sections 1006(a) (1)(A) and (3) of the Legal Services Corporation Act as of September 30, 1989, with funds appropriated by this Act or prior appropriations Acts, shall be made for a period of at least twelve months beginning on January 1, 1990, so as to insure that the total annual funding for each current grantee or contractor is no less than the amount provided pursuant to this Act: Provided further, That such grants or contracts shall not be subject to any amendments to regulations relating to fee-generating cases (45 CFR part 1609) or the use of private funds (45 CFR parts 1610 and 1611) not in operational effect on October 1, 1988: Provided further, That any changes in procedures in operational effect as of September 1, 1989, that would have the effect of imposing timekeeping requirements on recipients must be adopted as rules or regulations in accordance with section 1008(e) of the Legal Services Corporation Act and all of the requirements of this Act: Provided further, That any new rules or regulations, or revisions to existing rules or regulations adopted by the Board of the Legal Services Corporation after October 1, 1989, shall not become effective until after October 1, 1990, or until authorized pursuant to a majority vote of a Board of Directors of the Legal Services Corporation composed of eleven individuals nominated by the President after January 20, 1989, and subsequently confirmed by the United States Senate: Provided further, That, notwithstanding any decision or action of the President of the Corporation after September 7, 1989, funds appropriated under this Act or any prior Acts shall not be denied, for the period October 1, 1989 through December 31, 1990, to any grantee or contractor which in fiscal year 1989 received funding appropriated under any prior Act, as a result of activities which have been found by an independent hearing officer appointed by the President of the Corporation prior to October 1, 1989, not to constitute grounds for a denial of refunding, and any decisions or action of the President of the Corporation reversing or setting aside such decision of an independent hearing officer concerning section 1010(c) of the Act rendered in fiscal year 1989 shall be null and void.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the first committee amendment which will be found on page 2, line 5.

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, let me thank the distinguished President pro tempore. He has got us on course here and me on station here this morning, so we can complete all the appropriations bills on the Senate before the new fiscal year begins. That was a goal of the distingushed chairman of our Appropriations Committee, which I am confident we will have done—namely, pass both Houses, at least the U.S. Senate, every appropriations bill before the end of the fiscal year.

In order to do that, I will, as my ranking member comes to the floor, be highlighting my statement. I will make certain motions to correct some printing errors in the committee amendments and then put the bill in order, without anybody waiving any rights or points of order.

In that vein, Mr. President, let me thank Senator RUDMAN of New Hampshire. He chaired this subcommittee in a distinguished fashion. He knows it by heart. He is very, very cooperative. He affords the leadership when we get in these legislative snarls; he is brilliant of idea and just the best help anyone could possibly have.

I want to publicly thank my colleague, Senator BUMPERS, who worked until 2 o'clock this morning. He was going to manage this bill until I found all of these amendments, and then determined for the better order of business that I better stay on station here rather than go into the Hugo disaster area with the President of the United States. I regret that I was not able to do that.

The President will see first hand the extensive nature of that, and I am confident he will get at the bottleneck, get the Federal Emergency Management Administration on the ball. It is like a new organization hit the country, and it is totally inept.

Mr. President, H.R. 2991 is the last of the 13 appropriations bills for fiscal year 1990. I am reminded that it is also the 13th annual appropriations bill for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary and 27 related agencies that I have been privileged to present to the Senate either as chairman, or ranking minority member of the subcommittee. Over the years we have developed this bill in a completely bipartisan fashion with the other side, starting with former Senators Weicker and Laxalt, and over the last several years with the distinguished ranking minority member and former chairman, the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN].

We have an outstanding subcommittee that includes Senators INOUYE, BUMPERS, LAUTENBERG, SASSER, ADAMS, STEVENS, HATFIELD, KASTEN and GRAMM. In fact, we startled the Attorney General at our opening hearing when he looked up from reading his statement to find he was faced with Gramm, Rudman, and Hollings.

Mentioning hearings reminds me that Senator Mansfield would be proud of us today. He always asked if the printed hearings were available and we can answer affirmatively. Both our volumes are printed, a claim no other Appropriations Subcommittee can make.

Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations reported out the bill yesterday. The total new budget authority in the bill as reported is $17,384,263,000. This is $11,582,862,000 over what the House approved. I regret the large number of amendments but the House bill provided for only 30 percent of the requests for 1990. Fortunately the Senate takes a less stringent view, or otherwise a large part of this bill would be on the continuing resolution. I think it is very important that the Congressional Budget Office has certified that the bill is within the 302(b) allocation for both discretionary budget authority and outlays.

WAR ON DRUGS

The day before yesterday, the Senate approved the Byrd amendment to the Transportation Appropriations Act which adds $1,916,940,000 to the Department of Justice, the Judiciary, and the State Justice Institute to carry out the war on drugs. When we add that to the amounts in this bill for those agencies we have provided the following major programs in our commitment to save a generation from the deadly effect of drug abuse.

FEDERAL PRISON SYSTEM—BUILDINGS AND FACILITIES

The total for new prison construction is $1,401,332,000: 24,000 new prison beds; 7 complexes (maximum, medium, minimum); 3 medium security prisons; 4 metropolitan detention centers; 2 military acquisitions; lease/purchase of one medium prison; expansion of Oakdale II; and existing prison expansions.

FEDERAL PRISON SYSTEM—SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The total provided for staffing Federal prisons is $1,152,554,000—an increase of $199,542,000 over last year: Activation of one new prison (Three Rivers, TX); activation of six housing units (Milan, MI; Bastrop, TX, Lewisburg, PA, Sandstone, MN, Rochester, MN, Memphis, TN); acquisition of five prison camps; and acceleration of prison activations.

DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION

The total of $556,481,000—an increase of $77,301,000—the same as the President's request. Some highlights: Additional State and local drug task forces; new intelligence computer for the El Paso Intelligence Center [EPIC]; cleanup of clandestine laboratories; and additional staff, including 164 agents.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

That total of $1,550,385,000 is available for the FBI—an increase of $97,045,000 above base—which is the same as the President's request: 224 new FBI agents; $15,000,000 R&D of sophisticated surveillance equipment; and savings and loan initiative.

ORGANIZED CRIME DRUG ENFORCEMENT [OCDE]—$214,361,000

This is a new account created in the 1988 drug bill which all agencies involved in drug law enforcement have transferred moneys (FBI, DEA, U.S. attorneys, U.S. Marshals, Customs, ATF, and Coast Guard).

DEA	$68,366,000
FBI	51,589,000
U.S Marshals	1,014,000

U.S Attorneys	45,788,000
INS	8,000,000
Criminal Division	662,000
Tax Division	1,141
U.S. Customs	14,461,000
U.S. Coast Guard	662,000
IRS	14,413,000
BATF	8,612,000
Total OCDE	$214,361,000

STATE AND LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT GRANTS

A total of $450,000,000—an increase of $300,000,000 over last year. We went along with the Stevens initiative and included language to continue through 1991 the current 75-25 percent Federal-State match.

THE JUDICIARY

For the Judiciary, a total of $1,767,023,000 is provided—an increase of $310,723,000 over fiscal year 1989—for the drug-related accounts of the Judiciary—courts of appeals, district courts, and other judicial services; defender services; fees of jurors and commissioners; and, court security.

Later today Senator BENTSEN will offer an amendment that I am pleased to cosponsor. What it does is direct the President, Attorney General and drug czar to place an emphasis on providing adequate increased resources on drug enforcement programs in rural areas and smaller towns across the country.

Urban areas are not the only localities suffering under the siege of drugs. In my own State of South Carolina, a pilot study of drug use among public school students in 1989 reveals that South Carolinians are more likely to use drugs than the national average.

Mr. President, I submit for the record a chart detailing preliminary results of the South Carolina study as it compares to the 1988 survey of high school students conducted by the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

[In percent]

	South Carolina age 13 to 18, 1989 Public School	United States age 12 to 17, 1988 NIDA survey
Marijuana	9.2	6.4
Cocaine	1.5	1.1
Stimulants	3.5	1.2
Inhalants	3.0	2.0
Opiates	2.2	.9
Hallucinogens	2.1	.8
Tranquilizers	1.8	.2
Sedatives	1.7	.6

COMPETITIVENESS AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. President, drugs, are certainly our No. 1 priority, but we have not lost sight of other national priorities. Last year we enacted the Trade and Competitiveness Act and in this bill we have provided for expansion of trade and competitiveness activities. For example:

We establish the National Trade Data Bank at the Bureau of Census.

We fund the Executive Secretariat and the chapter 18 and 19 binational panels of the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Increases for the antidumping/countervailing duty caseload, and to implement the unfair trade practice provisions of the Trade Act, are provided the International Trade Administration, as well as the full $6,000,000 increase of the U.S. Foreign and Commercial Service.

The support is maintained of the Tailored Clothing Technology Corporation to keep our apparel industry competitive.

The $7,500,000 funding level is maintained for the regional centers for Transfer of Manufacturing Technology; as well as $10,000,000 to initiate the new Advanced Technology Program, and $1,300,000 for the Technology Transfer Program of the National Institute of Standards and Technology.

The $1,000,000 to establish the Joint Legislative/Executive Council on Competition created in the Trade Act.

The full budget of the U.S. Trade Representative plus an additional $1,000,000 for the USTR's additional workload in implementing the Trade Act, the Canada Free Trade Agreement, as well as the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations.

HURRICANE HUGO

Yesterday the Senate approved my amendment adding an additional $1.1 billion for FEMA on the continuing resolution for Hurricane Hugo disaster relief. We're eventually going to have a Hugo assistance bill, but while the damage assessments are being completed and the overall relief programs formulated, we are doing all we can.

In this bill we have increased EDA's title IX assistance for sudden and severe dislocations from $12,454,000 to $40,000,000. This will help the communities rebuild their devastated public facilities such as the sewer treatment plant on Sullivan's Island that was completely eliminated.

We also increased Justice's emergency assistance funds by $5,000,000. This will make $6,000,000 available for the additional overtime and replacement of equipment of the law enforcement agencies impacted by Hugo. Mr. President, in this regard, there is a printing error in our report. The line for emergency assistance in the chart on page 53 shows no amount where the $5,000,000 should be indicated.

The Small Business Administration has indicated to me that there is approximately $1,050,000,000 in the disaster loan fund and that will be sufficient to get started on rebuilding the businesses and homes that fell in Hugo's horrible path. SBA estimates $1,000,000,000 in disaster loans to Hugo. We have also provided for sufficient SBA personnel to process the disaster loans.

Mr. President, those are three of the main themes of the bill. We have not lost track of the many other responsibilities of the agencies and I will take a few minutes to highlight the bill.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

For the Department of Commerce we recommend $3,547,326,000, an increase of $819,764,000 over 1989 which is primarily due to the $1,244,544,000 for the Decennial Census next April which is the same as the House—$57,000,000 below request.

We restored certain entities that were redlined in the President's, budget again. We restored EDA, $194,482,000; NOAA's marine research program, $200,000,000; and the public TV facilities grants, $20,000,000 that the administration annually zeroes out.

Let me hasten to emphasize at this point that the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from South Carolina have disciplined ourselves; there are no EDA earmarkings here at all, and I know that makes me very unpopular with my colleagues. I have gotten letters personally written for the first time up here in 23 years, handwritten, with tears you can see smearing the ink. I am with them and they are justified, and I will work with the Economic Development Administration and the administration on these requests.

Again, there are no earmarks in the bill. We have held fast on that one.

In NOAA we restored $29 million to maintain the weather stations. We also provided $26 million in increases to expand global climate change and the new coastal/ocean initiative.

As indicated earlier, we also funded several of the new initiatives in the trade bill such as the Free Trade Agreement with Canada, antidumping/countervailing duties and unfair trade practices by an increase of $13,723,000 to $181,296,000 for the International Trade Administration.

For the National Institute of Standards and Technology we recommend $175,600,000, to cover most of their increases in addition to the funds for the new Advanced Technology Program and the regional centers

Finally, we provide $2,500,000 to establish a National Endowment for Children's Television.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

While I have already mentioned our efforts in the war on drugs let me say that for the Department of Justice we recommend $6,250,138,000, an increase of $401,754,000 over fiscal year 1989. In addition we have $53,582,000 in offsetting receipts credited the Department for increased fees created in the bill—$30 million for the FBI fingerprint fee, $15 million for the antitrust premerger filing fee, and $8,582,000 for the Immigration and Naturalization Service examination fee. So you can see we worked it over pretty good, trying to milk every dime we could possibly find to stay within our allocation, and at the same time provide the money for law enforcement. The amount recommended maintains existing services for all programs within the Department of Justice.

However, when we add the $1,792,597,000 increase provided in the drug amendment for the Department of Justice we bring the total increase for the Department to $2,247,879,000.

We did not provide funding for Japanese reparation payments for which the House appropriated $50,000,000. However, the committee approved language making these payments an entitlement in fiscal year 1991.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

We recommend a total of $3,095,868,000 for the Department of State, which is $176,109,000 below the requests. The bipartisan budget agreement required an overall $367 million outlay reduction from the requests in international affairs spending. In the 302(b) allocations the committee directed that this bill take $167 million of the reduction and foreign operations the other $200 million. Because the other foreign affairs agencies in the bill are relatively fixed, or in the case of the radio modernization programs, are low outlay programs, the bulk of the reduction was necessarily applied to the Department of State.

For the Department's basic salaries and expenses appropriations we recommend a total $1,773,619,000. This includes: $16,465,000 for the telecommunications network [DOSTIN]; $9 million for the Beltsville Information Center; and $10,365,000 for construction security.

I think we have taken care of Secretary Baker's needs there in exemplary fashion.

For contributions for international organizations the subcommittee recommended $668,011,000, the full amount required for the 1990 assessments. Due to the 302(b) outlay reduction we did not provide the $45,916,000 requested for U.S. arrearages to international organizations due to the Kassebaum amendment and other restrictions on U.S. contributions.

Otherwise we appropriated the full amounts requested by the Department except that we added $1,300,000 to the Great Lakes Fisheries Commission for sea lamprey control; as well as $5,800,000 over the Department's request of the Asia Foundation.

ASIA FOUNDATION

Mr. President, we are completely baffled by the Department's consistently underfunding of the Asia Foundation. Every United States Ambassador to an Asian nation that I have talked to over the last 13 years has praised the Asia Foundation. It does an outstanding job and I think we ought to get in step on these efforts.

Ambassador Mansfield, in Japan, was particularly supportive of the foundation. Last week I received a letter supporting the full $18 million authorized the foundation from his successor, Ambassador Armacost. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMBASSADOR OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, TOKYO,
September 11, 1989.

Hon. ERNEST F. HOLLINGS,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In recent years I have had the opportunity to see firsthand in the field, as well as to judge from a Washington vantage, how a private organization like The Asia Foundation, working quietly off center stage, can effectively support U.S. Government objectives that are shared by our friends in Asia. In Manila, I admired the way in which the Foundation has bolstered the underpinnings of democratic institutions, responding to Asian initiatives. It is impressive to see how many Filipino leaders have been touched in one way or another by Asia Foundation programs. The same is true in most of the developing countries in Alaska.

Here in Japan, the Foundation has been doing an effective job in reaching rising young leaders, especially in the political arena, where a generational change is now in progress. By enhancing understanding about the United States and respect for American views, problem-solving becomes that much less emotional.

I strongly urge that the Congress appropriate the full authorized amount for The Asia Foundation for FY 1990.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL H. ARMACOST.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I will continue.

THE JUDICIARY

For the Judiciary, we recommend $1,613,692,000, an increase of $157,419,000 over fiscal year 1989. In addition we provide $33 million in offsetting receipts credited to the courts of appeals, district courts, and other judicial services for increased fees created in the bill. The Supreme Court and Administrative Office received their full request.

As I said earlier, in the drug amendment an additional $120,323,000 was provided to the drug-related accounts of the Judiciary—courts of appeals, district courts, and other judicial services; defender services; fees of jurors and Commissioners; and, court security. These additional resources will provide these accounts with their requested increases in fiscal year 1990.

RELATED AGENCIES

A total of $2,875,839,000 was approved for the 27 related agencies in this bill. By and large the related agencies are maintained at their base levels. The notable items are:

MarAd: A total of $170,650,000 is recommended, a reduction of $134,680,000 from the requests. The reduction mainly comes in the Ready Reserve Force appropriation where only $107,900,000 of the $239,030,000 is recommended. OMB transferred this account out of the Defense 050 category, and we can't give up anymore from our domestic allocation.

BIB: We recommend a total of $378,500,000, including $183,500,000 for the Israel Relay Station account.

Civil Rights Commission: We have funded the Commission at last year's level of $5,707,000 and continued the restrictions in force.

FCC: Full budget request of $109,831,000 which includes restoration of 40 work years lost to inflation. Continues restrictions on minority ownership, swaps, and cross ownership.

FTC: We recommend the full budget of $69,580,000 plus $10 million more from the new premerger filing fee on Hart-Scott-Rodino filings.

Legal Services Corporation: We have provided LSC an increase of 4.1 percent bringing their total to $321 million. We have basically continued the program as it was last year, with separate funding for State and National support centers, migrants, and so forth.

SEC: The full request of $168,707,000 which will be offset by a change in the filing fee. Our report directs eight additional positions for processing the filings of public utility holding companies.

SBA: A total of $413,188,000. We are basically same as house on the salaries and expenses with some juggling around at request of the Small Business Committee. We provide $78 million for direct loans. We also have technical language to the authorization bill requested by the Small Business Committee.

USIA: A total of $946,050,000 which pretty much tracks the authorization bill. We recommend $160,300,000 for the exchanges; and included $85 million for radio construction, of which $16 million is for TV-Marti. NED is held at current and budgeted level of $15,800,000.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

The general provisions are basically the same as carried previously in the bill except that we made some technical changes to language in the bill with regard to Legal Service Corporation. We also put in a limitation on expenditures for consulting services by the Departments of Commerce, Justice, State, and the Small Business Administration that Senator PRYOR requested.

We also added Senator JOHNSTON's amendment requiring the Secretary of State to initiate negotiations for the development of international agreements to protect endangered and threatened sea turtles. It calls for a ban on imports of shrimp from any nation that: First, fails to adopt a regulatory program for turtle protection which is comparable to that of the United States; and second, has higher incidental catches of sea turtles than U.S. shrimpers.

At the full committee we added two new general provisions. One, that I sponsored on behalf of myself and the distinguished junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], the chairman of the Space Subcommittee of the Commerce Committee, protects the emerging United States-satellite launch industry from unfair Soviet and Chinese competition. The other, by the distinguished senior Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], clarifies the statutory prohibition against trade benefits to countries supporting international terrorism.

Those are the highlights, and I will await making these corrections of printing errors motions plus the original motion for the bill to be considered as original text after I yield to my ranking member, Senator RUDMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I am very pleased to once again join the junior Senator from South Carolina in presenting bipartisan recommendations for fiscal year 1990 appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the judiciary, and related agencies. This is a balanced bill that meets the priorities of the Congress and the administration.

Within the allocation initially provided to the subcommittee we were able to restore many of the programs traditionally supported by the Congress that were proposed for elimination or substantial reduction by the administration. At the same time we were able to fund the Justice Department and the judiciary at levels that would allow them to continue in 1990 at operating 1989 levels.

Both Senator HOLLINGS and I realized that this level of funding would be insufficient, so we proposed a separate drug funding title to provide the President with his full request for the Justice Department and the judiciary in 1990. With very little change, that title was incorporated into the drug funding amendment that passed the Senate as part of the Transportation appropriations bill.

For the Justice Department, the funding provided in this bill and in the drug amendment represents an increase of 36 percent over the 1989 enacted level and 56 percent over the 1988 enacted level. For the Federal judiciary, the increase is 10.5 percent over 1989 and 21 percent over 1988.

This will allow for a number of important Presidential initiatives in the Justice Department, including: $1.4 billion for prison construction and renovation; $215 million for the establishment of organized crime drug enforcement task forces, which will include personnel from throughout the Justice Department and from the Departments of Treasury and Transportation; funding to allow the Drug Enforcement Administration to establish 7 new State and local task forces, bringing the total number to 50 in 1990; and an increase from $160 million in 1989 to $450 million in 1990 for grants to State and local law enforcement agencies to help combat crime on the street; in addition, the committee recommends retaining the current maximum State matching requirement of 25 percent for the next 2 years rather than allowing the match to increase to 50 percent as would occur absent a change in the law.

The subcommittee recommendations support other important priorities for 1990, including: 95 percent of the funds requested for the decennial census; a $6 million increase to fully fund the needs of the United States and Foreign Commercial Service; continuation of the ocean, coastal, and fishery programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, with important enhancements for the global change program and the coastal ocean initiative; $10 million to initiate the advanced technology program of the National Institute of Standards and Technology; a provision to completely fund the civil liberties public education fund beginning in 1991 to provide for the long-delayed payments to Japanese-Americans interred during World War II; funding of $183.5 million to virtually complete the Israel radio relay station of the Board for International Broadcasting and the Voice of America; a modest but important inflationary increase of 4.1 percent for the Legal Services Corporation; and full funding of $168.7 million for the important work of the Securities and Exchange Commission in policing our Nation's securities markets.

Once again, I salute my chairman for the leadership and skill he has shown in preparing this bill. it is a pleasure to work with him and his fine staff.

Senator HOLLINGS and I are open for business; we hope we can complete action on this legislation quickly, and I encourage any Member with an amendment to come to the floor as soon as possible.

Mr. President, let me just say something on a personal note about my colleague from South Carolina. I know that he would much rather be in South Carolina this morning with the President and his constituents looking at the enormous damage and human suffering that has occurred in South Carolina and other States. I deeply appreciate the fact that, recognizing the complexity of this bill, my friend from South Carolina, the chairman of this subcommittee, decided to stay here in Washington to finish this bill by the end of the fiscal year.

I am very delighted that he is here and I thank him for being here this morning because it is important. We have an enormous amount of funding here for the fight against drugs, in NOAA, in the Commerce Department, the judiciary, the FBI, the State Department, and the Senator is an expert in the field. He has been handling it for years and I am delighted he is here this morning, but I know his heart is someplace else.

Mr. President, we have a number of amendments that Senators have advised they were going to bring to the floor and I think a great number of these are going to be accepted. I know it is the interest of both leaders that we finish this bill in good time this morning. I would simply say to my colleagues and their staffs who may be watching in their offices that we would like to keep this moving because it will take very little time to accept most of these amendments and I think there may be rollcalls on possibly two or three. I notice that one Member of the Senate is here this morning, Senator ADAMS, who I believe may have an amendment. Others on this list are known to themselves, so I would certainly hope that there will be prompt action to come to the floor and offer the amendments. I know the distinguished President pro tempore makes that plea rather regularly. I do not expect to meet with any more success than we usually do, but possibly we will get people here on time.

Finally, let me just make an announcement to my colleagues that we had a very intense debate last night, I thought a very good debate, on the whole issue of obscenity in the arts. Senator HELMS moved to instruct. That was defeated. Senator HELMS has advised me this morning that he intends to offer, or ask me to offer on his behalf section 1 of his instruction, which of course is the one which I think most of us late night would have liked to have voted on but could not vote on, given the very broad instruction. It is his intention to either offer that himself or have me offer it on his behalf and that will take a rollcall vote, I am advised.

I will now yield the floor. I notice that the chairman may wish to move to the committee amendments first and then I believe we will be able to handle the first amendment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, today we are considering H.R. 2991, the Commerce, Justice, and State, the judiciary, and related agencies appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990. This measure provides necessary funding for three departments, the judiciary, and 27 related agencies, including the U.S. Information Agency, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the Board for Internal Broadcasting, and the Small Business Administration.

The bill as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations provides $17,384,689,000 for fiscal year 1990. The bill is $1,782,747,000 below the President's request. For the benefit of my colleagues, I note that $1,916,940,000 for anticrime and antidrug abuse activities in the jurisdiction of this subcommittee were provided in the emergency drug funding amendment that we adopted on the Department of Transportation appropriation bill for fiscal year 1990. Enactment of these two measures will assure necessary funding for law enforcement and Federal correctional activities, the conduct of foreign policy, international peacekeeping activities, and the decennial census, as well as longstanding congressional priorities such as: Economic development assistance; small business; legal services; and juvenile justice and delinquency prevention programs. The bill also maintains in full the Nation's weather stations as well as other programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

With respect to the subcommittee 302(b) allocation, the bill as recommended is within both the budget authority and outlay ceilings.

I wish to commend Mr. HOLLINGS, chairman of the subcommittee and Mr. RUDMAN, the ranking member, for their excellent work in accommodating the priorities of the Senate within the difficult constraints of the budget agreement.

I also commend the staff of the subcommittee, Warren Kane, John Shank, Dorothy Seder, Liz Blevins, and Judee Klepec. These professionals have worked tirelessly to get this measure before us today.

The managers have explained in much greater detail the contents of the measure as recommended. The bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee deserves the support of the Senate.

This is the last of the 13 fiscal year 1990 appropriation bills, and I am hopeful that it can be passed expeditiously so that the bill can go to conference and the committee complete our conferences on all bills quickly so that there will be no need for another continuing resolution.

Mr. RUDMAN. Right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendments will be considered and agreed to en bloc with the exceptions enumerated by the manager of the bill, Mr. HOLLINGS.

The committee amendments were agreed to en bloc, except the committee amendments on page 18, lines 4 through 16, and page 41, lines 4 through 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to start with the amending process if the managers have anything further.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, we want you to proceed.

Mr. ADAMS. But I, like the President pro tempore, wish to start early in the morning and hope that the amendments will be agreed to.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 18, LINES 4 THROUGH 16

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on page 18, lines 4 through 16.

AMENDMENT NO. 893

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate that the Secretary of State should take immediate steps to secure an international moratorium on the use of driftnets on the high seas)

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator offer his amendment to the pending committee amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He does?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does he wish the pending committee amendment set aside temporarily?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the pending committee amendment be set aside. We have to do that before we get to the Japanese internment, so the Senator from Washington can submit the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is set aside.

The Senator sent his amendment to the desk.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I thank the chairman. I will send the amendment to the desk and ask that the pending amendment be set aside so I may offer the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has sent an amendment to the desk that was incorrectly drafted, and for that reason it would be out of order.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment that I have sent to the desk be modified in the form that it now appears at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is so modified.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS], for himself, Mr. GORTON, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. WILSON, Mr. KERRY, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. BOND, proposes an amendment numbered 893.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place insert:

the marine life inhabiting the world's oceans is one of our plant's most important resources;

there has been a major increase in the last several years in the use of long plastic driftnets as a fishery technique;

finding that the use of these driftnets is a wasteful, indiscriminate, and destructive fishing technique that results in the entanglement and death of enormous numbers of target and nontarget fish, marine mammals, seabirds, and other living marine resources, Congress passed and the President signed into law the Driftnet Impact Monitoring, Assessment, and Control Act of 1987.

pursuant to that law, the United States has just, after two years of negotiations, entered into bilateral agreements with Japan, Korea, and Taiwan to allow some monitoring and control of driftnet fleets in the North Pacific;

in that same two year period, use of the driftnet fishery technique has spread to the South Pacific Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea;

the continued use of this fishing technique could decimate entire regional fisheries, and also results in the interception of North American salmon in violation of accepted principles of international law;

the continued use of driftnets presents a worldwide ecological crisis of such complexity and magnitude that cannot be met by a continued series of bilateral monitoring agreements;

this worldwide crisis must be addressed through a multinational effort: Now, therefore it is the sense of the Senate that:

The Secretary of State is encouraged to take immediate steps to secure an international multilateral ban on the use of driftnets (as defined in Driftnet Impact Monitoring, Assessment, and Control Act of 1987 (16 U.S.C. 1822 note) on the high seas. In this effort the Secretary is encouraged to bring before the United Nations a resolution calling for a worldwide moratorium on the use of driftnets on the high seas until such time as the adverse impacts of driftnet fishing can be prevented and the conservation of the world's living resources can be ensured.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be accepted by the managers on both sides and the rest of my colleagues. It is one that is of great importance to all of us that border on the Pacific Ocean. I think it will be of great importance in later years to those who border on all the oceans of the world.

Mr. President, this amendment is a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate on the worldwide crisis posed by drift net fishing on the high seas.

It encourages the Secretary of State to take immediate steps to secure an international moratorium on the use of driftnets on the high seas. In this effort the Secretary is encouraged to bring before the United Nations a resolution calling for a worldwide moratorium on the use of driftnets on the high seas until such time as the adverse impacts of driftnet fishing can be prevented and the conservation of the world's living resources can be ensured.

This resolution is consistent with a letter sent by members of the National Ocean Policy Study Committee of the Senate Commerce Committee to our Ambassador to the United Nations, Thomas R. Pickering. As an at-large ex-officio member of NOPS, I signed that letter, and would like to express my gratitude for the leadership shown by my colleagues from the Northwest, Senators STEVENS, GORTON, and HATFIELD, in putting that letter together.

And they have joined also with me in this resolution which I have offered on behalf of myself, Senators GORTON, STEVENS, PACKWOOD, and WILSON.

This resolution gives the full Senate an opportunity to do what NOPS has already done—and I think that is terribly important—encourage the State Department to work toward a worldwide ban on drift nets through a U.N. resolution.

It is likely that this concept will soon be officially codified into law. The House has already inserted a similar provision, sponsored by my good friend from Washington Congresswoman UNSOELD, into their version of the Magnuson Act reauthorization. I fully expect the Senate Commerce Committee and my good friend and long-time colleague, Chairman HOLLINGS of the Commerce Committee, to do the same thing over here.

The Magnuson Act reauthorization, however, may take some time to complete. In the meantime I believe it is important to have the Senate on record on this issue.

I do not believe I have to go into great detail for my colleagues about the horrors of driftnet fishing. Driftnet fishing is not about harvesting a portion of a renewable resource; it is wanton massacre. Uncontrolled driftnet fishing will drain the world's oceans of fish, mammals, and seabirds in less than a generation. If we are to survive on this planet we must summon the strength to ban destructive technologies that injure our living planet beyond repair.

This Congress has been aware of this problem for a long time. In 1987 we passed the Driftnet Impact Monitoring, Assessment, and Control Act, and directed a reluctant administration to enter into agreements with the driftnetting nations of Japan, Korea, and Taiwan.

These agreements, which are of varying quality—and I stress varying quality—are now in place for the next year or so. As one who has followed this issue closely, it is clear that to me that pursuing bilateral piecemeal agreements will not adequately resolve this crisis. Even in the last year, driftnetting has spread to the Mediterranean Sea. If we take too long, our planet's fisheries resources will be decimated.

Instead, we must immediately seek a multilateral solution of worldwide scope to this issue, and the United Nations is the perfect forum for that effort. I urge all my fellow Senators to join me in adopting this resolution, and sending a message to the world that the United States means business on banning driftnets.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, we are checking one important concern that we have, but momentarily we are prepared to accept the amendment if we can clear up that concern.

What the distinguished Senator from Washington does is provide for a moratorium that the Secretary is encouraged to support the U.N. resolution calling for a worldwide moratorium. The amendment does not affect present law and it goes right to the heart of something that both sides of the aisle have been concerned about for the last several years.

Our distinguished ranking colleague, Senator HATFIELD, had hearings last month out on the west coast on this thing. A lot of the pollution you just do not immediately see, but if you can see these nets in the sea, with the marine mammals and sea birds ensnarled, your heart just goes out and you know that is wrong, wrong, wrong and we have got to get some kind of international approach to it.

The amendment of the Senator from Washington goes I think right to the heart of the present law to encourage even further action by the administration and the Secretary of State.

I have one check to make sure that we can accept it. If there is nothing further, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Washington be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I ask unanimous consent now the committee amendment be temporarily set aside so we can proceed with Senator HELMS' and Senator FOWLER's arrangement with respect to the initiative they had on the floor last evening again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the committee amendment will be temporarily set aside.

The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, momentarily I shall send an amendment to the desk which addresses the central issue that we debated last night. This is a modified form but it is limited to specific language which I think all Senators surely must agree to and agree with.

AMENDMENT NO. 894

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 894.

It is the sense of the Senate that the conferees on H.R. 2788 should agree to modify amendment numbered (7) to H.R. 2788 to read as follows:

"None of the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to this Act may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce indecent or obscene materials, including but not limited to depictions of sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts.".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this amendment if adopted and enacted with the underlying legislation will absolutely forbid by law any further instance of Mapplethorpe or Serrano or any other polluted mind that would claim that the taxpayers are obliged to subsidize such garbage. This was the central point of the amendment which we discussed at length last night. The second and third parties of the amendment I put in at the suggestion of distinguished constitutional lawyers who persuaded me that both were supported by actions and rulings by the U.S. Supreme Court.

But the important thing of this point—since most Senators seemed agreeable to it last night—is to make sure that $30,000 subsidies don't go to exhibitions like Mapplethorpe's, or to honor artists like Mr. Serrano with $15,000 subsidized by the taxpayers by forbidding such NEA expenditures from now on. The NEA needs to be put on notice that the Congress of the United States will not tolerate this kind of activity.

In the interest of time, there is no point going over the arguments again. If anybody wants to hear the arguments, they can read it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. RUDMAN. I want to thank the Senator from North Carolina for offering the amendment this morning. It was the central issue that was debated last night. Many of us were uncomfortable voting against the Senator's other amendment. We found two parts of its we could not support.

My understanding is the Senator's amendment is about to be subjected to a second-degree amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, which I will join in as well. I can support either one.

The difference will be that the word "indecent" as well as "obscene" appears in the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. The Senator from Georgia will offer an amendment that strikes the word "indecent" because many feel that word is not susceptible of accurate interpretation under a U.S. Supreme Court case called Miller. I disagree with that yet I can support either of these amendments.

I believe what we will then have is a vote first at the time appointed on the Fowler amendment, which I believe will be offered by the Senator from Georgia. I thank, again, the Senator from North Carolina for clearing the air this morning. Because his basic purpose is not disagreed with by the overwhelming number of people in this body.

AMENDMENT NO. 895 TO AMENDMENT NO. 894

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER], for himself, Mr. RUDMAN, and Mr. PRYOR, proposes an amendment numbered 895 to amendment No. 894.

Strike all after the first word of the amendment and insert the following:

is the sense of the Senate that the conferees on H.R. 2788 should agree to an amendment in lieu of that in amendment numbered (7) to H.R. 2788 as follows:

"None of the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to this Act may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce obscene materials, including but not limited to obscene depiction of sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sexual intercourse."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, we did have a long and thorough debate last evening, on this extraordinarily difficult subject. As I said to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] last night, those of us in this body, inadequately prepared for the crafting of legislative language in this extraordinarily difficult area of public policy, do know in our hearts that there is such a thing as obscenity.

We do know in our hearts that there are community standards and values which we all share and which we must uphold as public policymakers and as Americans. In the statute of the United States, as interpreted in the Miller case, there are criteria outlined as to those standards which, under the laws of the United States, are obscene.

Those of us who could not support the extra language in the original Helms amendment ought to thank the Senator from North Carolina for dropping that language, not because he does not feel so strongly about it, but because there were serious questions raised as to unintended consequences. I want to thank the Senator from North Carolina as a legislator for dropping that language. It may appear at a later date, I understand that, when it can be clarified and the consequences determined. But the amendment that he offers this morning is straightforward.

The only question that I have causing this amendment is that I believe by making sure the obscenity standard applies not only to the exclusive clause, but the inclusive clause; that the language I offer prohibiting public moneys to be used for the promotion, dissemination or production of obscene materials strengthens the statute, if adopted. It expresses the outrage of this Senate that public funds would ever be used to promote or disseminate materials determined to be obscene. I thank my colleague, the Senator from New Hampshire, for joining me on this. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. HELMS is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I shall be brief. Just for the record, what we are doing is taking out any reference to indecent depictions. There is a good faith disagreement about that. The Federal Communications Commission is authorized by the U.S. Supreme Court to enforce standards against certain broadcasts which are considered improper.

There is already justification by the U.S. Supreme Court for the enforcement of standards prohibiting indecent material. So what Senators will be voting on is whether they want to remove the word "indecent" and thereby give a loophole to staff people who want to continue to abuse the trust the public has placed in them. I hope the Federal "arts" agencies will zealously guard against using the taxpayers' pocketbook for indecent "art."

My underlying amendment includes a limitation on indecent art as well as obscene art. I included the word "indecent" from the very beginning because the Court has held that the Government may constitutionally regulate indecent material.

Just for the record, Mr. President, there are two cases on this. One is the Sable Communications versus FCC decided this year, 1989, which upheld the regulation of Dial-A-Porn. The second case is FCC v. Pacifico (438 U.S. 726), which was decided back in 1977 regarding indecent broadcast material.

The question occurs to me, Mr. President, that if the FCC can regulate indecent material, in a constitutional manner as upheld by the Court, why cannot this Congress say that the same thing applies to the NEA?

Mr. President, that is all I really need to say. The effect of the second-degree amendment will be to take the prohibition against Federal funding for indecent materials out of my amendment and that will create a giant loophole. If Senators want to permit funding of "indecent" (art), they vote for the second-degree amendment. If they want to leave the word "indecent" in and prohibit such so-called art, they need to vote against the second-degree amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER]. Otherwise, the amendments are virtually identical.

The fundamental difference will be whether or not Senators think the Congress should restrict indecent art in terms of receiving Federal funds appropriated via the National Endowment for the Arts. If you want indecent art funded, vote for the Fowler amendment. If you want to say no way, to such funding, then vote no on the Fowler amendment and then vote aye on the Helms amendment. I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished President. Mr. President, I have a comment in mind. I am also awaiting the attendance of my senior Senator who was down in South Carolina with the President. Air Force One landed at 10:25. I am confident he should be here momentarily. Maybe I should make the request to terminate debate and we set a time certain like 11:15 to vote. So both sides are on notice, I really want to wait on Senator THURMOND.

But pending that, let me say this. It was very interesting last evening to watch the dog chase its tail. First, the Supreme Court said, look, religious displays by a public body, like a nativity scene or a creche, that promote or endorse religion, are unconstitutional. Now, we are being told that when a public body; namely, the Congress, restricts funding for religious art, then the restriction on the funding itself is unconstitutional. So you are either in violation of the establishment clause or the freedom of speech clause. That cannot be the case, and is not the case. Clearly, Congress has the power, the right and the duty to regulate any taxpayer dollar spent on art or anything else.

I think the Senator from North Carolina is on target. Don't give this red herring about censorship, if this is censorship, then every vote cast in this body is a form of censorship.

When I vote for the B-1 bomber, I censor the lack of defense and, therefore, I vote for an additional weapon. Or, if I vote against the B-2, I censor the B-2 itself; I say it is not needed. If I vote for aid to the Contras, then I censor the lack of our initiative and policy in Central America. If I vote against it, I censor the policy itself and say we should not be involved. Every time you and I stand to vote yes or no, the vote is one of censorship.

In that vein, we really have to go right to what the Senator from North Carolina has provided. I was shocked when I saw that public funds were going for that filth, and I want to make sure that my name is not attached to that kind of nonsense. Do not give me the ethereal nonsense about censorship. We are required as a public servant in the legislative branch to provide or not to provide, to approve or to disapprove. When they are talking, they can go merrily along their way and have all the obscene art they want. Just do not ask this Senator to vote for the taxpayer to finance that smut and cry censorship when I refuse.

I understand the point my colleague from Georgia has made, and I commend my ranking member, Senator RUDMAN, for his eloquent statement about his trial experience in this area. So I will support Senator FOWLER and then, of course, one way or the other, I will support Senator HELMS. I commend them both for their understanding and cooperation this morning. Mr. President, to cut it short, I think the other Senator from Washington would like to say a word. Let me yield at this time.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the distinguished manager.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington, [Mr. GORTON] is recognized.

Mr. GORTON. I wish to speak not on this amendment but on the amendment which has been set aside by my distinguished colleague from the State of Washington.

Do I understand correctly that the managers of the bill are prepared to accept that amendment at the end of these remarks?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Then I ask—the President pro tempore knows better than any of us—can we momentarily ask unanimous consent to set aside these two amendments to return to the amendment of the Senator from Washington so we can accept it?

AMENDMENT NO. 893

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the distinguished junior Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague, Senator ADAMS, in support of a resolution which calls on the Secretary of State to seek an immediate ban on the use of driftnets on the high seas.

I look forward to the day on which the piracy of salmon and the slaughter of innocent birds and marine mammals by these curtains of death comes to a halt. I am encouraged that this issue has begun to receive the high visibility it so rightly deserves. The country is waking up to the damage and destruction caused to our ocean ecosystems by the indiscriminate use of driftnets.

This summer, the United States successfully completed bilateral agreements with Japan, Taiwan, and Korea to monitor and collect data on driftnet fisheries in the North Pacific. This was an important first step because it will provide needed scientific data on the fisheries and will give the United States better means to enforce our laws against the illegal taking of salmon. But, our ultimate goal must not be simply to monitor driftnets; it must be to rid the world of their use.

Two days ago, I joined with Senator STEVENS and others in writing a letter to our Ambassador to the United Nations, Thomas Pickering, asking him to help bring before the United Nations a resolution seeking a moratorium on the use of driftnets on the high seas beyond the Exclusive Economic Zone of any nation.

Next month, I intend to work with my colleagues on the Commerce Committee—during the reauthorization of the Magnuson Act—to include a provision which will lead to the banning of driftnets on the high seas.

Mr. President, driftnet fishing must be stopped. The preservation of the world's fisheries and marine resources is at stake. I intend to work toward the goal of banning driftnets at every available opportunity. I am delighted to join my colleague in taking this opportunity to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Washington [Mr. GORTON] for an excellent statement. I ask unanimous consent that Senator CRANSTON's name be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. I have nothing further in the way of debate, Mr. President.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the pending amendment calling on the Secretary of State to take immediate steps to secure an international moratorium on the use of driftnets on the high seas until such time as the adverse impacts of driftnet fishing can be mitigated and conservation of our marine resources ensured.

This amendment is critical to protect our vast ocean resources. Currently we are witnessing a fundamental pirating of our marine resources across the global seas. Earlier this week a number of my colleagues and I sent a letter to Ambassador Thomas Pickering requesting that he present to the United Nations a resolution calling for a worldwide moratorium in the use of driftnets, and I think that this amendment if passed will seek to strengthen that request.

Mr. President, the international fishing community has not been responsible in harvesting the world's valuable fishing resource. In fact the practice of driftnetting is both wasteful and destructive, and could ultimately lead to a depletion of fish stocks for future generations.

The facts are alarming. During the fishing season 30,000 miles of nets are set out each night—enough to go around the world 1½ times, and well over 1 million miles a year. Not only are tens of thousands of marine mammals and hundreds of thousands of sea birds killed each year trapped in driftnets, but it is thought to be the number one killer of northern fur seal in the North Pacific. Furthermore, of the fish caught for harvest in these nets, 30 to 50 percent of the catch is estimated to be lost when fish ensnared in the net drop out and die before they are retrieved by the fishermen. Moreover, one-third of the fish that is brought aboard vessels does not even have any commercial value.

One of the most egregious aspects of driftnetting and its consequences on our marine environment is ghost fishing. Ghost fishing occurs when sections of driftnets lost or discarded float around the ocean indiscriminately killing anything in its path. These nets that can take decades to centuries to break down, float around the seas, entrapping marine mammals, sea birds, and fish. The nets then fall to the ocean floor from the weight of its prey, only upon decay of the animal to float back to the surface to resume its destructive annihilation.

Driftnetting is the consequence of serious greed displayed by the South Koreans, Taiwanese, and Japanese which far outweighs any conservation ethic. Fishermen from these nations are taking short term advantage of the bounty of the sea and must be stopped.

I recognize that under the Driftnet Impact Monitoring, Assessment and Control Act, a law that we passed 2 years ago, negotiations with these nations are occurring that have resulted in some bilateral agreements on fishing in the North Pacific. Although I appreciate the fact that discussions and agreements have taken place, they frankly do not go far enough.

Furthermore, discussions in the South Pacific have proven wholly inadequate. In the South Pacific for example the supposed concessions of the Japanese to cut back on their fleet by two-thirds represents nothing more than a shell game in these phantom reductions negotiations. They are based on unreal levels of fishing reductions due to the tremendous increase of driftnet fleets in the past year. In 1987 the Japanese had 20 driftnet vessels in the South Pacific. Today that number has increased to 60. A two-thirds reduction merely brings it back to its still destructive 1987 level.

Mr. President, I do want to commend the Government of New Zealand and other South Pacific nations for their hard line against driftnetting. New Zealand has banned entry of any driftnet vessels into its port and I believe the United States Government should work cooperatively with our friends in the South Pacific to achieve an international moratorium on driftnet fishing.

Lastly, on the domestic front, I want to note that the Commerce Committee is currently rewriting the Magnuson Act and I plan to add a provision which will ban the use of any drift nets longer then the 1.5 miles in U.S. waters.

I want to commend the Senator from Washington for offering this excellent amendment, and I urge its immediate adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS].

The amendment (No. 893) was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs——

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

AMENDMENT NO. 895 TO AMENDMENT NO. 894

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield for a question?

Mr. RUDMAN. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. METZENBAUM. As I read the amendment it provides that:

> None of the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to this Act may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce obscene materials, including but not limited to obscene depiction of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sexual intercourse.

Is the Senator from Ohio correct in his understanding of the reading of that sentence that the word "obscene," which is used immediately prior to the word "depiction"—is meant to be an adjective which also refers to the depiction of obscene sado-masochism, the depiction of obscene homo-eroticism, the obscene depiction of the sexual exploitation of children, and the obscene depiction of individuals engaged in sexual intercourse; that the obscenity reference is to be applicable to each of the phrases?

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio I think describes it correctly. The author, Senator FOWLER, is on the floor, if he wishes to respond. I would simply say it is a well-structured grammatical sentence, and the words "obscene depiction of" obviously apply to each and every activity following those three words.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I am not questioning the draftsmanship of the author. Rather I want to be certain that there could be no misinterpretation as to what is intended. It is my understanding that the author's intent is to have the obscene depiction reference applicable to each of the groups: described in the amendment.

Is the Senator from Ohio correct in his interpretation?

Mr. FOWLER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HELMS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I yielded the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio yields the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I was going to say to my friend, the Senator from Ohio, that it occurred to me, and the thought may have occurred to him, as it did to me, that the word "obscene" may be somewhat redundant. How can you engage in sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in you-know-what without its being obscene? It is a given.

But I thank the Senator for getting the clarification for the RECORD.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I would like to advise my colleague from North Carolina, and certainly I am sure he would agree, that all depiction of individuals engaged in intercourse—a subject of art going back 2,000, maybe 5,000 years, is not all obscene. The only limitation about which we are speaking is the obscene depiction of individuals about engaged in sexual intercourse because, to the best of my knowledge, the mere portrayal of individuals engaged in intercourse has been a subject of some of the greatest artists of the world, and certainly not all of it would be considered obscene.

Mr. HELMS. I will tell you what is obscene about it—is to require the taxpayers to subsidize it. That is what is obscene about it. That is the whole issue of what we are talking about today.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I have to say to my colleague from North Carolina that is not the issue. Certainly the Senator from North Carolina would not be standing on the floor saying that something that Michelangelo did, something that was done 2,000 years ago, and is portrayed in some of the finest art museums of this country is obscene just because it portrays sexual relations between two human beings.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS].

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I think we ought to move to a vote. But what is obscene is the whole point that I have made from the very beginning; that is, the taxpayers ought not to be required to furnish the money. That has been my point from the beginning.

I do not know if Michelangelo received any Federal funds for what he did.

[Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The galleries will please be in order.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, like many other Senators, I have had the misfortune of examining some of the so-called works of art produced by the self-proclaimed artists, Andres Serrano and Robert Mapplethorpe. And like most other Senators, I found these works repulsive, vulgar, and nothing more than gutter trash.

THE FIRST AMENDMENT STRAW-MAN

During the course of the debate, I have heard several Senators echo this observation, but then argue against placing any restrictions whatsoever on the ability of the National Endowment for the Arts to dispense tax dollars to those who produce obscene material. If my understanding is correct, these Senators fear that the Senate would be acting as a censor—and that we would somehow be doing violence to the first amendment.

Well, I have read the first amendment, and nowhere in the text of the first amendment does it mention Federal financing. The first amendment does not entitle artists—or anyone for that matter—to use tax dollars to finance the exercise of their free speech rights. The Supreme Court made this point abundantly clear in its 1983 unanimous decision, Regan versus Taxation With Representation.

So the first amendment agrument that has been raised by some Senators is—in my view, at least—a straw-man. It misses the point completely. So-called artists can produce as much obscene material as they want. No one will stop them. And no one is trying to infringe their rights to express themselves as artists.

THE REAL ISSUE: TAXPAYER FINANCING

But the real question here is whether the hard-working taxpayers of this country should be forced to finance works of art that they consider not only distasteful but deeply, deeply offensive. Should the taxpayers, for example, be forced to finance a picture that portrays Jesus Christ submerged in a bottle of the artist's urine? Should the taxpayers be forced to finance child pornography?

In my view, the answers to these questions are very simple, and they have more to do with common sense than with the first amendment or with artistic freedom.

THE QUESTION OF STANDARDS

Now, I have also heard some Senators argue that Congress should not be in the business of setting artistic standards, that we should not try to determine what art is acceptable and what art is unacceptable for purposes of receiving Federal funding. I respect this point of view. And I can certainly understand the difficulties involved when making judgments of this nature.

But should Congress have no role in this area? Should Congress simply give artists absolute freedom to use tax dollars as they wish—without regard to how offensive their works may be to millions and millions of Americans? And more importantly, does Congress have no obligation to monitor how federally appropriated funds are spent?

Of course, the answer to these questions is a resounding "No." Congress has the right, if not the obligation, to ensure that Federal funds are spent properly and for their designated purpose. It has a right—in other words—to set some standards with respect to the use of our tax dollars.

The standards outlined in the Helms amendment are not sweeping. The funding restrictions are not overbroad. They simply prohibit the use of Federal funds to finance the production and distribution of indecent and obscene materials. I repeat: Indecent and obscene materials—nothing more and nothing less.

CONCLUSION

So I commend Senator HELMS for his efforts in this area and for offering his amendment. I suspect that the overwhelming majority of Americans will thank him for protecting their tax dollars from those pornographers who like to pass themselves off as legitimate members of the artistic community.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, last night I voted—along with 61 of my colleagues—to table Senator HELMS' amendment. The material which he sought to reach by this amendment has been most carefully and accurately described by my fine and conscientious friend Senator HELMS—and he is absolutely correct.

To display a picture of a crucifix immersed in urine entitled "Piss Christ" and a series of homoerotic photos, one of which disclosed a whip sticking out of a leering man's anus, is grossly repugnant, patently offensive, and thoroughly obscene.

If my friend would have placed the modified amendment which is offered today before the Senate last night, I would have spoken in favor of it and would have voted in favor of it with great energy and sincerity.

Senator HELMS has responded sensitively to the debate of last night and has now placed before the Senate an amendment which has excluded the overly broad language which was so troublesome to me and to a majority of my colleagues in the Senate.

I have long promoted Government support of the arts—having sponsored creation of the Wyoming Council of the Arts when I was a member of the Wyoming Legislature. And, I come from the "Athens of the West"—Cody, WY!

I have served as a board member of the renowned Buffalo Bill Historical Center and the famous Grand Teton Music Festival. My dear wife, Ann has also done so much in support of the arts at the University of Wyoming and here in this city.

However, I will not support the use of taxpayers' money to display the Mapplethorpe exhibit or the Serrano exhibit. These folks can display that stuff anywhere they want to—in any forum they wish—as long as their patrons and fans want to pay for it. I know of no reason whatever why taxpayers should have to pay for such exhibits.

And so Mr. President, I rise in support of Senator HELMS' amendment as modified which would prohibit the use of funds appropriated to the National Endowment for the Arts—"to promote, disseminate, or produce obscene materials, including but not limited to depictions of sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts." That language now covers the issue quite acceptably.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I believe the distinguished Senator has yielded. The body is prepared to vote. I would appreciate the Chair putting the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the second degree offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER].

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] and the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 65, nays 31, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 218 Leg.]

AMENDMENT NO. 894

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now occurs on the underlying amendment, as amended, and the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS].

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair. There is no point putting the Senate through a second vote on the same question, so I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays be vitiated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request, that the yeas and nays be vitiated?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, as amended.

The amendment (No. 894), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT BEGINNING ON PAGE 18, LINE 4

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question occurs on the committee amendment on page 18, line 4.

The Senator from Florida is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 896

(Purpose: To continue the provision permitting immigration of certain adopted children)

AMENDMENT NO. 897

(Purpose: To provide appropriations for the immigration emergency fund authorized by section 404(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act)

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I send to the desk two amendments.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment, we have to move to set aside the committee amendment in order to consider the next amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we set aside the committee amendment for purposes of considering the two amendments which I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will yield for 30 seconds, while we have a number of Senators here, I know people are anxious to leave today, and Senator HOLLINGS and I have things lined up here.

So if those Senators who have amendments that they know could be accepted would be on the floor, we could do them very rapidly. And we could have maybe no more than two other rollcall votes and have people out of here in good time to make their connections if we could get that cooperation.

I thank the Senator from Florida for yielding.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, that is exactly the pattern which I hope will be followed with the two amendments which I have offered en bloc, both of which, I understand, have been accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendments en bloc? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will report the amendments.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] proposes amendments numbered 896 and 897.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 896

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

ADOPTION OF FOREIGN BORN ORPHANS

SEC. . (a) IN GENERAL.—Section 101(b)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(b)(2)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", except that, for purposes of paragraph (1)(F) (other than the second proviso therein) in the case of an illegitimate child described in paragraph (1)(D) (and not described in paragraph (1)(C)), the term 'parent' does not include the natural father of the child if the father has disappeared or abandoned or deserted the child or if the father has in writing irrevocably released the child for emigration and adoption"

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1989, upon the expiration of the similar amendment made by section 210(a) of the Department of Justice Appropriations Act, 1989 (title II of Public Law 100-459, 102 Stat. 2203).

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

IMMIGRATION EMERGENCY FUND

For necessary expenses of the immigration emergency fund as authorized by section 404(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, $35,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, these are two amendments which I have offered to be considered en bloc. The first relates to the definition of "orphan" for the purposes of the Immigration Act. This language is the same language which has been included in the legal immigration bill which passed the Senate. This language will facilitate the adoption by U.S. couples of orphans in foreign countries.

The second amendment provides funding for a contingency program which the Senate and the House passed several years ago and which is to be available in the event of an emergency relative to refugees. It is legislation that has already been passed by the Congress and is in the law. This will provide funding. We have a CBO statement to the effect that there would be no expenditure from this fund during fiscal year 1990.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the problem this amendment addresses was created by a 1987 memorandum by the General Counsel of INS interpreting a provision of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 [IRCA]. The effect of the memo was to apply a provision in IRCA clarifying the definition of an "illegitimate" child to the definition of "orphan."

This provision was not intended to affect the definition of "orphan." It was intended to extend the rights enjoyed by American mothers of illegitimate children born overseas to American fathers in similar circumstances. The mothers could bring their illegitimate children into the country; fathers could not. The IRCA provision gave American fathers of illegitimate children the right to bring their children to America.

INS expanded this articulation of the rights of American fathers to include foreign fathers. The problem regarding orphans arose since orphan eligibility for adoption purposes was based on one parent only—the mother. Even if a father joined a mother to relinquish their illegitimate child for adoption, an illegitimate child with two parents could no longer be considered an orphan for immigration purposes due to the INS interpretation.

Mr. President, this is a noncontroversial amendment that will permit loving parents in the United States to adopt foreign born orphans until a permanent change in the authorizing statute is signed into law.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the amendment to appropriate section 113 of the Immigration Reform and Control Act [IRCA].

Section 113 is a provision which Congress designed for "immigration emergencies." Section 113 authorizes the Attorney General to release up to $35 million for the purposes of reimbursement to the State and localities in providing assistance for immigration emergencies.

The recent flood of Nicaraguans into this country has caused a severe drain on Florida's economy.

For example, in fiscal year 1988, Jackson Memorial Hospital wrote off $5.9 in health care costs for illegal aliens—$3.4 million was attributed to Nicaraguans. Another $1.5 has been written off for Nicaraguans during fiscal year 1989.

The impact on the education system is especially alarming; 17,000 Nicaraguan students are presently enrolled in the Dade County public schools. Nicaraguan students are enrolling at the rate of 418 per month; 51 percent of these are illegal. The estimated cost to accommodate Nicaraguan students arriving during 1987-88 and 1988-89 is nearly $15 million. Estimated long-range costs hit $104 million. This is the equivalent of two new teachers per day and one new school per month just for the Nicaraguan children.

The Federal Government's failure to reimburse Florida for costs incurred by this crisis is outrageous.

The States take no part in establishing the policy that contols or causes illegal immigration. The Federal Government, therefore, has the responsibility to reimburse the States 100 percent for the consequences of failed Federal immigration policy.

Appropriating section 113 of IRCA should be the first step toward acknowledging this Federal responsibiity. It will then be in the hands of the Attorney General to use his discretion to finally reimburse Florida for the millions of dollars it has spent for this failed Federal policy.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, State governments do not have a Coast Guard. Local governments do not have a border patrol. Nor do they have a role in determining who should or should not enter this country.

The fact is that States and local governments do not have a formal role in forming Federal immigration policy. Yet they are forced to deal with the very human consequences of the failure of these policies.

Mr. President, immigration control is a Federal responsibility. Consequently, it is my belief that any costs associated with a failure to control U.S. borders should be borne by the Federal Government.

However, a handful of State and local governments in this country have historically been forced to shoulder these responsibilities with minimal assistance from the Federal Government.

This amendment addresses one aspect of the Federal Government's responsibility in this area—its ability to assist States and local governments in an immigration emergency.

It would appropriate $35 million to the Immigration Emergency Fund authorized at that level in section 113 of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 [IRCA].

I ask unanimous consent that the text of section 113 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

SEC. 113. IMMIGRATION EMERGENCY FUND.

Section 404 (8 U.S.C. 1101 note) is amended by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 404." and by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b) There are authorized to be appropriated to an immigration emergency fund, to be established in the Treasury, $35,000,000, to be used to provide for an increase in border patrol or other enforcement activities of the Service and for reimbursement of State and localities in providing assistance as requested by the Attorney General in meeting an immigration emergency, except that no amounts may be withdrawn from such fund with respect to an emergency unless the President has determined that the immigration emergency exists and has certified such fact to the Judiciary Committees of the House of Representatives and of the Senate.".

The Congressional Budget Office [CBO] estimates that there will be no outlays for this program in fiscal year 1990 and, therefore, no budgetary impact.

I ask unanimous consent that a CBO memo to my staff containing outlay estimates for this fund be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the memo was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

September 28, 1989.

MEMORANDUM

To: Bob Rogan, Sen. Bob Graham's Office.

From: Michael Sieverts, MIS, Congressional Budget Office.

Subject: Immigration Emergency Fund Amendment.

The table below shows the estimated budget effect of the proposed amendment for funding the Immigration Emergency Fund.

ESTIMATED COST OF EMERGENCY FUND AMENDMENT

[By fiscal year, in millions of dollars]

	1990	1991	1992	1993
Budget authority	35
Estimated outlays		21	14

This estimate is based on information provided by the Department of Justice and is consistent with CBO estimates of spending from the State Department's refugee and immigration emergency fund.

Since the Commerce, State, Justice Appropriations Subcommittee estimates that it is some $400 million under its 302(b) ceiling for budget authority [BA], it is my understanding that it is not necessary to offset this amendment. This fund was designed to give the Government the financial capability to respond to a domestic immigration crisis.

It is essentially a contingency fund to be used in the event of an immigration emergency—such as a mass influx of undocumented aliens. It gives the Federal Government the ability to respond immediately and to reimburse States and communities for their expenditures in responding to the emergency.

Mr. President, I view this situation as analogous to the Federal Emergency Management Agency [FEMA]. This Federal agency receives regular appropriations and is ready to respond in the event of a hurricane, tornado, or other similar disaster.

In the case of the recent onslaught of Hurricane Hugo in the distinguished manager's State, FEMA responded immediately with assistance. If we are fortunate enough to have no such emergencies for a significant amount of time, I doubt Congress would refuse to continue appropriations for FEMA. Why?

Because we know that these disasters will unfortunately happen again, and because the Federal Government has an obligation to be ready to respond with assistance. Some would say that a hurricane and an immigration emergency are like apples and oranges. "We know a hurricane or tornado will happen, but an immigration emergency is highly unlikely," they might say.

I respectfully disagree and suggest that we should be prepared for such an emergency, regardless of the odds of it occurring. A glance at recent history offers convincing evidence which supports the need for an emergency fund.

During a 5-month period in 1980, 135,000 Cubans and Haitians arrived by boat on the shores of Florida. Since June 1988, thousands of Central Americans have crossed the border in Texas on their way to cities such as Los Angeles, Miami, Chicago, New York, Newark, and Washington, DC.

Jackson Memorial Hospital in Miami provided services to 7,000 Nicaraguans in 1988 at a cost to Dade County of $5 million. The city of Miami spent $200,000 housing Nicaraguans in the municipal stadium. The county estimates that it will spend more than $1 million on social services and law enforcement for this population in 1989. In Dade County public schools, over 6,000 Nicaraguan-born students registered for classes between July 1988 and May 1989.

Mr. President, the Immigration and Naturalization Service estimated in January that as many as 100,000 undocumented Nicaraguans will enter the U.S. this year. Recent decisions regarding the demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance could make this prediction a reality. In fact, some leaders of the Contra forces have already applied for political asylum in the United States.

Mr. President, I am not an alarmist. I believe I am a realist.

My State and others such as Arizona, Texas, and California have historically borne the brunt of failed Federal immigration policy and understand the economic and social consequences of these failures. Millions of State and local tax dollars in these and other States have been spent on emergency care, shelter, law enforcement, education, health care, and a variety of other services. This issue is not a regional concern. While only a few States would experience the initial impact of a sudden influx of undocumented aliens, many other States are vulnerable to secondary impacts due to migration.

This amendment will give the Federal Government the capability to provide immediate assistance in an emergency and help prevent impacts beyond the affected region.

I urge my colleagues to adopt the amendment.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, these amendments have been cleared on our side. We are delighted to accept the amendments.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, they are acceptable on this side. I would ask that they be considered en bloc and accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments numbered 896 and 897.

The amendments (Nos. 896 and 897) were agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be temporarily laid aside in order to consider an amendment which will be accepted.

AMENDMENT NO. 898

(Purpose: To Redesignate the Federal Building/Courthouse Located in Baton Rouge, LA)

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON], for himself, Mr. BREAUX, and Mr. DODD, proposes an amendment numbered 898.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

A. The Federal Building/Courthouse located in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, is hereby redesignated as the Russell B. Long Building.

B. Any and all references in Federal law and documents to the old name shall be conformed and referred to as the Russell B. Long Building.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, Senator BREAUX and I submit this amendment to name the Federal courthouse building in Baton Rouge, LA, after Russell B. Long.

I will not go into a long speech, because I know it is Friday. But suffice it to say that Russell Long's 38 years in the U.S. Senate were some of the most illustrious years ever spent by anybody ever to grace this body. He served our State well. He served the Nation well. We all miss him and are delighted still with his company because he is in the area frequently. This is an appropriate honor for him, Mr. President.

I wish to emphasize that he did not come up with this idea. We did.

I called him this morning and said we were going to do this. He said, "Well, Bennett, that is awfully nice, but I didn't ask for this and I am a little bit embarrassed about it." I said, "Well, Russell, I think it is something we ought to do."

Mr. President, I know my colleagues will want to do this, as well, and I commend it to the body.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the real pleasure of serving could not be more highlighted than that service I have had with the distinguished former Senator, Russell Long, of Louisiana.

The fact of the matter is, when I first came to this body, I went to him and asked for the John C. Calhoun desk. He said, "My mama had this desk and so did my daddy." I said, "Excuse me. I didn't know anyone had served in the United States whose mother and father had served in the U.S. Senate."

He came over to me as a friend when he was going to leave, and he said: "I remembered you. I told the Sergeant at Arms to move it over right quick like." And I have it today.

That is the kind of friend I had in Russell Long.

Mr. President, we are delighted to accept this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX].

Mr. BREAUX. Thank you, Mr. President, I am delighted to now know for the first time where Russell's desk went. I was delighted to find out where it went. I was looking for it. I am delighted to know the chairman of the Commerce Committee received the desk before I got here. I am delighted to join with my colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana, in cosponsoring this amendment.

The work of Russell Long will be why people remember him. The Tax Code and so many things he contributed to this institution and this country will be the works the people of this country will remember him by. So that is very appropriate.

How appropriate it is that this Federal building in his home town is also going to be named in his honor, and I enthusiastically endorse it.

Mr. DODD. I wish to be added as cosponsor and join with my colleagues from Louisiana and South Carolina.

Mr. President, I am pleased and honored to cosponsor this amendment naming the new Federal Courthouse in Baton Rouge after our distinguished former colleague, Senator Russell B. Long.

This is a fine tribute to a remarkable man. It will come as no surprise when I share with my colleagues the personal note that Russell Long is about as close as you can come to being a member of the Dodd family, and I am highly honored to be associated with this fitting gesture.

I will not recite Senator Long's many outstanding legislative and civic achievements, including his skillful guardianship of the Federal Tax Code in his many years as chairman of the Finance Committee. These achievements are well known to the Members of this body and the American public. On their own merits, they fully merit the honor we would accord our former colleague.

Let me also cite the friendship and encouragement Senator Long extended to me in my early days in this body. A great friend of my mother and father's, Russell Long was really a mentor to me when I arrived here. He has taught me more than any other colleague about the legislative process, the art of debate and the value of collegiality in the cause of good government.

Russell Long's knowledge, compassion and integrity made him a Senator of unusual gifts and accomplishments. They earned him a special place in my heart, and in the hearts of all who served with him. It is those qualities and accomplishments that we most appropriately honor by naming this courthouse after Senator Long, and I urge adoption of this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request is agreed to.

Mr. DODD. This is a fine tribute to a remarkable man. It will come as no surprise when I share with my colleagues the personal note that Russell Long is about as close as you can come to being a member of the Dodd family, and I am highly honored to be associated with this gesture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I only served with the Senator from Louisiana, Senator LONG, for 6 years. But I would say my contacts with him indicated to me this was truly a remarkable human being and a great U.S. Senator, and I am delighted to join with my colleagues.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS].

Mr. HELMS. I think some more folks on this side of the aisle will want to speak in favor of this. Russell Long is a favorite with all of us who ever served with him. In addition to all the other compliments paid to Russell here this morning, I would add the most important one: He is married to a North Carolina girl.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSTON.

The amendment (No. 898) was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 41, LINES 4 THROUGH 10

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the excepted committee amendment on page 18, lines 4 through 16.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 41, LINES 4 THROUGH 10

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the first excepted committee amendment be set aside in order that we may proceed to the excepted committee amendment on page 41, lines 4 through 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The first committee amendment that was excepted is laid aside temporarily and the Senate will proceed to the second committee amendment, which was excepted.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, on a personal basis, I am reluctant to do what I am about to do because of my great affection for DANIEL INOUYE and SPARK MATSUNAGA. But thinking of the American people, and this business of creating one new entitlement after another, compels me to raise a point of order against the pending amendment.

I am not sure how many Americans understand what happened in April of last year when the Senate passed the authorization to pay $20,000 to each Japanese American who was relocated or interned during World War II, including many who were interned before President Roosevelt signed Executive Order No. 9066.

Before the Senate passed the bill, an amendment was added in committee specifically to make payments under the bill subject to the availability of appropriations, that is, to make them discretionary funds rather than to create a new entitlement.

As a matter of fact, I recall Senator GLENN made the point on the floor, he said:

> Titles II and III of the bill do not create new entitlement funds. Rather, the bill directs that the authority to enter into contracts and make payments under titles II and III is subject to the availability of appropriations.

As great an affection as we all have for our two distinguished Senators from Hawaii, I do not believe many Senators would have voted as they did in April 1988 if they had been aware that they were in the process of creating a new entitlement.

Senator RUDMAN, who is the distinguished ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, also made it clear at that time that these payments would have to be weighed among the other financial obligations. Let me quote Senator RUDMAN. He said:

> Mr. President, in an effort to comply with the terms of the Budget Act, the bill, as reported by the Government Affairs Committee, was amended to make the payments of compensation to Japanese Americans through a civil liberties public education fund subject to the availability of appropriations.

Then he went on to say:

> Realistically in the current budget climate, it is not possible to absorb a new $500 million within the allocation the Commerce, Justice, State Subcommittee will receive.

Then, Mr. President, my dear friend from South Carolina, the chairman of the Commerce, Justice, State Subcommittee put it quite succinctly, when he said back in 1988: "The Government is broke. We do not have money to finance this new program." That was Senator HOLLINGS.

Senator HOLLINGS and Senator RUDMAN were exactly right when they predicted that we cannot afford to make these payments. Their subcommittees, after carefully weighing all the priorities, were unable to find the funds within their allocation to make these discretionary payments. So what was the subcommittee's solution to all this? They totally avoided the issue for fiscal year 1990 and turned these payments back into an entitlement for 1991; an explicit contradiction of the commitment that was given, in my judgment, to the Senate and to the American people when the authorization was passed. In addition, the subcommittee and the committee created a permanent appropriation for fiscal year 1991 and subsequent years, so they will not have to deal with the issue again.

I ask myself: Have I missed something in the translation? Since April of 1988, did the U.S. Government come into a windfall of money that I am not aware of? I think the answer is no. And the result is that if we create this new entitlement today, we will be adding up to $500 million to the fiscal year 1991 deficit.

It is painful for me to say all of this, and I reiterate that I was reluctant to get into it because of my friendship for, If I can be informal, Mr. President, DANNY and SPARK.

The fact is, we recently voted to cut all discretionary appropriations across the board to fund what every Senator agreed was the most important issue facing this country today: the war on drugs. We did not make that an entitlement. We have voted to cut wasteful programs, not enough but some, to help babies who are born addicted to drugs. We did not create an entitlement for them.

So, if we are going to add $500 million to the deficit in 1991 and for several years thereafter, I think we better know what we are doing. That is the reason I am on my feet today.

The creation of an entitlement for fiscal year 1991 is a direct violation of section 303(a) of the Budget Act, and I intend to raise that point of order at the appropriate time. But I am going to withhold because I have been advised that the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] wants to speak on this matter.

I wonder if staff would inquire if he is on his way to the floor so we will not hold up the distinguished managers of the bill.

In the meantime, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I know my distinguished colleague from North Carolina and I always have an understanding. It is my hope he would not make that point of order which is obvious. If the distinguished Senator makes his point of order, I would try to move under section 904 under the Budget Act to waive section 303(a). So the Senator from North Carolina would know my intent if he does make that point of order.

Mr. HELMS. I understand.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Let me just say this to the distinguished Senator, the senior member of our subcommittee, Senator INOUYE, knows we had a dickens of a time. We tried every twist, every turn but were limited by our allocation. The distinguished Presiding Officer knows about this because he has been chairing the drug matter.

It just so happens we have 27 different related agencies and the 3 departments, and the entire Judiciary. We have the trade representative, the Securities and Exchange Commission which has problems, the USIA, everyone has more and more problems. This one, of course, fits in our particular bill and right when you get some reparations under the section of the Department of Justice, we were presented with a summit agreement. That is why we cut short and had to provide this kind of language so we would not continue to delay the acknowledged act of the U.S. Government itself in making these reparations payments with the families waiting and diminishing each day and some will never see it. So we wanted to honor it and found out this was the best way to do it. We compromised on a tough situation. That is why we put this language in there as an entitlement commencing the next fiscal year.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE].

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the matter of redress for Japanese-Americans who were interned in the Federal Government internment camps during World War II has been before us and debated for over a decade. And my participation in these debates, as many have been aware, has been rather minimal. So it is most difficult for me to admit that I have been inhibited and reluctant to say much about this because of my ethnic background. I reached the conclusion that as a result of this reluctance to participate, I may have performed a great disservice to many of my fellow Americans with whom I served in the Army during World War II.

So, Mr. President, I believe the time has come for me to tell my colleagues what has been in my heart for all these many years.

Mr. President, I was a very young 18-year-old high school graduate when I volunteered and put on the uniform of my country. At that moment, because of wartime censorship in Hawaii and other restrictions, I was not made aware of the strange plight of my fellow Americans of Japanese ancestry who were then residing on the mainland United States. However, I was made aware of their unbelievable problems soon after I joined them in a training camp in Mississippi. I learned that over 120,000 Americans were given 48 hours to settle their accounts, businesses and they were required by law to leave their residences and be sent to barracks and makeshift camps in distant parts of the United States. History now shows that their only crime was that they were born of parents of Japanese ancestry. History also shows that there was no evidence of any fifth column sabotage activities carried out by any of these Americans of Japanese ancestry.

So when our special infantry regiment was being formed, I was aware that half of this regiment was made up of men from Hawaii and the other half from the mainland United States. Mr. President, all of our volunteers were of Japanese ancestry. These mainland men volunteered from behind barbed wire in these camps. They did not volunteer, as other Americans did, in free American communities. So to this day, I look back with awe and disbelief that these men who had been denied their civil rights, deprived of their worldly goods and humiliated with unjust incarceration would, nonetheless, stand up and take the oath to defend the country that was mistreating them without due process of law.

So, Mr. President, I have oftentimes asked myself the question: Would I have volunteered under these circumstances? In all honesty, I cannot give you a forthright answer. The men who volunteered from these camps were very reluctant to share their unfortunate internment experiences. They would just shrug their shoulders and mutter, "I suppose that is the way life is." But in a rare moment, one of them would open up and tell us about some episode in his camp. For example, I remember a story I heard on a cold night on the field. One of my mainland buddies told us about his experiences in the Manzanar camp where soldiers shot and killed 3 internees and wounded about 10 others because they were demonstrating for the release of a fellow internee who had been arrested for allegedly assaulting another internee. Just because they were demonstrating, they were shot. According to the provisions of this bill, these three men who were killed would not receive any redress payments. And then while we were training in Mississippi to prepare us for combat in Europe, word came to several of my buddies from California that their State had just begun to implement a strange law which authorized the seizure and resale of idle farm machinery. Obviously, idle farm machinery that was found in the State of California during that time was almost always those that the internees were forced to abandon. Needless to say, these California internees were not around to bid for them.

Further, we were at times told about the great losses that these young volunteers and their families had to incur. For example, it was commonplace for residences, farms and personal items to be sold for a fraction of their market value. In fact, one of those men in my squad sold his almost brand new 1941 Ford for $100. He had no choice. Although it was in good condition, that was all he could get from his neighbors. And now we are told that these losses have exceeded $6 billion.

Most of the Members of the Senate have been in this body for at least 10 years, and during that time we have given our vote and our support for other reparations programs.

Mr. President, redress and reparations are not unique in our history. For example, in 1980—that is less than a decade ago—we in the Senate appropriated funds to provide $10,000 to each of the 1,318 anti-Vietnam war demonstrators who were found to have been wrongly jailed for 1 weekend. They spent 2 days and 1 night and we paid $10,000; no fuss.

More recently, in 1986, we appropriated sums to give each American hostage $22,000 for his or her bitter experience in Iran. We were not the ones who incarcerated these hostages, but we felt that they were entitled to $22,000.

Mr. President, the internment of most of the families of those with whom I served in combat was for over 3 years. My mainland buddies were silent because they could not bring themselves to share their humiliation with those of us from Hawaii.

Mr. President, as a footnote, I should point out that during the 1 year of almost continuous and intensive combat in Europe, over 200 of those mainland volunteers from internment camps went through the ranks of my company; that is, Company E 2d Battalion, 442d. Of that number, all with the exception of about 20 were either seriously wounded or killed in action. That is a very high percentage of Purple Hearts, much higher than one would find in any other unit.

Incidentally, Mr. President, the regiment with which I was privileged and honored to serve was the most decorated unit in World War II.

That is about all I have to say, Mr. President. I hope my colleagues will support the action that will be made by the chairman of this committee to make this proper, and as my dear friend from New Hampshire said during the markup, it is the right thing to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, there are times that we deal with fiscal reality, and there are certainly times during this month that we will deal with extraordinary fiscal reality. But there are also times, Mr. President, that one must set fiscal reality aside, as in the event of the disaster in the Carolinas that we had to meet, and look at what is the right thing to do.

This committee tried mightily to find appropriated funds to fund this program, and we could not. It was suggested to us there was certainly a legal basis to say that any claim against the United States which had a color of correctness would be paid as an entitlement if judgment were rendered. That is unquestionably the law.

Thus, we decided to in some modest way recompense those loyal Japanese-Americans who were subjected to a treatment that most of our country either still does not know about or, if they know about it, they do not understand it.

Does anybody really understand what it might be like living up in Manchester, NH, tonight to be told you have 48 hours to leave your home—loyal citizens, part of the community—your business, your land—the Senator from Hawaii did not talk about the land that was stolen from those people. That is not too strong a word—and be bused off to a concentration camp for 3 years. It is probably the darkest day in terms of the treatment of citizens of this country since the days of slavery.

Mr. President, there is a time when one whose name is part of the Deficit Control Act of 1985 believes the Budget Act ought to be waived, and this is one of those times.

The Senator from Hawaii in his usual, very modest way talked about his Army unit. The Senator from Hawaii has never spoken publicly to any extent that I can remember about this issue and has essentially remained silent.

The Senator from Hawaii paid his dues many times over. The Senator from Hawaii did not mention to those Americans who might be watching or listening that he received the second highest award for valor this country can give. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for events in Italy which led to the loss of his arm. And thousands of other valiant young Japanese-Americans, whose parents and grandparents were in American concentration camps, fought in Germany and in Italy for the freedom of this country.

Mr. President, there comes a time when something is the right thing to do, and this is one of those times. I hope we would have overwhelming support to waive the Budget Act to redress finally for the now elderly Americans, the justice that money will never recompense.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] and the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN].

We in this body allocate many funds for many purposes and we are generous with the bookkeeping as we take care of many matters which come before the Congress, the most recent of which was the savings and loan bailout. We have responded as we should to the tragedy in the Carolinas. We go on at great length about our expenditures.

For me, Mr. President, this is not a close question at all. There is no bigger black mark in American history, at least in this century, than that which was perpetrated on American citizens of Japanese extraction and Japanese descent. I think my colleague from New Hampshire is exactly right when he says the people in this country do not know about the atrocious treatment that was received by our fellow citizens at that time. They were victimized, they were treated like criminals, they were herded off, they were deprived of their property, and they were deprived of their liberty without due process of law. They were treated like criminals except they were not given trials or due process or an opportunity to be heard or an opportunity to defend themselves; all in the name of some wartime hysteria.

Finally, the Congress has responded very slowly and not generously, very modestly with the allocation of funds along this particular line.

Mr. President, I consider it a privilege to serve in this body with Senator INOUYE whose heroism in World War II is legendary, and really whose heroism in this Congress is also legendary.

I noted in USA Today a few months ago that Senator INOUYE had served 30 years in the Congress, was the first Member of the House of Representatives from Hawaii when Hawaii received statehood was admitted to the union, and sent its first Representatives to Washington, DC.

His activities are characteristic of the contribution of his people. A great injustice was done in World War II. It is my hope that we will not be forced to a vote on this issue. The Appropriations Committee has acted properly in presenting the matter to the floor today for the kinds of payments which are required. I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who wishes to be recognized? The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I thank my dear colleagues from New Hampshire and Pennsylvania. I have been advised the Senator from New Mexico wishes to be heard. He is not here. May I suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator withhold?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I will be very brief. And when the Senator from New Mexico arrives, I will yield the floor.

We all know the eloquence of our distinguished colleague from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] who surprisingly said this is the first time he had spoken publicly on the issue.

When I make speeches in my home State, people often ask me who are the best-liked Senators. That is easy. The Senators from Hawaii, are easily two of the most revered Senators in the U.S. Senate, and both are decorated many times for valor in World War II.

I rise to put a slightly different slant on this because my State was the location of two Japanese internment camps. I have heard from people who lived in the area—the camps are not there anymore—since I have been in the Senate. We built a monument in memory of those who died in those camps, and there were many who did. Many died because of the unspeakable conditions under which they lived; families, husbands, wives and children, many families in one barracks with scarcely a sheet hanging between them. No privacy. Unbelievable indignities suffered. And who were they? American citizens, not even aliens, picked up because they were easily defineable due to their physical characteristics.

There may have been people who were even sympathetic to the Japanese, but as long as they were not Oriental nobody bothered them.

It sort of reminds me of when Hitler sent word to Mussolini that he wanted Mussolini to start discriminating against Jews. This was very difficult. So they started trying to pick Jews out in Italy based on physical characteristics. They wound up jailing a lot of Italians. So they had to discontinue to some extent the programs against the Jews in Italy because they became confused. But here it was fairly easy to pick out people of Japanese descent in this country.

So there they were, American citizens. And many of the people in Senator INOUYE's unit suffered the highest number of casualties of any unit, I believe, in the European Theater. There they were dying, losing arms, and limbs and their families were interned in these unspeakable conditions all over the country—in California and in Arkansas.

Do you know my children know nothing about this? I am old enough to know it, but I did not know it at the time. It is one of the most shameful episodes in the history of our country.

My mail, unhappily, after the last vote on this, asked: "How can you vote for something for the people who bombed Pearl Harbor or killed my son?"

I write back and I say I am not voting for those people, but I am voting for redress in a very small way, for American citizens. Nobody here would even suggest that a small pecuniary payment to these people could ever come close to redressing the indignities which I have just described, to say nothing of the humiliation of being an American citizen and being interned.

So as the Senator from New Hampshire has correctly said, it is an issue widely misunderstood even by people who remember it. But it is a shame that I will be happy to do my very best to redress. And in the future when I get mail from my constituents on this issue, I intend to have copies of Senator INOUYE's speech printed, and say, "Enclosed is the reason I voted as I did."

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] is recognized.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I did not intend to speak on this issue but I feel I should say just a few things.

Mr. President, the road of history of most nations is paved with sometimes incredible, startling, and unbelievable paving stones. In this case we are coming to an end of a road I hope, a road that went from fear to justice today.

Today, justice; at the outset, fear. Irrational fear, explicable, but irrational fear on the part of a nation under siege, which it is explainable how this irrational fear could have erupted.

I was not born until November 1942. I know nothing of this, other than from an historical perspective. But that road from fear and prejudice to justice is a road that we heard this morning, and it has been paved with the bodies of American citizens, American citizens who had to prove not only their loyalty by demonstrating a commitment and a bravery beyond what was expected of other Americans, but to do it at a time when there must have been a feeling of a seething anger and frustration, and I am embarrassed to say, if it were me, probably a little bit of hate, while all that was being asked of every American was being asked of them and then a lot more.

Every once in a while when serving in this body, one likes to think that we will be able to be rational and just, that we will be able to put aside, at least on occasion, our petty—sometimes not so pretty—prejudices; that we will be able to lay aside the hate that exists in some quarters in this country, just long enough to see the facts, as they say in the law, "and do justice."

Those of us who know Senator INOUYE and Senator MATSUNAGA, know that they, unlike many of us that are in the same circumstances, grew from this ordeal.

I believe one of the reasons why DAN INOUYE is the man that he is today in the Senate is not merely because he saw death; he came within a whisker's hair of it himself. He obviously suffered greatly physically, as a consequence of his efforts. Not only because of that, but because he was asked or felt he was obliged to do something at a time and for a reason—I guess to be more precise, for a reason no one should have been asked, and the reason being, having to demonstrate something that was put in question that never should have been put in question.

I suspect that the reason why he is held in such high regard, the reason why he is able to act with such equanimity around this place in cases that few of us can, is that what he undergoes here, as we all do, is not anything compared to what he was weaned on as a young man in World War II.

So I just hope, before change, we can serve one of the purposes for which this body exists, and that is to educate our constiuency, as well as respond to them, to the fact that it is time that we do justice, even if there were only one Japanese American alive, even if there were only one Japanese American alive who went through the ordeal of what we have heard others speak on, we, in my view, would be obliged to summon the majesty of this government to speak to the injustice that was done and demonstrate to that one person that we understood and understand now what we had done; and most important, it seems to me, that in the future we will have learned from our lesson and we will never repeat what was done; it will not be repeated to Japanese Americans or Asian Americans. It may be repeated in a way that deals with other ethnic Americans and if we fail to acknowledge it now, if we fail to rectify it now, what record are we leaving for history?

So, although I would like to—and as you can tell, I am inclined to speak much more on this subject than I already have—let me close by saying that this country is better for the fact that there are so many Japanese American citizens. This body is enriched by the fact that two Japanese American citizens serve in it, and this Senator has been enriched, his life has been enriched by the fact that he has come to know and respect and understand one of them in a way that makes me realize how inadequate my contribution to my country has been.

I sincerely hope we get on with this quickly and do justice. It is time.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI].

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I, too, would like to speak this morning. I understand we are trying to expedite this bill, so I will try to be brief.

First of all, I want to make it very clear that the Budget Act and the budget process are designed to have procedures to address unanticipated events or changed circumstances. There are very good procedures and precedents under the waiver provisions of the Budget Act.

Now, Mr. President, if there were not circumstances that prompted the waiver, we would not have put a provision in the act to waive. So right up front, I want the Senate to know that I have been, to the best of my ability, one who enforces the process; but I am going to vote to waive the Budget Act in this instance, because it appears to me that from time to time, occasions arise which justify waiving the Budget Act. I think this is one such occasion.

Frankly, I have been very lucky in my life. My ancestry is Italian American. We, too, to some extent, in the Second World War, had our share of problems in this country because our loyalty was suspect.

As a matter of fact, when I was 8 years old a lawyer made a mistake and told my father that when he married my mother, she would be an American citizen. He read the wrong law, I say to my friend from Delaware. Even though renowned, this lawyer did not look at the most current immigration laws. They change all the time.

He said, "When you marry, your wife is a citizen." She was Italian.

Twenty-two years later, with five children in the backyard, the Immigration Service arrived and arrested my mother as a dangerous illegal alien, and took her off while we stood there in tears. My father was an immigrant who did not learn to write English, although he was intelligent. He quickly called the same lawyer who was a renowned New Mexican. He arrived simultaneously with my father before they took my mother away. That worked out quite well, because he insisted that they arrest him also. They were befuddled, and they arrested him also. As a consequence, my mother did not spend a lot of time in jail.

But that only goes to the point that we make mistakes. In the case of my family it was a little mistake, nonetheless there were lot of tears when they took my mother off to jail. We were kind of worried about it because three big black limousines with lots of people converged upon our house. It was a bad mistake.

We could all come back to the floor today and say we made a mistake when we passed the authorizing bill. We need not address again today the issue of America's response to its injustice to Japanese-Americans during World War II by saying we are going to try in a small way to recompense for a very bad mistake. We have done that. We passed a law. We said this is what we are going to do. The reason I think we should waive the Budget Act is because it has become clear that we will not in a timely way fund this act of civility. So the committee of jurisdiction in their wisdom looked at the facts and said we only have two ways to go. We either offer false promise, and false hope, or we will change this method of funding to an entitlement. We have all cosponsored a measure that will be totally ineffective to accomplish the goals of small recompense to a group that was not treated justly by a country which strives to be just. We have a great record of justice and civility. The United States of America is the envy of the world. So we are not here arguing whether it is meritorious to make these reparation payments, although it has been exhilarating to hear our friend, the distinguished Senator from Hawaii, who is more personally involved in this situation.

So I say to my fellow Senators, the reason that there is a waiver provision in the Budget Act is so that we do things up front and acknowledge a changed or unanticipated circumstance. So that everybody understands clearly when we change something that affects fiscal matters in a significant way, and Congress acknowledges that fact by waiving the Budget Act. It is appropriate to raise a point of order in this instance. The Congress made the original bill authorizing these payments subject to appropriations. In so doing, the Governmental Affairs Committee was not charged with creating new spending authority in the form of an entitlement, and a point of order under the Budget Act did not apply. Today, the Senate will affirm that it wants these payments to be made to those Japanese-Americans wrongfully interned. If we do not, we will have made another act of incivility, passing a law, saying we are going to do something, and then not doing so. If the Senate wants to make these payments, and do what we said we were going to do when we enacted the original bill, the Senate can vote to waive the Budget Act.

Having said that, let me suggest that there are other occasions when we should have been more forthright and waived the Budget Act rather than doing nothing. I believe we probably should have done so on Hugo disaster relief yesterday. We should recognize that our action means something fiscally, confront it forthrightly, and vote when there is an occasion appropriate to waive. I believe this is such an occasion. It will take 50 votes to waive, and I hope there are as many votes for the bill itself. To be for the bill that created the right and not be for the waiver today borders close to hypocrisy. From the standpoint of the United States Government, it would compound the injustice to say we are going to make reparations, and then to say you may all die before we recompense you under the law that we all support. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I sincerely regret that the Senator from North Carolina has chosen to raise this issue at this time.

Mr. President, I do not begrudge him the right to do that. Under the rules of the Senate he clearly has that right. But I hope that we will not continue to reopen old wounds, to fan the flames of those aspects of our culture which I think many of us would like to think we are beyond, and I would implore him to use some restraint when it comes to issues as sensitive as this in a society and diverse and pluralistic as ours.

Mr. President, one of my good friends spent the first several years of his life in one of the internment camps. After that, he lived a normal American life. In high school, he was a great football player, an A student and active in his church. he went away to college, not speaking a word of Japanese, but learned Japanese in college. He went to Japan on an intern program between his junior and senior year to learn Japanese. He did not learn it in his home. His father was a Methodist minister who wanted his son to be raised to speak English, which he did eloquently.

He eventually wrote a book appropriately entitled "American in Disguise." And as many people do when they write a book, he decided to talk about it around the country.

I remember one night when he came to a large midwestern city. He was on a television show, a talk show, that took questions and answers. He talked about what it was like to grow up in that internment camp. And then the questions came. "Why don't you go back to Japan? You bombed Pearl Harbor." This was the essence of the questions.

As I heard these questions I had to come to terms with that. What is going on here? Obviously, the people who made the telephone calls did not want to hear the bad news, did not want to hear that this had ever happened in American history, did not want to hear about mistakes that we might have made in our past.

Mr. President, I would like to believe the best of the Senate. I believe in its patriotism. But patriotism has also given rise to mistakes. And I believe that when we have made mistakes, that patriotism is in particular admitting those mistakes, and especially those that infringe upon individual liberty. If we do stand for anything in this country, we ought to stand for that.

Mr. President, this provision in question is a small attempt to tell 80,000 people of the 120,000 who were interned that we know it was a mistake and that we do not want to do the normal political thing—to make a big speech and then do nothing—but that we want to back up our statements with a little bit, to compensate for the pain, suffering, indignity, and infringement on individual liberty that they endured.

So, Mr. President, I would hope we would waive the Budget Act, get on with business, and move this entitlement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REID). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the motion by the senior Senator from Hawaii. There is an old saying that we all accept, justice delayed is justice denied. We all know the truth of that and for a great many of these people that is literally true. Many of them are in their eighties. At least one person I know is in his nineties. We have to move on this thing.

We did the right thing when we passed the legislation. Now let us fund it.

And let me just add, I speak from a little bit of personal history in this. I grew up in the State of Oregon, something I do not stress in the State of Illinois. While I grew up in the State of Oregon, my parents were active in what we then called race relations. I was 13 years old when I remember my father made a—my father was a Lutheran minister—make a talk on a local radio station, KORE, in which he said what is happening to Japanese-Americans is wrong. I remember the phone calls we got and I remember my friends shunning me.

I would love to tell this body that I stood up for my father. He had explained to my brother and me why we had done it. I regret to say I was embarrassed; I wished my father had not done it. But now when I look back it is one of the things I am proudest of my father for.

The ACLU did not stand up and defend the right of Japanese-Americans, I regret to say, at that point. I do not recall—of course, in fairness, I was only 13—but I do not recall very many voices at all standing up for justice. And so we impose this massive injustice on people.

For the same reason I think it is important to remember the Hollocaust, to know what humanity can do, I think it is important that we do the right thing here; not just for Japanese-Americans, but to signal the future generations that this can never happen again. I hope we support resoundingly the motion of the senior Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I also rise in strong support of the underlying proposition of an entitlement for eligible individuals of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988. Like my good friend from Illinois, I was on the west coast in 1940, 1941, 1942, 1943, and 1944, attending my high school in Seattle, WA. When I was a sophomore, one third of the students were moved out of that high school in one day because they were of Japanese-American descent. The names still ring in my memory, Mr. President—Shig Murao and Johnny Okamoto, men that I spent a lot of time with. We lost our entire basketball team, we lost half our football team, we lost nearly half of our top scholars. These were students that had been with us for many years, that we had grown up with on the playgrounds of Seattle and in elementary school and high school.

This country promoted a great wrong by establishing Executive Order 9066. It is a wrong that cannot be fully measured in terms of absolute dollars that were lost. There is a matter of emotionally injuring the pride and conviction of very loyal Americans. There is a matter of stigmatizing a people for years to come. It is therefore important Mr. President, that we mend these wounds. By passing this entitlement we say: "We care for you, you are part of us. You are not only part of us, but you proudly represent a great diverse group of citizens living in America."

I have always said that if what we did in 1942 was not correctly rectified by this country, it could be another group that will be in trouble in the future. We need to remove what happened officially and clearly. We need to be certain that this stain on our honor is cleansed. This entitlement language does that.

I cannot tell you how many of my classmates did not come back, Mr. President. Many were killed in Italy fighting for the United States. This is a sacrifice we cannot ignore.

My good friends, I hope that on this day we will stand for what is good in this country, a pluralistic society encompassing many different races, creeds, ethnic backgrounds. This is the great experiment and the great historical hope of the 20th and the 21st century. We should today reaffirm it.

So I hope that we listen to what my good friend, the Senator from Hawaii is saying. I am very much in support of assured reparations payments beginning in 1991, and I am hopeful that we will move promptly on it.

I compliment the committee for having arrived at a fair solution to a difficult problem.

I yield the floor.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I want to express my support for the provision in the committee-reported bill which would establish a mechanism by which the redress payments that Congress approved in enacting the Civil Liberties Act of 1988 would actually be made to the intended beneficiaries.

Mr. President, it would be a cruel irony for the United States, having finally taken action to redress one of our Nation's greatest acts of injustice, to fail to carry out the commitment it made to provide partial compensation for their pain and loss of liberty. Mr. President, each day we delay means that fewer and fewer internees are alive to accept what we all recognize is merely a symbolic gesture at best.

Japanese-Americans and Aleutian islanders should not have to agonize at the end of each fiscal year as to whether the American Government will fulfill its commitment. These citizens need to know that we will meet our commitment, year after year, until the obligation has been satisfied. The committee provisions are designed to ensure that we do meet that commitment.

This episode in American history should never have happened. It is our responsibility to set the record straight and the way to do that is by supporting the committee's efforts. The tarnish on our Constitution can never be completely removed but our actions today can go a long way toward showing that our words are consistent with our deeds.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I rise in support of the committee amendment relating to Americans of Japanese ancestry who were interned by the United States Government during World War II, and the motion to waive provisions of the Budget Act.

I was the principal sponsor of the authorizing legislation, S. 1009, which passed the Senate in April 1988 by a vote of 69 to 27. That bill, which was cosponsored by 74 other Senators, was intended to repair one of the most notorious violations of civil liberties in our Nation's history—the incarceration for periods of up to 4 years, without trial or hearing, of some 120,000 native-born American citizens and permanent alien residents of Japanese ancestry. Summarily removed from their homes on the west coast in 1942, they lost everything—their livelihoods, real and personal property, educational and career opportunities. Today, the Federal Government's wartime action is viewed as a blot on our Nation's generally good record with respect to civil liberties and human rights.

S. 1009 and its House companion, H.R. 442, assumed that funds for modest compensatory payments to the surviving former internees would be made available in fiscal year 1990. As finally passed, the bill provided for appropriations of up to $500 million per year, with payments to be made to the oldest surviving internees first.

Earlier this summer, the House agreed to a fiscal year 1990 appropriation of $50 million—10 percent of the authorized amount—enough to pay only those former internees who are over the age of 85. The Senate Appropriations Committee declined to provide any funding in 1990, but agreed to make these compensatory payments an entitlement, beginning in fiscal year 1991.

Mr. President, while I was deeply disappointed that the Senate failed to provide even a token amount of funding in fiscal year 1990, I am hopeful that the Appropriations Committee amendment will result in the prompt payment of compensation to those internees who are still alive, starting next year.

Prompt funding of the Civil Liberties Act is crucial because 200 former internees are dying every month—2,400 a year. If Congress fails to keep the promise it made in 1988, many internees now aged 70 to 106, will never see the official national apology and token compensation provided under our bill.

It is significant to note that Canada, following our lead, enacted similar legislation to benefit Canadians of Japanese ancestry over 1 month after President Reagan signed the Civil Liberties Act into law last year. To date, about one-half of the approximately 14,000 surviving Canadian internees have received benefits under the legislation, while not one United States beneficiary has been paid.

Last year, we proved that the United States is such a great Nation that it can acknowledge its errors and seek to make right a grave injustice. This year, we must follow through on that commitment. Therefore, I urge that this point of order be defeated, and that the Senate adopt the Appropriations Committee amendment.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today in support of waiving the budget to provide needed funds in fiscal year 1991, under the provisions of the appropriations bill before us to fulfill our promise to provide reparations to those Americans of Japanese descent who were interned during World War II.

That internment is a wound that Japanese-Americans have had to endure for many, many years. And indeed, it has been a wound on the body of all Americans, because it exemplifies what can happen to our rights if we are not vigilant.

As you know, the relocation and internment during World War II violated constitutional rights including the denial of due process of law, arrest without probable cause and detention without trial. It included unlawful searches, and the loss of property and jobs, as well as freedom. Equal protection under the law was denied based solely on racist grounds. And the Supreme Court failed in its duty to protect the rights of Japanese-Americans. This failure is a wound we all bear.

But the internment did not defeat the spirit of the Japanese-American community. Many men volunteered for the military, including my colleagues Senators DANIEL INOUYE and SPARK MATSUNAGA. They fought with the famous 442d Regiment, the entirely Japanese-American military unit which has been called the most highly decorated unit in the history of American fighting forces. Included among the awards earned by the unit is a Medal of Honor, 52 Distinguished Service Crosses, 560 Silver Stars, 5,200 Bronze Stars, and over 9,400 Purple Hearts. Other Japanese-Americans fought in other units including the military intelligence service. Their service stands as testimony of their patriotism.

These brave men fought to preserve the ideals of American constitutional government, in spite of the injustice of the internment and relocation. And since the war they have fought in the finest tradition of America to secure the rights of all individuals.

They have also fought to overcome the injustice and indignity of the internment. To heal the wound. With the passage of last year's bill, justice was won, the wound is healing. With the passage of the State, Justice, Commerce appropriations bill before us our pledge will have been fulfilled.

But I must add that although the wound is healing, a scar remains—and it should remain. It must serve as a reminder to us that our Constitution is only a yellowed piece of parchment unless we are committed to the precepts it outlines. It is only words unless we act to prevent the violation of rights of whatever group is unpopular at the moment. Together we must work to ensure that such racism, such injustice, shall not happen again.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to approve the pending budget waiver.

JAPANESE INTERNMENT—A PIECE OF COLORADO'S PAST

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, the issue of reparations for Japanese-Americans who were unjustly interned during World War II is not a matter of indifference in Colorado. In fact, this issue has deep significance in my State.

Colorado was selected as a host State for the internment of loyal Japanese-Americans, and as a result, hundreds of Japanese-American families were interned at the Amachi Camp located in eastern Colorado, near present-day Lamar. And Colorado's courageous Governor, Ralph Carr, risked public condemnation by opposing the internment as a gross violation by the Federal Government of constitutional rights. Although Governor Carr's political career ended with his principled stand, his memory as a champion of civil rights is revered in Colorado today.

Another Coloradan, Minoru Yasui, rose to challenge the constitutionality of the internment program at an early age, and his fight continued until his death in 1986. Min was another great champion of civil rights in Colorado, and I think today's debate would not be complete without some reference to his long fight in the Federal courts. I would, therefore, ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a copy of correspondence I have recently sent to Attorney General Thornburgh on Min's case.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, July 4, 1989.

Hon. RICHARD THORNBURGH,
Attorney General, Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I am writing to bring your attention to a case that has very special meaning for many Japanese Americans, and for the people of Colorado: the Minoru Yasui case.

Minoru Yasui died in November, 1986, after a very long and distinguished career as an attorney and community leader in Denver, Colorado. Min served as the Executive Director of the Denver Commission on Community Relations, was a founding member of many civic organizations, including the Urban League of Denver, Denver Native Americans United, the Japanese American Citizens League, and the Latin American Research and Service Agency. He was also Chairman of the Colorado State Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

A long standing champion of civil rights, Min is chiefly remembered outside of Colorado for the courageous stand he took in 1942 when he deliberately violated a military curfew in protest against the forced removal and incarceration of loyal Japanese American citizens during World War II. Min was arrested, tried and found guilty of violating the curfew. He spent nine months in an 8x10 cell in solitary confinement.

In 1943, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld Min's conviction, holding that racially discriminatory measures can be sustained when justified by expressions of "military necessity" or national security. The Court's rulings in Hirabayashi (1943) and Korematsu (1944) relied on the same reasoning.

Although many contemporary legal scholars have criticized the reasoning of the Yasui-Hirabayashi-Korematsu line of cases, they still represent the Court's last word on the constitutional questions raised by the internment of loyal Japanese Americans during World War II.

Min continued his fight to overturn his conviction. As late as 1981, Min and his lawyers uncovered evidence suggesting that his conviction was based on falsified information and fraudulent evidence. Min petitioned the federal court in Oregon to reopen his case in 1984.

The Justice Department reacted by retroactively dropping the criminal charges that had originally been filed against him, thus undercutting the foundation for Min's case. Consequently, the federal appeals court refused to reopen the case, and Min died before he could take his case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Min's family—and a host of civil rights organizations—tried to get the Court to hear the merits of Min's case in order to reverse, or at least modify, the Yasui-Hirabayashi-Korematsu line of rulings. Min's untimely death, and the federal prosecutor's refusal to sanction the government's original criminal charges mooted the matter.

As you know, President Reagan and Congress acted in the 100th Congress to pass a reparations bill aimed at rectifying the ills associated with the internment of Japanese Americans during World War II. Both the Executive and the Legislative branches of our government have, therefore, acted to honor the memory of loyal citizens like Min, Americans who not only fought and died during World War II, but who worked tirelessly to preserve, protect and defend the constitutional freedoms we all enjoy today.

Many of Min's close friends—and people throughout Colorado consider themselves to be just that—have approached me about the possibility of reopening Min's case or at least securing an official statement from the Department of Justice on the constitutional issues raised therein.

I know that many Coloradans would appreciate your looking into the history of this unusual case, and would be interested in knowing whether there is anything you can do as the nation's chief law enforcement official to address the issues Min sought to have re-adjudicated by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Min's memory, and his many years of good work for the people of his community, are deeply revered by Coloradans. Your expression of interest would, therefore, be most welcomed.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

TIMOTHY E. WIRTH.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, it is very difficult to add to the eloquence of the statements made by my dear friend from Hawaii, Senator INOUYE, and others here in the Chamber.

I think the choice before us is clear, and this Nation must honor its commitment and waive the Budget Act to right the terrible injustice that was visited upon loyal Americans of Japanese ancestry.

It is difficult, Mr. President, if not impossible to compensate for the pain, the suffering, for the incalculable anguish, because the compensation we passed into law last year can never make whole the extreme pains of this troubled period in our history.

The first call upon a nation, Mr. President, is that it honor its just obligations. This is a just obligation, an effort on behalf of the United States, some 45 years late, to make an apology to loyal Americans and to make right an injustice. In that respect, this must be a high priority, one that we were late in recognizing, so that this debt can be paid.

There are certain lessons in human history that future generations should be reminded of and for that reason, Mr. President, we cannot close this sad chapter in our history, because we should not forget. I yield the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, if we have a referendum at any time on DANNY INOUYE, record me, please, as voting in the affirmative. Nobody has more affection and respect for DANNY INOUYE and SPARK MATSUNAGA than I do. But that is not the point.

Neither is it the point for people to get up and remonstrate against the actions taken by their Government, most of them before they were born. I was born then, Mr. President, and I remember those days. To be critical of Franklin Roosevelt for doing what the intelligence community told him that he absolutely must do is a little bit farfetched.

Also farfetched, Mr. President, is the suggestion made here this morning that this Congress has some sort of a self-assigned nobility for having voted for this reparation. Not so.

Mr. President, the U.S. Government has not ignored the suffering that occurred as a result of the relocation and internment during the war. The Government has officially recognized that much unjustified personal hardship was caused. Previous Congresses, Presidents, and Attorneys General have taken steps to acknowledge and compensate Japanese-Americans for the injuries they suffered.

In 1948, Congress enacted the American-Japanese Claims Act, which authorized compensation for any claim for damages to or loss of real or personal property as "a reasonable natural consequence of the evacuation or exclusion of" persons of Japanese ancestry as a result of governmental action during World War II. The act was subsequently amended to liberalize its compensation provisions.

Under the amended act, the Justice Department ultimately settled 26,568 claims, many of which involved claims presented by family groups rather than individual claimants. It is safe to conclude that of the 120,000 evacuees, most submitted claims under the American-Japanese Claims Act and received compensation. A total of over $37 million was paid in compensation pursuant to this act. And that was back when a dollar was worth closer to a dollar.

The American-Japanese Claims Act did not include every item of damages that was or could have been suggested. It did, however, address the hardships visited upon persons of Japanese ancestry in a comprehensive, considered manner, taking into account individual needs and losses. This effort to correct injustice to individuals was in keeping with our Nation's best tradition of individual rather than collective response, and it was more contemporaneous with the injuries to the claimants than would be any payments at this late date.

Mr. President, in 1956, Congress considered legislation that challenged the adequacy of the claims settlements provided pursuant to the 1948 act. The bill would have liberalized the relief provisions of the act by granting expanded compensation for certain losses. Congress specifically rejected the proposal because it "would substantially reopen the entire project." (H.R. Rept. 1809, 84th Cong., 2d sess., 9 (1956).)

Mr. President, nothing has changed since that time to justify this supplemental payment to those who were relocated. The results of the settlement process under the act, long since completed, deserve to be accepted as a fair resolution of the claims involved. If it was inadequate, those inadequacies can and should be determined and resolved by the courts—not the Congress.

In 1972, Congress amended the Social Security Act so that Japanese-Americans over the age of 18 would be deemed to have earned and contributed to the Social Security system during their detention. The Federal civil service retirement provisions were amended in 1978 to allow Japanese-Americans credit for the time spent in detention after the age of 18.

Mr. President, what we hear today are very eloquent declarations about mistakes that were made. Mistakes are made, I guess, in every war.

But, BILL FRENZEL over at the House of Representatives, a couple of years ago summed up this issue perfectly when he said:

The committee is asking us to purge ourselves of somebody else's guilt with another generation's money.

That is about the size of it. I will say again I was reluctant to stand here today and make the point of order I am about to make because of my affection for DANNY and for SPARK, but I think the clean way to do it, is for the Senate to demonstrate that it knows what it is doing and why it is doing it.

Mr. President, there are a lot of people that we could get up and make emotional comments about for whom we have not created an entitlement. How about the veterans, who are waiting for hospital beds? They wait for the availability of discretionary funds. We have not created an entitlement for research to help babies born with AIDS. They wait for the availability of discretionary funds. These payments we are funding today are exactly what BILL FRENZEL said. They were, an attempt to "purge ourselves of somebody else's guilt with another generation's money."

Mr. President, I make the point of order that the committee amendment on page 41, lines 4 to 10, creates a new entitlement for a fiscal year for which there is no budget resolution and thereby violates section 303(a) of the Budget Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Hawaii and myself I move under section 904 of the Budget Act to waive section 303(a) of the Budget Act. I am most grateful to the Senator from North Carolina, not requiring a rollcall on this motion to waive; is that correct?

Mr. HELMS. I thought it was automatic.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Well, I do not interpret the rules but——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not automatic.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Does the Senator want a rollcall?

Mr. HELMS. I think we should, Senator.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Final passage? Or on this my colleague wants a rollcall?

Mr. HELMS. I already notified Mr. Greene I would not require a rollcall on final passage.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I appreciate that very much. If anybody else wants to have a rollcall on final passage please let us know because we do not know of any request on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate the question occurs on the motion to waive section 303(a) of the Budget Act.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A simple majority is required to waive section 303(a). The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. The chairman of the Budget Committee may wish to be heard. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There being no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Carolina. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERREY). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced, yeas 74, nays 22, as follows:

NOT VOTING—4

Armstrong	Jeffords

So the motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to consideration of the committee amendment on page 41 was agreed to.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 41, LINES 4 THROUGH 10

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment on page 41, lines 4 through 10. Is there any further debate?

The excepted committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the excepted committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, we can clear quite a few amendments but we have two that will require votes. As I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania, he will agree to a 20-minute time limit.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 18, LINES 4 THROUGH 16

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will withhold, the question now is on agreeing to the amendment on page 18, lines 4 through 16. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The excepted committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the excepted committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, we have worked our best for as little inconvenience to Senators as possible. The Senator from Pennsylvania has agreed to a 20-minute time agreement on his amendment. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY] is now conferring with the Senator from New Mexico to see if we can have a time limit on that amendment. Other than those two, there is still a question about a final passage vote. I thought we might have cleared that.

Mr. RUDMAN. If the Senator will yield, I thought we had cleared no vote on final passage but there has been a question raised. In the next 15 or 20 minutes I hope to have an answer.

Mr. HOLLINGS. By the time we vote then on the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, we will know.

AMENDMENT NO. 899

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] proposes an amendment numbered 899.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 21, line 3, strike "$137,034,000" and insert "$162,034,000";

On page 21, line 4, strike "$5,000,000" and insert "$30,000,000 for construction"; and

On page 28, line 18, strike "$401,332,000" and insert "$263,832,000".

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this amendment has no budget impact.

I have 10 minutes and I would like my 10 minutes to start from the time there is order.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Will the distinguished Senator yield and let us get an agreement. I ask unanimous consent that time on this particular amendment be limited to 20 minutes, with 10 minutes on a side, with no second-degree amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this amendment seeks to transfer funds for holding Federal prisoners after conviction, for holding Federal prisoners before trial. There is no budget impact. This does not violate or deal with the drug agreement because it applies to all Federal prisoners. Technically, Mr. President, it is necessary to transfer $138 million from prison construction in order to get $25 million for the U.S. Marshals Service, although both are for construction because one is calculated at 55 percent in outlays and one is calculated at 10 percent in outlays. When both are for prison construction, Mr. President, that obviously makes no sense. And the marshals' program doubtless has a bigger outlay ratio because it deals with renovation.

So I think dollar for dollar this will work out so there are really no differences. But on the mathematics it has to be scored as I have just represented.

Mr. President, there are many Federal prisoners held pretrial in State facilities which causes massive overcrowding. In Philadelphia for example, there are Federal prisoners detained. In Pittsburgh, for example, there are spaces for Federal prisoners.

That means we cannot hold in those facilities people who ought to be detained for State crimes, State convictions. This is very important because if you deal with just 150 spaces, and you deal with career criminals who are known to commit as many as 700 crimes a year, when you deal with 150 prisoners you are dealing with 100,000 crimes.

I regret the necessity for advancing this amendment on a Friday afternoon at 1:20. But this issue of prison construction is something that this Senator has worked on for the last 9 years. I have tried to get this worked out with the managers and cannot, although we have been discussing it for many days, and therefore I am taking this issue to a rollcall vote.

It is simply unfair when you have Federal prisoners taking up space in State facilities which adds to State crime. We are supposed to be putting up $1.4 billion on prisons and part of it ought to go to pretrial detention so the Federal Government pays for Federal prisoners.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania is a member of our committee, a very valuable member, and certainly a leader on the Judiciary Committee itself with respect to Federal prisons. He has worked long and hard for State and local facilities, and we need them in South Carolina as well as Pennsylvania.

The fact of the matter is, though the Federal need for prison beds is even greater than the local and State. Federal prison facilities have what you call 165 percent oversaturation. The State systems have 135 percent. So the problem is great at the State level, but the amendment addresses not construction at all. It is a cooperative agreement program that we have with the States that is made with the U.S. Marshals Service. And to give you some idea and flavor for this, to keep prisoners who are awaiting trial, this is mainly in the county detention facilities. The CAP Program is designed to assist only those facilities that are essential to support the Federal courts. It is not to cover the cost of housing local and State prisoners.

Program funding and staff resources are limited and, accordingly, construction and expansion projects are restricted to areas where the Marshals Service is encountering difficulties in obtaining adequate detention space for Federal prisoners. And by fully funding the President's request for the Cooperative Agreement Program, we are supporting awards like Providence, RI, with $1 million; Akron, OH, $600,000; Columbus, $300,000; Grand Rapids, $1 million; Oxford, $500,0000; Louisville, KY, $500,000; Madison, WI, $250,000.

You see, in that cooperative agreement there are minimal amounts given. It is done based on greatest need by the U.S. Marshals Service. It is not any kind of $25 million for 750 beds in one State. Look what the Senator from Pennsylvania really does. We are trying our dead level best to leap forward in the construction of prison facilities so we can take care of our own and will not have to detain them in your county facilities.

Incidentially, there is a surprising coincidence here. This bill before us now has two Federal Prison complexes in it, which the Bureau of Prisons has requested, one complex in Colorado and one where? In eastern Pennsylvania, Montgomery, PA, at the Allenwood site. What would happen if this amendment passes? We would cut that Federal complex in eastern Pennsylvania, which is actually three prisons—a maximum, medium, and minimum—and which will hold 1,950 beds, in order for him to get his 720 beds for a State and local facility.

Another point about this is that it is not part of the drug agreement. Under the leadership agreement, we are going to be forced to table this amendment because it is not within the agreement. We put every dollar that was requested by the President under this cooperative agreement program—$5 million in this bill and $10 million more in the drug amendments. But, back to this amendment, I do not want to say you cut your nose off to spite your face, but I can tell you for 720 beds, much, much later you are going to lose what we are trying to do for Pennsylvania.

We recognize the problem there and in other parts of the country. The 1,950 bed complex has already been approved without an earmark in the Bureau of Prisons budget right this minute. But, that is where he is going to transfer all of that money out.

I reserve the balance of my time.

I yield to our ranking member before I move.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank the chairman.

Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina has said it all. But the real issue that we are faced with here—I am not saying we might have worked it out otherwise—the thing that really makes it impossible is the different spend-out rates.

Whether the Senator from Pennsylvania, my good friend, agrees or not, the Congressional Budget Office advises us to get this $25 million that he wants for, I am sure a very legitimate purpose, requires a transfer of $137 million of budget authority for the prison account.

People might wonder why that is. The why is very simple. We have to put a lot of budget authority in this prison account. But it spends out at a very low rate, about 10 percent, whereas the Cooperative Agreement Program spends out at a higher rate, roughly 50 percent. So we have to cancel 137 to get 25.

No. 2, to the extent that we can complete this enormous prison building program that the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from New Hampshire have been working on now for 3 years, to the extent we can do that, we are going to take the pressure off local and State prisons to house Federal detainees.

For that reason, I must very regrettably—and I am not happy about it—but I am going to have to join my friend from South Carolina in moving to table this at the appropriate time.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. The Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. SPECTER. How much time do I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Six minutes thirty-two seconds.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have listened to the argument—Mr. President, can we have order? We are trying to have a short time agreement, but it is very hard to make this argument if the Senate is not in order. We only have 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am at a loss to understand the arguments which have been advanced in opposition to this amendment. When the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire talks about the differences in spend-out, it just does not make any sense if they are Federal prisons to hold prisoners after conviction or if they are State prisons to hold Federal prisoners before conviction.

The spend-out is the same, and CBO cannot justify one at 55 percent and one at 10 percent. That is another part of the mysticism of CBO. But I think it is fair and accurate to say that the spend-out will in reality be about the same. Whatever the figures are, however, we have adjusted them so there is no budget difference.

When the distinguished Senator from South Carolina talks about another prison facility in Pennsylvania, I have to disagree with him. My face and my nose are not an issue, thankfully.

What is really involved here is a Federal responsibility to hold Federal prisoners before trial. Right now in my State, and in the Senator's State from South Carolina, the Federal Government is not discharging that responsibility. We have many Federal prisoners awaiting trial in State facilities in Pennsylvania, and for every 150 of these detainees, it amounts to more than 100,000 crimes a year.

We have a lot of money in this bill. We have a lot of money up for prison construction—a total, if you go through all of it, of $1.4 billion. There is absolutely no reason why we cannot work out the mathematics to provide 25 measly million dollars out of $1.4 billion to move ahead with this U.S. marshals program which will not be just for Pennsylvania. It will be for the whole country to take care of this Federal responsibility.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, right to the point, it is not just a little mathematical problem. The Congressional Budget Office is not any mysticism. Try to build the prison. The first thing you try to do is get the site selection studies. Thereupon, you get your environmental impact studies. Then you get your notification for the contracts. A year has passed. But if you put $1 billion in like we have, and get caught up on prisons by the second year—if you allow it, fine. You are really moving into high gear and you have done it all.

That money is really spent out on the building of Federal prisons. That is why you have the large budget authority.

We do not put construction money in this cooperative agreement for State and local governments to expand bedspace for State and local offenders. CAP assists State and local governments in renovation, upgrading, expansion, and/or construction of detention facilities. In return, the State or local government guarantees bedspace to the U.S. Marshals Service for a predetermined period of time.

Now all of a sudden, he wants to get construction for his own little prison for 720 beds and cancel in his own backyard 1,950 beds, which would take care of his overcrowding problem and that of many of the States around him. And it is beyond the drug agreement. I retain the remainder of my time.

Mr. SPECTER. How much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes, twenty-seven seconds.

Mr. SPECTER. The distinguished Senator from South Carolina is wrong. When we are talking about a prison facility for 720 beds, he is talking about Greene County, PA, a county adjacent to West Virginia and to Ohio. The local officials will not be financed out of Federal money, except to the extent that there are beds reserved for Federal prisoners. The Greene County officials are going to pay for the vast majority of that prison. All that there will be a Federal responsibility for is the limited number of Federal prisoners who will have beds there.

Now, my concern about this issue was triggered by Greene County. When I took a look at what was happening with one county in my State, which is near Pittsburgh, where there are many Federal detainees who have had spaces in the State prison, I saw that the problem existed nationwide. This is not a parochial interest. The amendments and bills that this Senator has offered over the course of the past 9 years are for the nationwide problem of prisons, which will affect South Carolina as well.

Where you have a spend-out rate of 10 percent, which is not being used, or if the spend-out rate is 55 percent, let us move ahead and use these resources and take these violent criminals off the streets. It is simply unfair for the Federal Government to put this burden on the States.

Really, Mr. President, we ought to be doing it very differently. The whole problem of interstate crime and career criminals is a Federal responsibility as it has evolved in modern times, and there ought to be a greater Federal sharing and a greater Federal contribution to help States; but that is not involved here. I am just saying that the States ought not be subsidizing the Federal Government. That is the import of this amendment, and it makes good sense in terms of law enforcement. It may not make good mathematics for CBO, but CBO does not commit crimes, except as they may mislead us on the real facts here—perhaps a little fraud. That is not the issue. The issue is violent criminals.

I come back to a basic point that when you have 150 Federal spaces taken up in my State, that means 100,000 crimes a year. I think it has to be pressed. I just wish my colleagues were here in greater number or comprehended the import of this issue. I think I would win decisively. I am not unaware of the impact of the chairman and the ranking member on a motion to table. This is ongoing, so far a 9-year fight, and I intend to make the battle today, tomorrow, and next year to try to get some sense into our program of prison construction which, unfortunately, we do not have today. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has 1 minute, 20 seconds left. The Senator from South Carolina has 3½ minutes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator is on the Judiciary Committee. There is no authorization for this. If he wants to authorize a program solely for Federal financing of State and local prison construction, he is in the best position in the world to do it, and he knows that. He knows that prison construction is not authorized. Funding for State and local prisons is.

This is under the cooperative agreement between the States on a financing basis, taking care of these prisoners. We put up the money to do it. We put it in that bill to relieve the pressure on Pennsylvania and all the several States. What he is going to do is cancel out $137 million for his $25 million new construction in unauthorized programs. That is exactly what he is doing, and, I repeat, it goes beyond the drug agreement. I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SPECTER. I will say it one more time, Mr. President. This amendment is not for State and local prison construction. It is for beds to hold the Federal prisoners. There is one point that I agree with the Senator from South Carolina about. I agree there is no authorization for my proposal, but then I have to tell him there is no authorization for his.

The Judiciary Committee has not authorized any prison construction. The crime bill has not moved out of the Judiciary Committee. While there is no authorization for my program, I have to advise Senator HOLLINGS there is no authorization for his. We are now talking about the way to deal with crime on the street.

Mr. President, I say the way to deal with crime on the street is to get these detention facilities and have the Federal Government assume its responsibility to take these violent criminals off the street in their housing, so the States can use their housing for their own crime problems. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has 12 seconds left.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, when you get in a debate with a Philadelphia lawyer—the authorization for prison construction, yes, is in that Judiciary Committee bill.

There has never been any authorization for what he is talking about. He is just pulling technicality and weaving confusion and hoping to swap $25 million for $137 million and cut out a new Federal complex in Pennsylvania that is going to take three times the number of prison beds away from Pennsylvania. And, it is beyond the drug agreement.

We can stand on both sides and support it. But, let us uphold the drug agreement, and not only give the President all he wants but all we can afford to add under this particular provision.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, how much time do we have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute 37 seconds.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, let me make one other point, so nobody gets the idea that the big bad Federal Government is doing terrible things to the States. This program is used to pay for local prisons, to counties, States, whatever, to house Federal prisoners. If you think it is a big program, it is not. I believe it is about $15 million this year, and we may not use it all.

So let us not get the impression that there are thousands of prisoners out there being held in detention centers for long periods of time and that the States and local governments are paying for them. That is not to say that the Senator from Pennsylvania does not have a point. I think he does. But we have to set priorities here, and make no mistake, when Federal prisoners are in local detention centers, we pay for it.

Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware wishes 15 seconds.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I think my friend from Pennsylvania is correct; there is no authorization for any of this out of the Judiciary Committee. Let us get that straight. He is also correct that the Federal Government should be doing a lot more than it is doing, in my view, to help the States. He is incorrect in that we have an agreement which he thinks this would violate as part of the compromise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The Senator from Pennsylvania, 11 seconds.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my friend from Delaware. Being correct on two out of three is not bad. I would submit that the weight of logic is on my side. It is a pleasure to debate with my colleagues, and I accept the compliment from one of the most distinguished debaters in this body, Senator HOLLINGS, when he, at least during the course of this time, has called attention to the status of a Philadelphia lawyer. I thank the Chair.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] and the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

NOT VOTING—6

Armstrong	Danforth	Jeffords
Bumpers	Gramm	Matsunaga

So, the motion to lay on the table (amendment No. 899) was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I could have the attention of the Members of the Senate. It is my understanding from the managers that there is one remaining amendment which will require a rollcall vote. That is an amendment by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY].

I have discussed this with Mr. SHELBY and Mr. BINGAMAN and others who are interested in the issue.

I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that when the Shelby amendment is offered there by 30 minutes of debate on that amendment, equally divided between Senator SHELBY and Senator BINGAMAN.

Mr. SHELBY. If the leader will yield, could you make that 20 minutes apiece instead of 15 minutes? Did the leader say 30 minutes apiece?

Mr. MITCHELL. I said 30 minutes total.

Mr. SHELBY. Could you make it 40 minutes, because I have some other people who have told me that they wanted to speak on this. That would be 20 minutes apiece.

Mr. MITCHELL. Of course, the Senator could object to 30 minutes and insist on 40. I am trying to accommodate the interests of as many Senators as possible.

Does the Senator from New Mexico wish 40 minutes, as well?

Mr. BINGAMAN. We would defer to the majority leader. Obviously, the additional time would be helpful. We do have a few additional speakers. I do not object.

If the Senator from Alabama would wish additional time, I would like it, as well.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I modify my request to request that there be 40 minutes of debate, equally divided, with the agreement in the usual form, the time to be controlled by Senator SHELBY and Senator BINGAMAN or their designees; that there be no second-degree amendment in order; and that upon the completion of the debate or yielding back of the time, the vote occur without any intervening further action on the Shelby amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I might say to Senators, it is my understanding from the managers that no rollcall vote is required on final passage and there are no further amendments which require rollcall votes.

Accordingly, this will be—should be, unless someone acts in a manner contrary to that which we have been advised—this should be the last rollcall vote on this bill this afternoon. Mr. President, I modify my request to make sure the vote will be on or in relation to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. There will be no rollcall votes on Monday. The Senate will be in session. We will be considering the nomination of Mr. Zappala to be Ambassador to Spain. It will be debated on Monday. The vote on that will occur on Tuesday in accordance with my previous discussions with the distinguished Republican leader.

I yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. As far as I know, there are no requests for rollcall vote on final passage on this side. I will be in a position before the next vote to so state for certain.

Mr. RUDMAN. I just want to advise the majority leader I had understood the Senator from Utah, Senator HATCH, was considering offering an amendment which would require a rollcall vote.

I cannot say whether that is probable. I will say it probably is not. But if he is in the hearing of my voice, it would be nice to have the Senator from Utah advise us whether or not we can rely on that representation, made in good faith by the majority leader, or whether or not we may have another vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator. I hope very much we can proceed without a further vote on that.

Mr. President, I further modify my unanimous-consent request regarding the Shelby amendment to make sure that no points of order are waived by the agreement.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Reserving my right to object, may I ask the majority leader whether or not there will be others of the Ambassadors considered on Monday, other than Mr. Zappala?

Mr. MITCHELL. No.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. There are others on the agenda that we would like to move along.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that. I will just say to the Senator, there are many that have been the subject of holds on both sides. There are seven Ambassadors on that list who I have been trying to get approval of for over a week but who have been delayed at the request of a Republican Senator. I hope very much I will be permitted to push the President's nominees through on Monday.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I wonder if I might ask the leader for a further clarification?

The Senator from Alaska is aware Zappala will be taken up Tuesday for a vote. But I would point out that Della Newman and Sembler also came out of committee at the same time as Zappala's, I might say a package, if I might use the word—literally.

I assume there is action not to include the other two?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct. The fact that they are reported out of committee on the same day, they can be a package for reporting, but it does not make them a package for action on the floor.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I have another question about the logistics, by the Senator from Alaska.

Since the Columbus Day recess is beginning at the end of next week, the Senator from Alaska has to make some travel plans; if it is the disposition of the leader to probably at least attempt to go out next Friday? Initiate the recess?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, it is not my intention. I think it is very likely we will be in session next weekend.

I am going to discuss with the distinguished Republican leader the question about the recess. Many Senators have spoken to me. We have to evaluate that in the light of possible sequestration and the need to act on reconciliation. I hope to have an announcement in that regard by next Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Might I ask the leader, is the recess itself in doubt?

Mr. MITCHELL Yes.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I had been under the impression that had been clarified, but evidently that is not the case.

Mr. MITCHELL All I said is that it is in doubt.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I understand what that means, Mr. Leader.

Mr. RUDMAN. I have now been told that Senator HATCH is not going to require a rollcall vote, but he is on the floor. I wondered whether we can direct the question to him directly?

If I might have the attention of the Senator from Utah? Are the managers correct, the Senator from Utah will not require a rollcall vote on any amendment to be offered to this bill?

Mr. HATCH. With the indulgence of my colleagues, I am not happy with the adminstration's recently announced position on emigration from the Soviet Union.

I understand that prior to September 1988, Jews and other religious minorities in the Soviet Union seeking refugee satus were presumed to be persecuted or have a "well-founded fear of persecution." Many of these persons traveled on Israeli visas to Vienna, and then to Rome, where they were determined to be refugees and opted to come to the United States. Moreover, the United States accepted virtually every Jew and other religious minority from the Soviet Union seeking entry to our country. As the Washington Post noted yesterday "For years when Soviet emigration policy was considered repressive, American efforts were almost solely directed at pressing Moscow to relax the restrictions and then processing as many visas as possible."

Since September 1988, however, the United States ceased presuming that all Jews and other religious minorities in the Sovet Union are persecuted or have a "well-founded fear of persecution." As a consequence, a significant number of Soviet Jews and others have been denied refugee status, I am hopeful that a review of these cases will result in their readjudication as refugees. Moreover, the administration plans to admit 50,000 refugees from the Soviet Union during fiscal year 1990, although, according to administration representatives, it is possible that between 125,000 and 200,000 persons in the Soviet Union may seek such status. Finally, I understand that the United States intends to require, on and after October 1, 1989, that all Soviet citizens seeking entry to the United States as refugees make their applications in Moscow rather than Rome.

I hope new refugee policies are not predicated on the recent developments in the Soviet Union regarding glasnost and perestroika and the assumption those developments are much more significant than they currently are. These very recent changes, although welcome, do not alter the essentially totalitarian nature of that regime. It is a regime that denies basic human rights to its own people, including even a semblance of true religious liberty.

Religious or ethnic persecution does not mean only physical harassment, the midnight knock on the door, and jailings. When a believer is unable to go to church or synagogue because government policy severely restricts or forbids the construction or use of such religious houses of worship, that is persecution. The inability of a group of believers to train religious leaders and teachers such as priests and rabbis, because of government policy, is persecution. The inability to obtain religious articles and items needed for prayer, such as bibles, prayer shawls, yarmulkees, because of government policy, that is persecution. The inability of Jewish parents to send their children to religious schools to learn Hebrew, to learn the ancient customs, traditions, and history of their people, because of government policy, that, too, is persecution. In short, the inability of people—Jews, Christians, and Moslems—not only to practice their religion freely but to live in an environment where they are free even to become aware of, and explore, their religion, because of cumulative government policies, is persecution. Moreover, private anti-semi groups, such as Pamyat, have become more active.

In my opinion, any believer in God is a persecuted person in the Soviet Union. Accordingly, I believe that Soviet Jews and other religious believers such as Evangelical Christians must continue to be presumed to be persecuted or have a well-founded fear of persecution and should be granted refugee status. The United States can still undertake a case-by-case review consistent with a presumption of refugee status—a presumption that is rebuttable. If a Soviet Jew is a relative of a government official and has had a privileged existence, perhaps the presumption is rebutted. Asking questions to elicit this type of rebuttal information is not precluded under this type of presumption. But, in my opinion, we need not ask Soviet Jews, individual by individual, to demonstrate they are persecuted persons or have a well-founded fear of persecution, given what we know about conditions in the Soviet Union. I believe this approach is fully consistent with the Refugee Act of 1980.

Further, I am deeply distressed by the prospect that, suddenly, the United States appears willing to turn away some of those who qualify as refugees and seek entry to the United States from the Soviet Union. As I mentioned earlier, administration representatives anticipate that as many as 125,000 to 200,000 persons will seek refugee status in fiscal year 1990. Moscow embassy officials say the number may even reach 300,000. While not all will qualify for refugee status, it is likely that at least 50,000 will so qualify, with or without an appropriate presumption. Since there are various priorities among refugees, including priorities based on family connections, quite clearly some Soviet Jews, Pentacostals, and other religious minorities are going to be prevented from entering the United States in favor of those with a higher priority. Parole status, which does not carry with it financial assistance, may accommodate another portion of the applicants, but tens of thousands of religious believers may be left behind in the Soviet Union.

I recognize that, today, Soviet Jews have a haven in Israel, and I am thankful for that. This haven was not available 50 years ago, the last time European Jews sought entry to the United States to escape from tyranny. But the existence of this other haven should not, in my view, affect American policy. That policy, based on our fundamental values, and our long-standing policy to elicit greater Soviet emigration, should be to accept those persecuted persons who currently wish to come here from the Soviet Union, including every Jew and other religious believer. I understand that the administration has been earnestly working in good faith to formulate a humane refugee policy for the next year. I am prepared to work with the administration to find the resources to absorb a larger increase from the Soviet Union.

Finally, while I understand the desire to save the cost of care and maintenance of processing Soviet nationals seeking refugee status in Vienna and Rome, I have serious reservations about processing all future applicants in Moscow. I believe there is a serious risk that many religious believers will be too fearful to come forward and make the case that they are persecuted or have a well-founded fear of persecution—right under the noses of Soviet authorities—especially if the administration does not reinstate the presumption that they are refugees. These people will have to wait in the Soviet Union for adjudication as to whether they are persecuted or have a well-founded fear of persecution—not a very comfortable position. Plus, the likely backlog in these applications could make the wait a long one. I might add that many applications are to be processed in a processing center in the Washington, DC, area. As the Washington Post aptly states, "Then Washington, relying on the erratic Soviet postal system, will mail notices to those who qualify for interviews in Moscow." This Senator would be uneasy if the system relied solely on the U.S. postal system; reliance on the Soviet postal system is even less reassuring.

According to the Associated Press story in yesterday's Washington Times, "(U.S. officials) said it is possible that people who face persecution in the Soviet Union and therefore qualify for refugee status may fall through the cracks." I think that is an understatement.

Moreover, I am concerned that private agencies that assist refugees will not have the same freedom to operate in Moscow as they do in Vienna and Rome. Further, I sincerely believe that we are proceeding far too hastily. The switch to processing future applications in Moscow will not be done in orderly fashion if the date is October 1. There are insufficient personnel and available space to process the applications. Further, has anyone had a chance to review the new forms being used in the proposed new process? Have any of the private groups had a chance to review it? More time is needed to let people in the Soviet Union know of the change. When we offered amnesty to illegal aliens in this country, there was a 6-month period before processing began. Advertising and outreach were undertaken. This is not available in the Soviet Union. The new policy was announced in Moscow earlier this week—less than 1 week from its actual implementation. Wednesday night, NBC news reported from Moscow: "In the visa line, confusion and fear." One Soviet Jew from Moldavia told the reporter that Moldavians had been telling the Jews to get out. The film clip showed brave people walking right past three or four burly persons in uniform in order to get into the Embassy.

So I was going to bring up an amendment that would address part of my concern.

This amendment addresses, in part, one element of my concern by delaying the closeout of the Vienna and Rome processing centers and the consolidation of refugee processing in Moscow. It requires that persons with refugee applications dated on or before November 30, 1989, must still be processed in Vienna and Rome. During that time, I would have hoped that the administration would give further consideration to this matter. I am not sure a mere delay is satisfactory; I believe maintaining at least one way out of the Soviet Union located in the free world may be desirable.

But I have run into a lot of obstacles in offering the amendment. A number of my colleagues who are as concerned about Soviet emigration as I am have asked me not to offer the amendment. So I have decided not to do so.

We then tried to come up with another amendment that would have facilitated additional resources to Israel for refugee resettlement. Such an amendment would have authorized the United States Government to guarantee private loans by financial institutions to the Government of Israel, not to exceed $1 billion to be used solely for the purpose of refugee resettlement. Such a guarantee would allow Israel to absorb adequately the additional flow of refugees.

But due to the late hour, and because it is the last day of the fiscal year, I do not want to inconvenience any colleague. But let me put the Senate on notice, and I would like to ask the majority leader, in the privacy of his Chamber to think about this.

I would like before the end of this year to resolve this problem one way or the other. This is not because of pressure of anybody within the Jewish community, but because I believe we have a moral obligation to do so.

I would like to have a vote on my loan guarantee proposal, to help bring these people out of the Soviet Union during this open window. This is one of the few times that we have an open window where people can leave the Soviet Union. This is important because I think that window will close within the near future.

If this window closes, we will have deprived a lot of people of the opportunity to seek freedom. I would like the majority leader to work with me and see if we can find some way of coming up with a freestanding bill that pleases everybody around here and solves this problem.

So, having made this statement, I do not intend to slow this process down by any amendments today. I will withdraw my right to bring up amendments on this bill.

I also want to make it clear for the record that neither I nor my staff have talked with anybody who is an interested party in this matter prior to coming up with this proposal. We are trying to solve a problem that I feel strongly about.

I cannot do it today. I would like my friend, the majority leader, and my friend, the minority leader, to help me on this. If we could bring up something that would resolve this problem and resolve, I think, the concerns of many of us with regard to the State Department's approach here, I will be happy to do that, hopefully, with unanimous support.

With that, I am sorry to take that much time, but I wanted to explain my position.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank my friend from Utah very much. We do appreciate his willingness to allow us to go forward. We certainly understand the concern, and I know many of us share that concern.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, what was the unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are still 40 minutes on the Shelby amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. I am sorry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I wish to address a matter related to the State Department portion of this bill and to support a point made by Senator HATCH.

As the world advocate for human rights, we have a duty to assure ourselves that any changes in our refugee policies must only come after intense scrutiny and careful deliberation. We must not compromise our traditional role of setting high standards of human rights.

Tragically, scrutiny and deliberation are lacking in the administration's refugee policy for fiscal year 1990.

Notice of the October 1 implementation date was served to the Senate on the very late date of September 15, a mere 15 days prior to the implementation date. This same notice was served on the people of the Soviet Union just this Tuesday, a mere 5 days before the effective date. It takes 6 days just to obtain a visa. And who can attest to the effectiveness of this notice. There are too many unanswered questions; there are too many unknowns in our administration's programs.

First, how will the operation of the refugee processing on Soviet soil affect the ability of applicants to freely apply? This policy forces emigres to not only prove their life long persecution but do so in the very country that oppresses them.

Second, how will the U.S. Embassy operate to accommodate the influx of applicants? We have 20 officials in the Rome office, there only are 6 in Moscow with no commitment from the Soviets to increase that number.

Third, will INS officials be trained to understand and detect the persecution that many applicants have endured in their lives but are not cabable of expressing?

Fourth, will the voluntary agencies that operate in Rome and Vienna, which are crucial to the emigration process, be allowed to operate in Moscow? Probably because the Soviets do not like the idea of calling their people refugees and therefore do not want these agencies operating in their country.

Fifth, why is the refugee status denial rate in Moscow so high, as much as three times that of Rome and Vienna?

Sixth, how much are the real costs of processing Soviet refugees and can we afford to raise the ceiling if the costs are substantially lower than first reported?

Inadequate notice has left Congress between a rock and a hard place. Frankly, I resent the fact that we are faced with choosing between accepting the administration's proposal as is by October 1, or racking up millions of dollars in expenses for which there are no allocations. At minimum, adequate notice of the administration's plans would have provided concerned Members of this Congress the opportunity to work with the administration and address the areas of concern we are now faced with.

Why didn't the administration notify us about these proposals sooner? Why haven't these very pivotal issues been addressed months ago?

On September 14, an official from the U.S. General Accounting Office testified that the voluntary agencies that help Soviets prepare their refugee applications, including a written statement of their reasons to emigrate, are not being allowed to operate in the Soviet Union. The GAO recognizes the crucial role these agencies play, yet on October 1, none of these agencies will be operating in Moscow and we have no indications that they ever will be able to operate there.

To ignore the manner in which the administration plans to implement these dramatic proposals is to jeopardize the destinies of thousands of people for whom this country has fought too hard and for too long.

I am well aware that an agreement has been reached between the administration and the advocacy groups. But, there are thousands of others—now in the Soviet Union—who are not parties to this agreement. Who speaks for them?

With these proposals, "let my people go" is a moot concept. How can I demand on behalf of constituents, that the Soviets release a family member trapped in the Soviet Union? What could I say? Let them go, but do not send them here? My fear is that for the first time, we've put a price tag on people fleeing persecution.

We should be extending the October 1 deadline and use this additional time to address the very vital human rights concerns these proposals raise. The United States must be accountable for its actions. The destinies of thousands of people and the victories born of the last 15 years of U.S. foreign policy deserve at least that much.

Mr. President, I rise to submit a statement that I would have made, in support of the amendment Senator HATCH considered offering to address the problems caused by the administration's changes in Soviet refugee policy for fiscal year 1990.

My Senate colleague from Utah, and I see very real problems in the administration's proposals as they represent a historic change in United States' policy concerning Soviet emigration. I intended to support his amendment and I was hopeful that we could make changes in those policies. I am sure that deciding not to offer the amendment was a very tough decision for the Senator from Utah to make. If he had offered it, and I urged him to do so up until the last minute, I would have spoken in favor of his amendment.

We are being very shortsighted in allowing these policies to be implemented. The reforms in the Soviet Union have not been tested or proven; we do not know how strong Gorbachev's position is as Soviet leader; we have no evidence that these reforms will last. Though we must continue to encourage these reforms, we must not be hasty in changes that deeply affect U.S. human rights policy. The doors of Soviet emigation may be open, but they could close overnight.

Mr. President, I do not know whether our Government took into account the various nature of Soviet society when implementing these policy changes. My perception from the annual refugee consultation hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary is that they did not.

New developments are taking place in the Soviet Union. We can be very thankful of those and take pride in knowing that we have played an integral role in influencing these new developments.

However, though this may be seen as a new era of good feeling and a warming of relations with the Soviets, we cannot be certain how long this era and these good feelings will last. Therefore, we must not base long-term policy on unknowns, though I fear that is precisely what we have done.

AMENDMENT NO. 900

(Purpose: To prohibit use of certain funds to count illegal aliens in the United States for purposes of reapportionment)

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself, Senator HELMS, Senator HEFLIN, Senator DOLE, Senator HEINZ, Senator GRASSLEY, Senator LOTT, Senator HATCH, and Senator COCHRAN, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY], for himself, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. DOLE, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. LOTT, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. COCHRAN, proposes an amendment numbered 900.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . None of the funds appropriated or made available by this Act to the Bureau of the Census shall be used to count aliens in the United States in violation of the immigration laws for purposes of subsection (b) of section 141 of title 13, United States Code.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, the issue that is the subject of this amendment has been debated on the floor already this year. All Senators are aware of the prevailing arguments: The Senate by a vote of 58 to 41 voted in favor of an amendment that I offered to Senate bill 358, the legal immigration bill. The prior Senate-passed amendment would direct the Secretary of Commerce to make such adjustments in total population figures as may be necessary and feasible using such methods and procedures as the Secretary determines appropriate in order that aliens in the United States in violation of the immigration laws not be counted in tabulating population for purposes of reapportionment of the U.S. House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the Senate has already gone on record that illegal aliens shall not be part of the tabulation of total population figures for purposes of apportionment of the U.S. House of Representatives. This position has withstood a point of order that it was unconstitutional by a vote of 56 to 43 right here in this Chamber. A majority of the Senate, therefore, has affirmed that it is constitutionally proper to exclude from census figures for purposes of reapportionment, or apportioment of the undocumented aliens there.

For over 10 years, the Congress has attempted to get a vote on this issue. Earlier this year, this was the only vote we were able to get, and the Senate voted overwhelmingly in favor of that. We all know the results of the vote, as I just stated.

Basically, Mr. President, this is a question of fairness; it goes to the heart of our form of government. The question is, should legal residents continuously be denied proper and undiluted representation at the Federal level because of the influx of illegal aliens in the tabulation of total population figures for purposes of the House of Representatives apportionment? That is the question, Mr. President. That is the issue and that is the concern today before the U.S. Senate.

A vote against my amendment can reasonably be interpreted as a vote against the proper representation of individuals at the Federal level. I believe that the message is clear. I must reiterate that the amendment that I offered on behalf of myself and a number of other Senators is not designed to be an anti-immigration proposal. It is not designed, explicitly or implicitly, to hinder the legal immigration process. However, Mr. President, it is designed to ensure proper apportionment so that all citizens will receive the opportunity to be heard. The opportunity for active participation in governing through an undiluted ballot box is part and parcel of government in America. Consequently, Mr. President, to realize this opportunity, the undocumented alien must not be counted for apportionment purposes for the U.S. House of Representatives.

My proposal does not impede upon the constitutional protections that have been legislatively sanctioned and judicially recognized to apply to undocumented aliens as well as to citizens and resident aliens. The mere inclusion of illegal aliens in census figures for the House of Repesentatives apportionment purposes violates the notion of self-government and, Mr. President, eradicates the community's process of political self-definition.

This occurs when affected States' voting strength is weakened and qualified voters are placed in an impracticable position vis-a-vis qualified voters of States with a large undocumented alien population. Thus, improper apportionment of the U.S. House of Representatives deprives citizens of their right to self-determination through the ballot box.

Mr. President, my proposal is simple in structure. It upholds our form of government. As our Nation prepares for the 1990 census, it is important that fairness and equity not fall by the wayside in our assessment of demographics and our then consequent reapportionments of the House of Representatives.

I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the amendment by the Senator from Alabama.

The Shelby-Helms amendment instructs the Census Bureau not to include illegal aliens in the census count. For some absurd reason, the Census Bureau has decided to count illegal aliens in the 1990 census.

Mr. President, we passed a similar amendment in July of this year by 58 to 41. However, the underlying bill, the Immigration Reform Act of 1989, did not become law. So we have one last chance to avoid a grave injustice.

Mr. President, the Census Bureau policy jeopardizes the constitutional right of North Carolina citizens to fair and equal representation.

If the Census Bureau counts illegal aliens, the citizens of North Carolina risk losing a congressional seat. We lose a congressional Representative just because some bureaucrats at the Census Bureau think the Constitution requires them to count illegal aliens.

Mr. President, illegal aliens do not have the right to vote. So why should they have the right to determine the makeup of our Government?

If illegal aliens are counted, States like California will gain a seat at North Carolina's expense. Therefore, Californians will have proportionally more congressional representation than North Carolina. They will have more votes in Congress thanks to people breaking the law and entering as illegal aliens.

I simply do not believe that our Founding Fathers ever intended to let people who cannot vote and who break the law determine the political makeup of our Government. As Judge Noonan pointed out, if a foreign army invaded our country on census day, we would not count them in the census.

Nothing in the Constitution requires the counting of illegal aliens in the census.

As Senator HATCH explained during the debate in July, the Constitution speaks of "persons" in the sense of legal persons, not illegal. If the Constitution stands for anything it stands for legality—not illegality.

Mr. President, the amendment by the Senator from Alabama makes sense, it is fair and it should be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Alabama, Senator SHELBY, and my distinguished colleague from North Carolina, Senator HELMS.

COMPOUNDING THE PROBLEM

Now, we are all familiar with the problem of illegal immigration. And we heard all about this problem last July, when we passed the immigration bill under the able leadership of Senators KENNEDY and SIMPSON.

But we do not have to compound this problem. We do not have to compound this problem by mindlessly lumping millions of illegal aliens in the 1990 census. We do not have to compound this problem by ripping off the States—some of whom will lose congressional seats because of the inclusion of illegal aliens in the census.

Unfortunately, the established policy of the Census Bureau is to count every person in this country without making a single adjustment for illegal aliens. The Census Bureau intends to continue this policy through 1990.

With all due respect to the Census Bureau—and there are many fine people who work at the Bureau—this policy simply does not make any sense. It violates the constitutional principle of "one man, one vote." And it's just plain unfair to those Americans who live in this country—and live here legally.

A SIMPLE SOLUTION

Now, last July, Senators SHELBY and HELMS offered an amendment to the immigration bill that provided a simple and straightforward solution to this problem. This amendment—which was passed by the Senate—requires the Secretary of Commerce to use tabulating procedures that are both feasible and appropriate to ensure that illegal aliens are not counted in the census for purposes of reapportionment. This is a sound solution that will restore some fairness to the census and reapportionment process.

OUR LAST CHANCE

Unfortunately, the House has not yet acted on the immigration bill—and time is running out. As the distinguished Senator from Alabama pointed out, if we do not act now—Congress will not have the opportunity to correct the census problem until the year 2000. We cannot afford to wait that long.

CONCLUSION

So I commend Senators SHELBY and HELMS for offering this amendment. And I urge my colleagues to support it with your vote.

The amendment will simply reaffirm the views expressed by the Senate last July.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, how much time do I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). The Senator has 12 minutes, 17 seconds.

Who yields time?

Mr. BINGAMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, let me yield myself 4 minutes and then the Senator from Massachusetts is prepared to speak as well, and the Senator from New York and the Senator from Illinois, in opposition to this amendment.

Mr. President, the proposed amendment has numerous problems with it, but the first and foremost threshold problem is that it violates our Constitution.

The proposed amendment would require the Census Bureau to exclude illegal immigrants from the official census count for purposes of apportionment. On the surface, this amendment may seem very reasonable, and its implications benign. But, from both a constitutional and a practical standpoint, that simply is not the case. The amendment would do great harm to the purposes and goals of the census and cause much fear and concern for many individuals. Further, the amendment would create real hardships for many communities.

Article I, section 2, clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution, as amended by section 2 of the 14th amendment, requires that the apportionment of the House of Representatives be based on the "whole number of persons". The term "persons" is used, I point out, and not the word "citizen" which is used in other parts of the Constitution. Clearly, it was the intent of the framers that every inhabitant be counted. While it is my understanding that a case to exclude illegal aliens from the census has not come before the Supreme Court, the Federal appeals courts have held that all persons should be included in the apportionment base. In Fair v. Klutznick, 486. F. Supp. 564 (D.D.C. 1980), the court stated that:

> The language of the Constitution is not ambiguous. It requires the counting of the "whole number of persons" for apportionment purposes, and while illegal aliens were not a component of the population at the time the Constitution was adopted, they are clearly "persons."

The Court further noted:

> We see little on which to base a conclusion that illegal aliens should now be excluded [from the apportionment base], simply because persons with their legal status were not an element of our population at the time our Constitution was written.

Therefore, it is my firm belief, that this amendment would be unconstitutional and that changing the method to a means other than counting the actual number of inhabitants would require a constitutional amendment.

On top of the constitutional issue, there are other problems with the amendment that must be addressed. Simply put, it is infeasible to carry out such an exclusion. The Census Bureau does not have the ability to effectively determine the legal status of its respondents, nor I would suggest, should it. In fact, it would be virtually impossible for census enumerators to determine if a person is legal or illegal and misrepresenting himself. The Census Bureau could not determine if all legal residents had been counted, because they would not know if each housing unit contained legal or illegal residents. Further, there are no figures about the number of illegal aliens in specific areas to accurately adjust the census count for the illegal aliens. These feasibility problems alone, can have serious and far-reaching effects on the accuracy of the census data. Without the means to determine legal status, but having a legal obligation to try, the Census Bureau would be forced to reduce its information collection efforts to a "best guess" endeavor. The resulting inaccuracy of the census figures would prove extremely detrimental to communities, States, and others who use the information collected for purposes other than apportionment. In other words, this amendment would base the apportionment of the House of Representatives and the distribution of billions of Federal aid dollars on a numerical fantasy.

A second problem that would be created by enactment of the amendment concerns its effects on minority outreach programs. Changing policy relating to citizenship questions would undermine the outreach progams that are vital to ensure an accurate count of the minority communities throughout the United States. In addition, it would undermine the public's perception about the purpose and confidentiality of the census.

The outreach programs are designed to encourage minority groups to respond to the census and that would be jeopardized if the questionnaire included a citizenship question. It is widely acknowledged that these minority groups are already fearful of the Government, and do not trust the confidentiality policies of the Census Bureau. If a citizenship question was added it would serve to confirm some of these fears, confusing legal residents, and causing illegals to avoid responding at all. This could further reduce the number of people in minority groups counted, in effect, contributing to the growing problems experienced in these historically undercounted populations. Additionally, a positive public perception of the uses of the census information is vital to a complete, accurate count of all groups. Knowing of the confusion that would result from a citizenship question, raises more questions about the validity of the information that would be collected should the amendment become law.

There is yet another problem that would result from the amendment, that deserves mention. The Census Bureau has, in preparation for the 1990 census, printed, labeled and assembled 106 million questionnaire packets. Those would no longer be usable. New questionnaires would have to be printed, and new packets assembled. To do this would be a huge additional expense for the census which is already estimated to eventually cost the taxpayers of this country between $2.6 and $3 billion.

I would like to point out that the administration opposes changes in the procedures of the census count. I have received letters from the Department of Justice, and the Department of Commerce which state the administration's position on this issue. Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, in his letter states:

> The Department of Commerce strongly believes that excluding undocumented aliens would be entirely infeasible and would considerably undermine critical efforts being undertaken by the Bureau to assure an effective and complete count in 1990.

He further states:

> I am prepared to recommend to President Bush that he veto measures such as S. 848 or S. 358 that contain language that would exclude undocumented residents from the 1990 census count.

Assistant Attorney General Carol T. Crawford, in her letter, reaffirms the Justice Department's position that excluding undocumented residents would be unconstitutional. I will ask that these letters be inserted in their entirety in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

In conclusion, I believe the amendment to be extremely detrimental to States, municipalities, and other organizations and in individuals that rely on accurate census information. Further, the feasibility of carrying out what the amendment would require is in serious question. Finally, it is our sworn duty, in the Senate, to uphold the Constitution. The amendment is clearly unconstitutional, and therefore, it is our duty to defeat this legislation. I strongly urge all of my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

The administration opposes the legislation for good and sufficient reason, Mr. President. I think many of us do. Clearly the Senate should refuse to add this amendment to this particular appropriations bill.

Mr. President, at this time, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts to speak on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the Shelby amendment is flatly unconstitutional as a matter of law, totally unworkable as a matter of practice, and completely inappropriate for inclusion in this important appropriations bill.

The amendment is unconstitutional because both article I, section 2 and the 14th amendment require apportionment to be based on "the whole number of persons" regardless of their citizenship or immigration status.

That the framers intended to count all persons is clear from the express language of the Constitution. It uses the word "persons" rather than "citizens" in the census provisions. Elsewhere in the Constitution, the framers used the word "citizens" where that was intended.

For example, section 1 of the 14th amendment provides that:

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States * * *.

And the apportionment clause, which is found in section 2 of that same 14th amendment, provides that:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

The drafters of the Constitution clearly meant to count every person in the apportionment base. No one had more to do with the drafting of the Constitution than James Madison. And in the Federalist Papers, No. 54, James Madison said that apportionment was to be "founded on the aggregate number of inhabitants." Inhabitants—not citizens—the intention to include everyone in the apportionment base could not be clearer.

The framers' intentions are also clear from the consistent practice of the Census Bureau for 190 years—since the Ratification of the Constitution. To quote the Congressional Research Service:

> The fact that every census since 1790 has included legal as well as illegal aliens in its count would seem to be indicative of the fact that the original intent of the Framers was to include such aliens.

I would like to hear from those who propose this particular amendment if they have been able to find anyone who was there at the time of the Constitutional Convention who challenged that particular understanding. It is difficult for me to believe that if the Census Bureau were running contrary to what the framers wanted at that time that it would have gone unnoticed. Of course it would not have.

The same conclusion has been reached by the Federal courts. In 1980, in FAIR versus Klutznick, a three-judge Federal court stated that the Constitution:

> * * * -7ERequires the counting of the "whole number of persons" for apportionment purposes, and while illegal aliens were not a component of the population at the time the Constitution was adopted, they are clearly "persons."

In other contexts, the Supreme Court has consistently held that the 14th amendment consistently held that the word "persons" in the 14th amendment includes illegal aliens. For example, in 1982 in Plyler versus Doe, the court held that the equal protection clause bars states from completely excluding illegal aliens from its schools. In so doing, the Court stated:

> Aliens, even aliens whose presence in this country is unlawful, have long been recognized as "persons" guaranteed due process of law by the 5th and 14th amendments.

The Congressional Research Service, after a thorough analysis, concluded that the Constitution requires that all persons, including illegal aliens, be counted in the apportionment base. The CRS study concluded that:

> A statutory exclusion of aliens from [the apportionment] base would seem to violate the "whole number of persons" requirement and thus be unconstitutional.

The Justice Department, under both Presidents Carter and Reagan, also recognized that the Constitution bars excluding illegal aliens from the census. And the Justice Department under the current administration has recently reiterated its view that proposed legislation like the pending amendment is unconstitutional.

The Shelby amendment is unworkable because it would require the Census Bureau to exclude illegal aliens from the apportionment counts. In 1988, the Director of the Census Bureau testified before a House subcommittee that the Census Bureau:

> has not found an acceptable method to exclude undocumented immigrants from the apportionment counts.

The reason is obvious. If census takers are required to ask people whether they are illegal aliens, that's going to provoke widespread fear and suspicion and noncooperation with the census.

The Census Bureau found that:

> A census of only legal residents cannot be done as accurately as a census of all residents. People who are undocumented immigrants may either avoid the census altogether or deliberately misreport themselves as legal residents in the census. * * * Legal residents may be confused about why the government is asking whether a person is here illegally. Legal residents, therefore, may misunderstand or mistrust the census and fail or refuse to respond.

And the Census Bureau is clearly not the proper agency to decide whether an alien is "in the United States in violation of the immigration laws." Census takers are not experts on our immigration laws. Do we want part-time, one-time government employees to be deciding immigration status? That's what the Shelby amendment would require.

Finally, the Shelby amendment is entirely inappropriate to add to this important appropriations bill. Secretary of Commerce Robert Mosbacher has recently indicated that he will recommend to President Bush that he veto legislation comprising the Shelby amendment. This bill contains vital funds to fight the drug war. It should not be tied up by the inclusion of a flatly unconstitutional provision.

I urge my colleagues to vote to table the Shelby amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the two letters from the administration opposing this amendment, including one recommending a veto of this legislation should this measure be included.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, September 22, 1989.

Hon. JEFF BINGAMAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Government Information and Regulation, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: You have requested the views of the Department of Justice concerning the constitutionality of proposed legislation excluding illegal or deportable aliens from the decennial census count. In the past, the Department of Justice has taken the position that section two of the Fourteenth Amendment which provides for "counting the whole number of persons in each State" and the original Apportionment and Census Clauses of Article I, section two of the Constitution require that inhabitants of States who are illegal aliens be included in the census count. In our review of this issue to date, we have found no basis for reversing this position.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised this Department that it has no objection to the submission of this report to Congress.

Sincerely,

CAROL T. CRAWFORD,
Assistant Attorney General.

THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, September 25, 1989.

Hon. JEFF BINGAMAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Government Information and Regulation, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter regarding the inclusion of undocumented residents in the 1990 census. I would like to take this opportunity to reiterate this Department's long-held position that there are compelling legal and public policy grounds for counting in the census all persons irrespective of their citizenship. If Congress sends legislation such as S. 848 or S. 350 to the President which directs the Census Bureau to exclude undocumented residents, I will recommend to President Bush that he veto this legislation.

The Department of Justice has advised previous Congresses based on constitutional considerations that illegal aliens must be included within the census counts for purposes of apportioning congressional representation. The Department of Commerce has consistently concurred with this view.

The Census Bureau's enumeration procedure has been guided by the requirement in the 14th Amendment to the Constitution to count "the whole number of persons in each state." The Census Bureau has interpreted its constitutional charge and its statutory mandate to require counting every person who has a usual residence in any state. The concept of "usual residence" dates back to the Census Act of 1790 and, while the wording of various Census Acts has changed over the decades, the concept has remained the same—to enumerate all inhabitants.

Moreover, the Department of Commerce strongly believes that excluding undocumented aliens would be entirely infeasible and would considerably undermine critical efforts being undertaken by the Bureau to assure an effective and complete count in 1990.

First, we have no way of effectively determining the legal status of individual respondents. The methods proposed to exclude undocumented aliens have flaws that could seriously jeopardize the accuracy of the census. For example:

The determination of legal status among types of aliens, in many cases, requires administrative review by the Department of Justice. Many aliens do not know precisely what their legal status is. Neither the Census Bureau nor its enumerators in the field have the legal qualifications to assist respondents in answering such a question.

Estimating the number of undocumented aliens by using Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) data and subtracting that number from the census totals also is seriously flawed. The INS does not have counts of legal aliens in the country now or on Census Day. They also do not know where most legal aliens reside. Such information would be absolutely necessary to implement this method.

A census of only legal residents cannot be done as accurately as a census of all residents. People who are undocumented immigrants may either avoid the census altogether or deliberately misreport themselves as legal residents in the census.

If large proportions of undocumented aliens avoid the census, the 1990 census counts will be lower than cities and states expect. The Census Bureau will not know at the time of apportionment whether this results from undercount of legal residents or from undocumented immigrants who avoided the census. Those who avoid the census would not be included in any counts, even for purposes other than apportionment.

Second, adoption of this policy would undermine far-reaching progress in the area of outreach directed at the minority community. Given the importance of these programs to achieve a full and accurate count, we oppose undertaking policies which are likely to disrupt our cooperation with community organizations which provide assistance to our efforts.

Finally, the Department is reluctant to undertake actions which would undermine the general public's perception of the confidentiality of census data. The absolute prohibition of any disclosure of confidential census data and the public's acceptance of these assurances are essential to the accuracy of census results.

In light of the foregoing, I am prepared to recommend to President Bush that he veto measures such as S. 848 or S. 358 that contain language that would exclude undocumented residents from the 1990 census count.

The Office of Management and Budget advises us that there is no objection to the submission of this letter to the Congress and that enactment legislation, such as S. 848 or S. 358 would not be in accord with the President's Program.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. MOSBACHER.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise to express my strong opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama which would direct the Census Bureau to exclude undocumented persons from the total population figures used for purposes of reapportioning the U.S. House of Representatives. I oppose this amendment because it is plainly unconstitutional, and I urge my colleagues to oppose it also.

The relevant provision of the 14th amendment to the Constitution provides that:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their representative numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state. . .

This language is unambiguous. Previous debates in Congress, as well as decisions rendered by the courts, have consistently interpreted this provision to require that redistricting and reapportionment are to be based on actual numbers of people or inhabitants, and not on any particular subgroup of that population such as taxpayers, citizens, or legal residents.

If we indeed want to change the system by which the census is conducted with regard to the calculation of the number of persons in each State for reapportionment purposes, it is clear that we would have to amend the Constitution. The amendment being offered by the Senator from Alabama to this appropriations measure is therefore not only inappropriate because it is legislation on an appropriations measure, it is also unconstitutional.

Moreover, Mr. President, this amendment has not been considered by any Senate committee. Such a significant departure from the traditional process by which the House of Representatives is apportioned should not be taken without committee action.

While this amendment is objectionable because it flies in the face of traditional interpretations of the Constitution, there are also practical reasons why it should be rejected.

Dr. John G. Keane, Director of the Bureau of Census at the Commerce Department, recently testified before the House Subcommittee on Census and Population that the Bureau has not found an acceptable method of excluding undocumented immigrants from the apportionment counts. He explained that:

> Proposed methods—such as including direct enumeration and estimation—would cause problems in carrying out the census and would likely introduce significant errors into the census that could affect the allocation of one or more Congressional seats.

Because of these practical problems, and because the amendment is unconstitutional, both the Department of Commerce and the Department of Justice oppose this amendment.

I would like to point out, Mr. President, that a non-citizen's immigration status can be ascertained only through exceedingly detailed and intrusive questions which call for legal conclusions, and which cannot be verified without violating the confidentiality provisions of the Census Act. The results of a 1980 attempt by the Census Bureau to estimate the undocumented alien population are questionable because of the indirect statistical techniques which were used. Moreover, one critical piece of information used to derive the 1980 estimates—INS alien registration data—is no longer collected or is collected on a voluntary basis.

Finally, Mr. President, this amendment should be rejected because it will only exacerbate the undercount of the Hispanic and other minority communities. Since the census data is also used to redistrict State and local governments, and to plan for local social and governmental services, it is important that this data be as accurate and complete as possible.

The last decennial census recorded an overall undercount of approximately 1 percent for all persons residing in the United States. Hispanics, however, were undercounted at a rate between 5–6 percent nationwide. A 1985 mid-decennial census in Los Angeles County indicated a Hispanic undercount of 9.8 percent for that area.

While the Census Bureau is considering methods to lessen the undercount, it would be unwise for us today to adopt this amendment which will only discourage Hispanics and other minority communities from participating in the census process. Also, we should assure that those who applied for legalization under the Immigration Reform and Control Act are encouraged to participate in the census.

In sum, Mr. President, this amendment should be rejected because it is unconstitutional, impractical, and bad policy. We should make every effort to assure that the 1990 census provides us with the most accurate and complete count as possible.

For these reasons I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, there are several strong, compelling reasons to reject this amendment.

The amendment is unconstitutional, plain and simple.

The Constitution requires that a census be taken every 10 years of all persons in the United States. Unlike other provisions of the Constitution, the requirement to count inhabitants of the United States doesn't specify sex, race, religion, or legal status. It says simply "persons." Nowadays we might not like that. It may be inconvenient. It may be politically unpopular. It may even offend some of our constituents. but none of this satisfies the test of constitutionality.

This amendment is not just of dubious constitutionality, it is patently unconstitutional and the Senate should not be in the business of passing that kind of legislation. It does us no credit. If the Senator does not like this section of the Constitution, then he ought to offer a constitutional amendment to do it, not pose an amendment to a critical appropriations bill.

The amendment would undermine an accurate census count.

Preparation for the 1990 census is well underway. The Census Bureau has long been planning it. Census forms will be mailed to us in just a few months. Census workers will take to the streets shortly thereafter. Thousands of hours have gone into trying to iron out the wrinkles in conducting a census. Now, here we go, the U.S. Senate, undermining all of that work by adding an amendment that would—not just a little bit—but completely undermine all of that preparation. The amendment does not say just how the Census Bureau is supposed to exclude illegal aliens. It is silent on that question. Long after we have made our political statement here, others will have to find a way to implement what we have mandated. I do not think the Senate should further complicate that task.

The amendment is not as simple as it seems.

How is the Census Bureau to determine who is an illegal alien and who is not? Often the Justice Department has to make an administrative review to determine the legal status of aliens. Second, what do we do about people who lie about their status? Do we hold the census count until we verify legal status? Is it not far simpler to count everybody and eliminate all these questions?

There is no reason to encumber an already complicated task. Taking an accurate census is hard work, this amendment makes that harder.

The amendment forces a needless confrontation with the President.

The Census Bureau opposes this amendment. The Justice Department thinks it is unconstitutional. The Department of Commerce opposes this amendment. Secretary Mosbacher says that he is prepared to recommend to the President that he veto legislation that would exclude undocumented persons from the 1990 census count. There is no need for us to test the President on this. This is a critical appropriations bill. This amendment is legislation on an appropriations bill. It should be ruled out of order. But whether or not that happens, the Senate should not pick a fight with the administration on an issue where the Constitution is so clearly on its side.

The amendment has never found its way into law, even though attempts were made in at least four different Congresses, and courts have rejected its premise as well.

Each time this amendment or some variation of it has come up, Congress has rejected it. It came up in the 71st, 76th, 96th, and 100th Congresses. With good reason, it never made it into law. We ought to accept that collective wisdom and reject this amendment again. Courts also have held that undocumented residents were required to be counted in the census.

I urge the Senate to reject this amendment.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. I thank my friend from Alabama. I appreciate his yielding to me.

I have to say, having listened to my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, it is wonderful to see him so concerned about the original meaning of the Constitution.

In fact, I think he may become an interpretist yet instead of the noninterpretist that he has been up to now. I think it is a good sign when we have someone who is so high up on the Judiciary Committee interpreting on what the Constitution must have originally meant. I think if he had that philosophy earlier, then Robert Bork would be sitting on the Supreme Court.

The issue here is what is the meaning of "whole number of free persons" within article I, section 2. There is no evidence to support the proposition that the constitutional language means, or was intended to mean, that the mere presence of a person within a State on the day of the census should necessarily result in such persons being counted as among "the persons in" that State for purposes of determining the State's "number" for apportionment.

Otherwise, a resident of Virginia temporarily visiting New York on the day of the census would have to be counted in the population of New York for that apportionment purpose. That is, under this argument, the Census Bureau would be constitutionally prohibited from creating an exception for "temporary visitors" just as it is prohibited from creating an exception for illegal aliens.

No census has ever been conducted on the basis that every person physically present in the State on the day of the census is to be counted. There is strong evidence as to how the language has always been understoood. Under the opponents' argument, foreign diplomats living on embassy grounds and foreign tourists would have to be counted. Carried through to its logical extent, an occupying army would qualify. The Census Bureau has made an exception for foreign diplomats without any additional constitutional authority. There is no reason that the Congress cannot order the Census Bureau to exempt illegal aliens as well. And there is every reason to do so. It is right to do so. It is constitutional to do so. It is appropriate to do so.

And the distinguished Senator from Alabama is acting very appropriately in bringing this amendment to the floor. It is well established that illegal aliens can be treated differently from other aliens. According to the case of Federation of American Immigration Reform v. Klutznik, 486 F. Supp. 564, 576 (D.D.C. 1980), illegal aliens were not a component of the population at the time that the Constitution was adopted. They simply were not provided for. Congress can now make any rationally based provision for them that Congress decides to do.

This amendment by the distinguished Senator from Alabama is not only appropriate, but it is something that should be done and we ought to clarify this now. We have the power to do it as a Congress, and the Constitution grants and provides that power.

So those who are concerned about original meaning ought to read the Constitution. We all ought to be concerned about original meaning. Because after all, if we go beyond the original meaning of the Constitution, what we are doing is writing our own constitution rather than living in accordance with the basic law of the land. We should abide by the law and not by our esoteric view of what we think the law ought to be when it has no relationship to the underlying language there.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator NICKLES, of Oklahoma, be added as a cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the distinguished chairman.

Mr. President, I rise today, as I did on July 13 to make two points, the first of which has been made very forcefully, eloquently, and accurately, that this amendment is unconstitutional. I would prefer, frankly, that we move a constitutional point of order to have the Senate so determine.

The Constitution is elemental. It begins with article I, section 2. Of course, the controlling amendment is the 14th amendment. Section 2 states, "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states * * * according to their respective numbers." If anyone would like to know the original purpose of the authorizing act of March 1, 1790, it is called "An Act providing for the enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States." Section 1: "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the marshals of the several districts of the United States shall be, and they are hereby authorized and required to cause the number of the inhabitants within their respective districts to be taken."

I ask unanimous consent the text of the statute be printed in the RECORD at this point:

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[By Authority of Congress]

THE PUBLIC STATUTES AT LARGE IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, FROM THE ORGANIZATION OF THE GOVERNMENT IN 1789, TO MARCH 5, 1845

STATUTE II. MARCH 1, 1790.

Chap. II.—An Act providing for the enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States.[1]

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the marshals of the several districts of the United States shall be, and they are hereby authorized and required to cause the number of the inhabitants within their respective districts to be taken; omitting in such enumeration Indians not taxed, and distinguishing free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, from all others; distinguishing also the sexes and colours of free persons, and the free males of sixteen years and upwards from those under that age; for effecting which purpose the marshals shall have power to appoint as many assistants within their respective districts as to them shall appear necessary; assigning to each assistant a certain division of his district, which division shall consist of one or more counties, cities, towns, townships, hundreds of parishes, or of a territory plainly and distinctly bounded by water courses, mountains, or public roads. The marshals and their assistants shall respectively take an oath or affirmation, before some judge or justice of the peace, resident within their respective districts, previous to their entering on the discharge of the duties by this act required. The oath or affirmation of the marshal shall be, "I, A. B. marshal of the district of —— do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will well and truly cause to be made, a just and perfect enumeration and description of all persons resident within my district, and return the same to the President of the United States, agreeably to the directions of an act of Congress, entitled 'An act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States,' according to the best of my ability." The oath or affirmation of an assistant shall be, "I, A. B. do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will make a just and perfect enumeration and description of all persons resident within the division assigned to me by the marshal of the district of —— and make due return thereof to the said marshal, agreeably to the directions of an act of Congress, intituled 'Act act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States,' according to the best of my ability." The enumeration shall commence on the first Monday in August next, and shall close within nine calendar months thereafter. The several assistants shall, within the said nine months, transmit to the marshals by whom they shall be respectively appointed, accurate returns of all persons, except Indians not taxed, within their respective divisions, which returns shall be made in a schedule, distinguishing the several families by the names of their master, mistress, steward, overseer, or other principal person therein, in manner following, that is to say:

The number of persons within my division, consisting of —— appears in a schedule hereto annexed, subscribed by me this day of —— 179—.

A. B. assistant to the marshal of ——.

Schedule of the Whole Number of Persons within the Division allotted to A. B.

Names of heads of families.

Free white males of sixteen years and upwards, including heads of families.

Free white males under sixteen years.

Free white females, including heads of families.

All other free persons.

Slaves.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That every assistant failing to make return, or making a false return of the enumeration to the marshal, within the time by this act limited, shall forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the marshals shall file the several returns aforesaid, with the clerks of their respective district courts, who are hereby directed to receive and carefully preserve the same: And the marshals respectively shall, on or before the first day of September, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, transmit to the President of the United States, the aggregate amount of each description of persons within their respective districts. And every marshal failing to file the returns of his assistants, or any of them, with the clerks of their respective district courts, or failing to return the aggregate amount of each description of persons in their respective districts, as the same shall appear from said returns, to the President of the United States, within the time limited by this act, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of eight hundred dollars; all which forfeitures shall be recoverable in the courts of the districts where the offences shall be committed, or in the cirucuit courts to be held within the same, by action of debt, information or indictment; the one half thereof to the use of the United States, and the other half to the informer; but where the prosecution shall be first instituted on behalf of the United States, the whole shall accrue to their use. And for the more effectual discovery of offences, the judges of the several district courts, at their next sessions to be held after the expiration of the time allowed for making the returns of the enumeration hereby directed, to the President of the United States, shall give this act in charge to the grand juries, in their respective courts, and shall cause the returns of the several assistants to be laid before them for their inspection.

SEC. 4. And be if further enacted, That every assistant shall receive at the rate of one dollar for every one hundred and fifty persons by him returned, where such persons reside in the country; and where such persons reside in a city, or town, containing more than five thousand persons, such assistant shall receive at the rate of one dollar for every three hundred person; but where, from the dispersed situation of the inhabitants in some divisions, one dollar for every one hundred and fifty persons shall be insufficient, the marshals, with the approbation of the judges of their respective districts, may make such further allowance to the assistants in such divisions as shall be deemed an adequate compensation, provided the same does not exceed one dollar for every fifty persons by them returned. The several marshals shall receive as follows: The marshal of the district of Maine, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New Hampshire, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Massachusetts, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Connecticut, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New York, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New Jersey, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Pennsylvania, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Delaware, one hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Maryland, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Virginia, five hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Kentucky, two hundred and fifty dollars; the marshal of the district of North Carolina, three hundred and fifty dollars; the marshal of the district of South Carolina, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Georgia, two hundred and fifty dollars. And to obviate all doubts which may arise respecting the persons to be returned, and the manner of making returns,

SEC. 5. Be it enacted, That every person whose usual place of abode shall be in any family on the aforesaid first Monday in August next, shall be returned as of such family; and the name of every person, who shall be an inhabitant of any district, but without a settled place of residence, shall be inserted in the column of the aforesaid schedule, which is allotted for the heads of families, in that division where he or she shall be on the said first Monday in August next, and every person occasionally absent at the time of the enumeration, as belonging to that place in which he usually resides in the United States.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That each and every person more than sixteen years of age, whether heads of families or not, belonging to any family within any division of a district made or established within the United States, shall be, and hereby is, obliged to render to such assistant of the division, a true account, if required, to the best of his or her knowledge, of all and every person belonging to such family respectively, according to the several descriptions aforesaid, on pain of forfeiting twenty dollars, to be used for and recovered by such assistant, the one half for his own use, and the other half for the use of the United States.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That each assistant shall, previous to making his return to the marshal, cause a correct copy, signed by himself, of the schedule, containing the number of inhabitants within his division, to be sent up at two of the most public places within the same, there to remain for the inspection of all concerned; for each of which copies the said assistant shall be entitled to receive two dollars, provided proof of a copy of the schedule having been so set up and suffered to remain, shall be transmitted to the marshal, with the return of the number of persons; and in case any assistant shall fail to make such proof to the marshal, he shall forfeit the compensation by this act allowed him.

APPROVED, March 1, 1790.

EXCEPTIONS

(a) Historical fact. The historical fact of enactment, amendment, or repeal should be cited to the session laws. A parenthetical reference to the current version (see rules 12.6.2 and 12.7) may be added:

"Two years later, Congress passed the Voting Rights Act of 1965, Pub. L. No. 89-110, 79 Stat. 437 (codified as amended at 42 U.S.C. §§-1A1971, 1973 to 1973bb-1 (1976))."

(b) Materially different language. If the language in the current code (including its supplement) differs materially from the language in the session laws, and the relevant title has not been enacted into positive law, cite the session laws. A parenthetical reference to the code version, introduced by the phrase "codified with some differences in language at" may be given. If differences in the language merely reflect subsequent amendments, however, cite to the current code.

A current list of federal code titles that have been enacted into positive law appears in the preface to the latest edition or supplement of the United States Code. As of January 5, 1981, the titles so enacted were 1, 3-6, 9-11, 13, 14, 17, 18, 23, 28, 32, 35, 37-39, 44, and subtitle IV of 49. Similarly, state codes should indicate whether the titles contained therein have been enacted into positive law.

(c) Scattered statutes. Cite to the session laws if a statute appears in so many scattered sections or titles that no useful citation to the code is possible. Indicate parenthetically the general location of the codified sections.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I make a second point. It did not arise to constitutional consequence, but it has consequences for this Nation. It happens that we are a country which has the oldest set of national statistics on Earth. Because we have enumerated the house by means of the census, we have known about ourselves in the most extraordinary detail for two centuries. The census has always been confidential. It has always been absolutely nonpolitical. And it has always been trusted everywhere. Begin to tamper with it for purposes of districting between States and things like that, begin to invite people to tell things that are not so, begin to raise the question of whether this is a census of a kind you might have gotten in the night in totalitarian nations or nations with something to hide, and you squander a legacy of two centuries. You invite the disdain of the economic professions, the social professions, the business community, everybody.

I was once Assistant Secretary of Labor for Policy Planning and Research in the administrations of President Kennedy and President Johnson. We depended utterly on the census to tell us what the unemployment rates were, and to tell us the data on the basic movements of this society. If anybody ever thought we were fiddling with those numbers, a measure of confidence would drain out of this society which you do not get back. I am surprised that the Senate might do it. And I hope it will not.

Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee for his valued position.

Mr. SHELBY Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Republican leader, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE].

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Alabama, Senator SHELBY, and my colleague, the distinguished colleague from North Carolina, Senator HELMS.

I think we are all familiar with the problem of illegal immigration. We heard a lot about this problem last July when we passed the immigration bill under the able leadership of Senators KENNEDY and SIMPSON. But we do not have to compound the problem. We do not have to compound this problem by mindless lumping of millions of illegal aliens in the 1990 census. We do not have to compound this problem by ripping off the States, some of whom will lose congressional seats because of the inclusion of illegal aliens in the census.

Unfortunately, the established policy of the Census Bureau is to count every person in this country without making a single adjustment for illegal aliens. The Census Bureau intends to continue this policy through 1990.

With all due respect to the Census Bureau and their many fine people who work at the Bureau, this policy simply does not make any sense. It violates the constitutional principle of one man-one vote, and is just plain unfair to most Americans who live here in this country and live here legally. That is what it is all about.

Last July Senator SHELBY and HELMS offered an amendment to the immigration bill that provided a simple and straightforward solution to this problem. The amendment which, if passed by the Senate, requires the Secretary of Commerce to use tabulating procedures that are both feasible and appropriate to ensure that illegal aliens are not counted in the census for purposes of reapportionment. There is a sound solution that would restore some fairness to the census and reapportionment process.

But what happened? The House has not acted on the immigration bill, and time is running out. As the distinguished Senator from Alabama appointed out, if we do not act now, Congress will not have the opportunity to correct the census problem until the year 2000. We cannot afford to wait that long.

So again I want to reaffirm the views I expressed in the Senate last July and commend the Senator from Alabama for his leadership. I hope we can prevail again today. We should. It is the same vote, it is the same issue, it is the same problem. I believe the Senator from Alabama is eminently correct in this situation. I yield.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, my colleagues, I am in the unusual position of speaking in behalf of the administration while my friend, Senator DOLE, is speaking on the other side. That does not happen very often.

The Constitution is clear. The argument of my good friend from Alabama is not with PAUL SIMON or the Bureau of the Census. His argument is with James Madison. His argument is with the Constitution. The original Constitution called for the census of the whole number of free persons, and then article 14 came along, and in the second sentence it talks about citizens and the rights of citizens. Then in the third sentence, in amendment number 14, it talks about counting the whole number of persons in each State. Clearly, the 14th amendment makes a distinction.

Then I heard my friend from North Carolina, Senator HELMS, say we would not let illegal aliens vote. As a matter of fact, in our States originally—I am not sure about the newer States like New Mexico—but in Tennessee and Illinois we permitted illegal aliens to vote. We, in Illinois, permitted it until 1848. If you were a man, a male, you could vote. If you were black, Indian, or a female, you could not vote. Now, that is part of our history. It may not be a part of our history that we like, but it is part of our history.

Very clearly, those who wrote the Constitution wanted all people who live here, all inhabitants, to be counted. The question is whether we are going to live up to the spirit of the Constitution, and I hope we will.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I oppose this amendment because it is unconstitutional, unworkable, and unwise.

This amendment directs the Census Bureau to act in an unconstitutional manner by excluding undocumented aliens from the count. The Constitution explicitly directs that apportionment be based on the number of persons, not the number of citizens or legal residents. Where the framers intended to make an exception, they said so explicitly. Thus, Indians were excluded, and slaves were only counted as three-fifths of a person for reapportionment.

We cannot turn persons into nonpersons by senatorial legerdemaine. The Constitution directs the Census to count the number of people. The only way to change that is to amend the Constitution. That is the opinion of a wide variety of scholars who have researched the topic, including the Congressional Research Service, the Census Bureau, the Department of Justice, the Illinois House of Representatives, and the city of Chicago, the ACLU, the American Immigration Lawyers Association, the Organization of Chinese Americans, the Asian Pacific American Legal Center, the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, the Southwest Voter Education and Registration Project, and the American Jewish Committee.

Aside from being unconstitutional, this amendment would prove unworkable. The Director of the Census Bureau stated last year that, "We have not found an acceptable method to exclude undocumented immigrants" from the count. Each proposed method presents the possibility of serious error, either by an overcount or an undercount of legal residents.

In addition, determining who is here illegally is sometimes a complicated legal matter. Persons may assert claims of political asylum; they may seek suspension of deportation or adjustment of status; or they may invoke a wide range of other defenses. This amendment would force the Census Bureau to find a way to make these legal determinations. The Census Bureau is not equipped to make those judgments. Indeed, only courts can determine who is here in violation of the law.

The Director also said last year that there was not enough time to implement this change for the 1990 census. Now, a year later, that task would be even more difficult. A task that is already difficult to accomplish accurately is made even more difficult by time pressures.

This proposal is also unwise. It would undermine the accuracy of the count of Hispanics and other minority immigrant communities. Census Bureau employees would be unable to determine if all eligible persons had responded to the questionnaire, since they would be forced to determine whether the persons were undocumented or not. Hispanics are already undercounted at a rate five to six times that of the overall population. Since the census data is also used to redistrict State and local governments and to plan for local social and governmental services, it is important for it to be as complete and accurate as possible.

Some legislators have argued in favor of this amendment by pointing to the potential shift in representation that would result from it. This issue, however, is too important and too politically sensitive to be resolved by our own parochial self-interests as legislators. We must heed the Constitution, rather than the cries of those who would seek political advantage.

Because I believe this amendment is unconstitution, unworkable, and unwise, I will be voting against it. I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I yield back the remainder of my time from the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from California [Senator WILSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORE). The Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Thank you, Mr. President. Mr. President, not only is the Shelby amendment unconstitutional, it is unfair. It is unfair to those States that have suffered an enormous impact of illegal immigration, massive illegal immigration. Those States, presumably, were taken care of by amendments to the Immigration, Reform and Control Act which foresaw the need to reimburse local governments for the massive new costs that they were experiencing, as they sought to accommodate these new citizens who were to be legalized under that act.

Mr. President, what happened, in fact, is that the so-called SLIAG Program has become a target. For good purposes to be sure, whether to finance the war on drugs or to help the AIDS victims or otherwise, the SLIAG Program has been seen as a pot of money up for grabs, a real grab bag. It was envisioned very clearly as a 7-year program, a program that would not be a reservoir, that would actually be drawn down until the latter years of that 7-year period as, in fact, the legalization occurred.

I must say that the costs to those States that are experiencing this surge in population, be it legal or illegal, has been enormous. In my State, health care alone has been impacted dramatically. The cost of uncompensated care has caused closing of trauma centers, forced closing of some hospitals.

Mr. President, Congress has not delivered upon its promise to those States experiencing this impact. So it is essential that we maintain the status quo in terms of the fairness of the present method of measuring population, because it impacts a great deal more than reapportionment, and that may be the major desire of my friend from Alabama, but it is not the effect. It reaches across the entire gamut of Federal programs, and when it comes time to measure and apply formulae in the law, to assist the States, what we find, of course, is that if we do not count those who are physically present, be they legal or illegal, those States like mine, like Florida, Illinois, New York, and New Mexico, simply are dealt an unfair short share.

So, Mr. President, the Shelby amendment, however well intended, is not only unconstitutional, but unfair, and it should be defeated.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute 45 seconds remaining.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute 30 seconds of that time to the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you. Mr. President. I wish to associate myself with the remarks that have been made by Senator BINGAMAN and the others in opposition to this amendment, and to add this: We are talking about a provision of the United States Constitution that relates to the counting of persons at the time of the census.

There is another provision of the Constitution which I would like to bring to the attention of the Senate, and that is the provision which is contained in article 1, section 8; that portion of the Constitution, which assigns to the Federal Government those responsibilities which had previously been the power of the Thirteen Original Colonies that will now become the exclusive jurisdiction of the new Federal Government under the Constitution.

One of those provisions is that the Federal Government shall have the exclusive power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. By that delegation of power, the States essentially have said that the Federal Government will have the sole responsibility for the protection of our borders, for the determination of who shall enter, and for the enforcement of those standards.

What has happened, colleagues, is that that enforcement process has, in many areas, collapsed. In my community, Florida, we have had periods where tens of thousands of illegal aliens entered in a period of weeks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. To ask, in conclusion, Mr. President, that these States which have already suffered so much by the dereliction of the Federal Government enforcing its immigration policy should now pay again, by not having these individuals counted is unfairness upon unfairness. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 15 seconds remaining. The Senator from Alabama has 5 minutes 20 seconds remaining.

Mr. SHELBY. I yield 1 minute to the distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding. Mr. President, when the majority was on this side of the aisle a few years ago, I had the responsibility of chairing the subcommittee that had jurisdiction over the census. We had a hearing on this subject. I introduced a bill similar to the bill introduced by my friend from Alabama. What came out at that hearing was that if illegal aliens had not been counted in determining representation in Congress after the 1980 census, the State of Georgia would have had an additional member of Congress. The State of Indiana would have had an additional member of Congress. Those members would have been taken from New York State and California.

This whole debate, really, is rather amusing, with all the talk about the technical reasons why this ought to be rejected. Do you know what the bottom line is? Illegal aliens ought to be deported. Illegal aliens ought not be entitled to representation in Congress just because it adds dollars to the pockets of some States and some programs in States with a lot of illegal aliens. I sympathize with your problem, but that is not an excuse to reject the Shelby initiative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I do wish to offer my comments on Senator SHELBY's amendment to the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill which would bar the Census Bureau from counting illegal aliens when apportioning seats in the House of Representatives.

This amendment was accepted on the legal immigration bill earlier this summer, S. 358, after it survived a tabling motion and a constitutional point of order. I did also support the amendment at that time.

The Constitution does say that we should count "persons," not just citizens or legal residents when conducting the census. However, I do not believe that the framers of the Constitution ever conceived of illegal immigration in 1789, nor were the framers of the 14th amendment familiar with such a phenomenom—we just did not have illegal immigration in those days, except of course, in the wretched case of slavery itself.

Should we be counting people whom we do not want to enter? These people cannot vote, yet should we then include them when we apportion seats in the House? I think it really strains all logic to do so.

In addition, no court has conclusively ruled on this point: Most lawsuits have been thrown out for lack of standing or other technical reasons, without the merits of the constitutional issue ever being reached. I think that we should give the courts an opportunity to address this issue conclusively. Until then, however, it seems to me simply an effort in good public policy to limit the number of persons who are counted for apportionment purposes to only citizens or persons otherwise legally admitted to the United States.

Mr. President, I think we should resolve this issue, and that it should be done either on this bill or on S. 358, to which the amendment is also attached. Let us go forward with this amendment, and let the courts make the ultimate decision as swiftly as possible.

Mr. SHELBY. At this time, I wish to ask the Senator from New Mexico, if I have a few minutes and he has a few seconds left, I am willing to yield back my time, and we can move on. The Senator says he is going to move to table my amendment.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I am pleased to yield back my time, and I move to table the amendment at this time.

Mr. SHELBY. I yield my time back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table the amendment numbered 900.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to table the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], and the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

So the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, if there is no further debate on the amendment, I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 900) was agreed to.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss the unfortunate economic situation facing Haywood County, NC, and to express my appreciation to the Commerce, State, and Judiciary Appropriations Subcommittee, and particularly to Chairman HOLLINGS, for recognizing the severe dislocation that threatenes this small, North Carolina county.

Haywood County will lose 1,000 jobs due to a landmark decision by the Environmental Protection Agency. The Champion International Corp. mill in Canton, NC will be making massive layoffs in order to comply with water quality standards downstream on the Pigeon River, on which the plant is located. This situation is unique, in that the standards in question—which are for water color, not toxics—are not specific to North Carolina or to EPA, but are standards set by the State of Tennessee. To my knowledge, this is the first time that a community has suffered severe economic disruption in order to meet environmental standards in a neighboring State.

To compound matters, Haywood County will lose 343 additional jobs due to layoffs at Dayco Products, the county's second largest employer. All together, the county stands to lose some 30 percent of its manufacturing jobs and 10 percent of its total employment. The tax base of the county will be impacted severely, and the ripple effect throughout western North Carolina and even eastern Tennessee is expected to cost the region's economy some $150 million a year.

The county workers who will lose their jobs will not easily find work in western North Carolina, particularly skilled jobs paying the type of wages to which they are accustomed. The County has worked to start and attract new businesses, but has found certain essential infrastructure, primarily water and sewer, to be lacking.

The good people of North Carolina, however, have not given up hope. They have banded together as never before to plan for the future. Haywood County leaders have formed a group of business, governmental, and civic leaders to develop an economic adjustment strategy effort [EASE], with expert assistance provided by the State and by the local Economic Development Commission. The group's seven technical committees have worked diligently over the past year to develop recommendations in a broad range of areas and identified the county's most pressing need as infrastructure development.

Along with other members of the North Carolina and Tennessee delegations, I have worked for 2 years to try to find a reasonable compromise on this matter, so that the Pigeon River could be cleaned up without a massive job loss. I think we were all disappointed that such an agreement was not possible, but I find a great deal of hope in this appropriations bill.

The committee has provided report language to the Commerce, State, and Judiciary appropriations bill which recognizes the unique and devastating situation facing Haywood County and urges the Economic Development Administration to address the severe problems facing the community. I am also pleased that the committee substantially increased funding for EDA's title IX program which includes funding for sudden and severe economic dislocation. It is my hope that through these actions Haywood County will receive the priority attention that it deserves from EDA.

HAYWOOD COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. President, I would like to engage the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, in a brief colloquy. As I have just described, Haywood County is faced with severe job loss due to the environmental regulations of a neighboring State. It is my understanding that the Economic Development Administration's title IX program for Special Economic Development and Adjustment Assistance is designed to, "meet special needs arising from actual or threatened severe unemployment arising from economic dislocation, including unemployment arising from actions of the Federal Government and from compliance with environmental requirements which remove economic activities from a locality * * * and to encourage cooperative intergovernmental action to prevent or solve economic adjustment problems." Is this the proper interpretation of the statute?

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator from North Carolina is correct.

Mr. SANFORD. The economic situation facing Haywood County fits the criteria of the title IX program perfectly. The county will suffer severe unemployment from economic dislocation arising from compliance with environmental requirements. Moreover, Haywood County has worked to form a public-private, intergovernmental strategy effort to combat the economic problems it faces, and EDA can provide substantial assistance in this effort. Do you agree that EDA, and particularly the title IX program, is well-suited to address the problems in Haywood County?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I agree with the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SANFORD. Haywood County will suffer this severe dislocation to meet the environmental standards of another State. Because of the interstate aspects of this situation, the need for a Federal role in helping the community to adjust would appear to me to be especially compelling. Would the Senator agree that this is a factor that should be considered?

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator from North Carolina is correct.

Mr. SANFORD. Due to the severe nature of the economic dislocation in Haywood County, and the correlation between the problem and the purpose of the EDA title IX program, I hope that EDA will provide priority attention to Haywood County.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I certainly believe that Haywood County deserves careful consideration by EDA.

Mr. SANFORD. I thank my good friend, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, for his remarks and for his assistance on this matter. I thank the Chair.

NOAA-UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI

Mr. GRAHAM. In fiscal year 1988, a collaborative NOAA-University of Miami project was initiated to focus on critical fish populations in the Southeastern United States. The Southeastern United States Caribbean fisheries investigation project, known as Sefcar, has tracked the viability, migration, and development of fish in the tropical waters of the Southeast United States, Latin American, and the Caribbean regions.

Sefcar is operated by the University of Miami Rosenstiel School of Marine and Atmospheric Studies. The Rosenstiel School has its own fishery, oceangoing research vessels, and land-based remote sensoring satellite capacity. The Rosenstiel School has developed extensive joint research, education and training efforts with both NOAA and the Caribbean regions and is considered uniquely qualified to undertake this sort of research.

Through the generous assistance of the Senator from South Carolina, funding for this project was first provided in fiscal year 1988 and again in fiscal year 1989 under the Ocean and Atmospheric Research account of NOAA. I realize how exceedingly strained the subcommittee's resources are at this time, but I am concerned that there is no funding for the next phases of this project as planned. I do hope that this issue can be reviewed in the conference with the House as this is a very valuable program.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator from Florida is correct that this subcommittee does not have sufficient resources to provide third-phase funding at this time. I will, however, review this issue during the conference. I understand the House supports continued funding. In any case, the subcommittee's recommendation is not intended to prejudice our decision about fiscal year 1991 funding for the project.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am very appreciative for your consideration and assistance on this matter and so many others. I look forward to working with you to ensure the continuation of this valuable project.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I would like to engage the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee in a brief colloquy, if I may. As the chairman knows, during the coming fiscal year the Bureau of the Census will conduct the 1990 decennial census as mandated by the Constitution. This marks the bicentennial of census taking in the United States. The decennial census is one of the largest single undertakings of the Federal Government. This is also an extremely important undertaking, as census data is used to determine the representation in the U.S. House of Representatives, in State legislatures and in county and municipal governments. Census figures are also used to distribute Federal and State assistance funds to our communities. Thus, a quality count is of great importance.

In this bill, the amount appropriated for the Bureau of the Census is $57.6 million below the requested level for periodic censuses. I am deeply concerned as to whether this level of funding will be adequate to carry out the 1990 census. I wonder if the chairman shares that concern.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I will assure the Senator that I do share his concern and agree with him as to the importance of the 1990 census. However, as the Senator knows, we are in a very difficult budgetary situation and face difficult choices. I can assure the Senator that the subcommittee will be following the situation closely and will review the funding of the Census Bureau in the future if that should become appropriate.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I appreciate the chairman's difficult task in crafting this bill and thank him for his assurances.

On another matter, language in this bill provides funding to the International Trade Administration for "demonstrating new alternatives to providing services domestically and engaging in trade promotion activities abroad." Section 2307 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (15 U.S.C. 4726) authorized the Secretary of Commerce to provide assistance to promote the export of American Indian arts and crafts. It has been estimated that existing exports of American Indian arts and crafts could be tripled with modest promotion activities, providing increased economic opportunity for many Native Americans. However, to the best of my knowledge, the Commerce Department has never implemented this section.

I would like to ask the distinguished chairman whether he believes that this program would fall under the bill's definition of new alternatives.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator is correct. I believe that the programs he describes to promote the export of American Indian arts and crafts is aptly characterized as a new alternative and therefore would fall under the language included in this bill. I commend the Senator for his efforts in this area and hope that this program will move forward.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I thank the chairman for his kind words and for his clarification.

NATIONAL JUDICIAL COLLEGE

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if I may engage my distinguished chairman in a colloquy regarding an important institution in my State, the National Judicial College in Reno.

Mr. President, as my colleague from South Carolina knows, the National Judicial College was founded in 1963 by the American Bar Association and Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark, for resident education and training courses for judges of all types from all the States, as well as judges from 112 foreign countries.

Approximately 60 resident courses of 1 to 4 weeks duration are offered throughout the year and extension programs for the States in association with State supreme courts, judicial organizations, and law schools. Tuition paid by the participants provides 40 percent of the National Judicial College's budget. An annual fund drive, with contributions from corporations and individuals, along with indirect costs recovered from Federal training program grants, produces another 30 percent.

The remaining 30 percent needed for operations has come from a number of large foundation grants over the years. Currently, the needs are met by grants from the American Bar Association and the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation. Unfortunately, both these funds are diminishing and are scheduled to terminate in 1991. Without a new source of revenue for operations, the National Judicial College will face severe budgetary difficulties in the near future. With donations and an appropriation from the Nevada State Legislature, the National Judicial College will have some funds for operations. However, the National Judicial College, which has served over 18,000 judges nationwide, will still be short $1 million for operations next year.

It has come to my attention, my good friend from South Carolina, that the House Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary appropriations bill includes report language that the committee expects the State Justice Institute to give full consideration to an application for grant operations to the National Judicial College.

Mr. President, since this institution performs such a vital national function, especially in the Nation's efforts to curb the spread of illegal drugs in our society, I would like to request that my distinguished chairman agree to work with me during the conference negotiations to allocate $1 million from the State Justice Institute for an operations grant to the National Judicial College. One that would not jeopardize the important training grants already received from the State Justice Institute.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I respond to my good friend from Nevada, that I am aware of the good work performed by the National Judicial College. Many State court judges from South Carolina have received instruction from the college. I will work closely with him when we go to conference and will do all I can to allocate $1 million for an operations grant to the National Judicial College.

IMMIGRATION-RELATED DISCRIMINATION FUNDING

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if I may address the managers of the bill.

As the managers know, the Senator from Wyoming and I intended to offer an amendment to earmark $3 million for a much-needed public education campaign to prevent immigration-related discrimination.

Unfortunately, due to the fact that we are up to the budget agreement levels already under this bill, this amendment is not possible at this time.

It is still my hope that the Attorney General can come up with the needed funding. But Senator SIMPSON and I wrote to the Attorney General about this in May, and to date that funding has not been made available.

I know the managers of the bill appreciate our goal. And I would like to ask the managers if they will make their best efforts to locate funding in conference of at least $1 million for this purpose, preferably for use by the Justice Department's Office of Special Counsel for immigration-related discrimination.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the Senator will yield, I too wish to join in the request to the managers.

I believe that preventive medicine is the best medicine, and we have before us the appropriate opportunity to ensure that U.S. employers are aware of the rules regarding employer sanctions and antidiscrimination.

I would respectfully request that the Senate managers of the bill use their best efforts in conference to locate $1 million for the Office of the Special Counsel for Immigration Related Unfair Employment Practices.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Our committee report urges the Attorney General to come up with the funding and I assure the chairman and ranking members of the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Affairs of my commitment to try to obtain the necessary funding in conference.

Mr. RUDMAN. I also wish to assure the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Wyoming of my best efforts in conference to pursue the needed funds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, by way of background on this subject, let me say that when Congress passed the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, under the leadership of its chief sponsor Senator SIMPSON, it made it unlawful in this country to discriminate against persons based on their legal immigration status.

This new basis for discrimination complaints was a response to the potential for a new form of discrimination emerging from the employer sanctions established by the 1986 act. We were presented with the real prospect that certain employers, not wanting to risk the new fines, would turn away "foreign-looking" or "foreign-sounding" job applicants—even though such applicants may in fact be American citizens or legal residents.

We made such actions illegal and we established a special counsel within the Justice Department to handle these particular discrimination complaints.

Mr. President, the Office of the Special Counsel is now up and running and has succeeded in settling or litigating a large number of the complaints it has received.

But a crucial mission which that office has sought to perform has never been funded. And that mission is to broadly inform employers of their new obligations under the law and workers of their right to pursue these new discrimination claims.

For the past 2 years, the Justice Department has requested funding for public education in this area, but we have never seen fit to provide it. So the Office of Special Counsel and the Immigration and Naturalization have commendably pieced together a patchwork program of public education out of the few resources they could muster.

This neglect to provide the needed funding is beginning to show. The General Accounting Office presented Congress last November with the results of its study of employer compliance with the new law. GAO found widespread ignorance or misunderstanding. For example, one of every six employers in GAO's survey indicated that since passage of the 1986 act they had begun either requiring only foreign-looking persons for work authorization documents or hiring U.S. citizens only—actions which violate the 1986 act.

And other reports, such as from the New York State Inter-Agency Task Force on Immigration Affairs, confirm the GAO finding.

Mr. President, our amendment sought to offer the Office of Special Counsel with $3 million to conduct the public education campaign that is needed to avert this discrimination. But I will not be offering it to this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that our correspondence on this subject be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, May 11, 1989.

Hon. RICHARD L. THORNBURGH,
Attorney General, Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: In less than a year, Congress will be reviewing the effects of the employer sanctions program established by the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986. One of the key issues to be examined is whether the implementation of sanctions has created new employment discrimination.

At this point, while we have not witnessed a widespread pattern of discrimination, the verdict is still out on the extent to which discrimination may or may not be occurring. The General Accounting Office last year found one in six employers surveyed reported that they engaged in potentially discriminatory practices in violation of the law, such as asking only "foreign-looking" applicants to verify their work authorization or hiring only U.S. citizens.

The recent GAO finding, along with the upcoming deadline for Congressional debate, suggest the need to devote more resources and attention to public education. The Department of Justice has recognized the importance of public education, and, over the past two years, has requested additional funds for the Office of Special Counsel for that purpose—a request which Congress failed to fulfill.

We are prepared to work with you toward that end and urge you to consider in particular:

Providing additional resources through the Office of Special Counsel. Public education is that office's best tool for preventing discrimination, and it has been provided no funds to do it (from either Congress or the Executive Branch) other than a small amount from the Immigration Service.

Strengthening inter-agency cooperation (including INS, EEOC, Department of Labor, and other relevant federal agencies).

Promoting public education efforts regarding the anti-discrimination provisions of the Immigration Reform and Control Act at the state and local levels.

Issuing a policy statement from your office on the employer sanctions provisions of the new immigration law—both on the need to ensure that all new hire are eligible to work in the U.S. and on complying with the anti-discrimination provisions of the 1986 law.

We appreciate your consideration of this matter, and would be grateful for any further suggestions you might have regarding cost-effective ways to enhance public awareness of the new law.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

ALAN K. SIMPSON,
Ranking Member.
EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Affairs.

WASHINGTON, DC,
December 8, 1988.

Hon. RICHARD L. THORNBURGH,
U.S. Attorney General, Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: We are writing to you with some urgency regarding the Department of Justice's enforcement of the employer sanctions and anti-discrimination provisions of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 (IRCA).

We are writing to you in your supervisory capacity as Director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Office of Special Counsel, both of which are given significant enforcement responsibilities for the employer sanctions component and anti-discrimination provisions of IRCA.

Our concern is prompted by the release of a recent General Accounting Office study on sanctions enforcement, "IMMIGRATION REFORM: Status of Implementing Employer Sanctions After Second Year".

GAO REPORT

As you are aware, IRCA requires the GAO to review annually for three years the implementation and enforcement of employer sanctions for the purpose of determining if such provisions, among other things, have caused a pattern of discrimination against U.S. citizens or other eligible workers. In the second annual report the GAO found that:

Of the estimated 4.2 million employers in the survey population, 22% were not aware of IRCA's sanctions provisions. For those aware of the law, as many as 20% did not clearly understand its major provisions;

Of the 3.3 million employers who had heard of IRCA, one of six, or as many as 528,000 had begun or increased the practice of (1) asking only "foreign looking" persons for work authorization documents, or (2) hiring only U.S. citizens; 248,000 (or 15%) of those surveyed were unclear about the penalties for employers who discriminate;

Of 81 state and local agencies that enforce antidiscrimination laws, 19 are generally unfamiliar with IRCA's antidiscrimination provisions and 44 had not received information about the Office of Special Counsel's forms used in filing a charge;

As of September 19, 1988, the Office of Special Counsel had received 59% more complaints of discrimination than it had initially anticipated;

According to the Office of Special Counsel, its FY 1989 operating budget is 12% lower than that of the previous year, and does not provide adequate staffing for the anticipated workload.

The evidence found by the GAO confirms previously reported incidents of discrimination by the Chicago Commission on Human Relations, the State of Illinois, the New York State Assembly Task Force, the New York Governor's Task Force, and other public and private agencies.

Despite the above evidence, the GAO report asserts that there is no pattern of discrimination caused by employer sanctions. We choose to dispute that conclusion for several substantive reasons. The most significant of these is the finding that one in six employers surveyed has acknowledged discriminatory hiring practices. The GAO's claim that there is no pattern of discrimination is based largely on the fact that Congress failed to provide the GAO with a definition of what constitutes such a pattern for purposes of their three annual reports.

The survey shows that employers are indeed engaging in discriminatory practices on a substantial scale. Furthermore, the GAO found that levels of unfair hiring practices were related directly to employers' knowledge of IRCA's verification requirements. In other words, the businesses that did not fully understand IRCA were the same ones most likely to discriminate. Since 20% of all employers surveyed did not understand the major provisions of IRCA, it is reasonable to infer that the actual level of discrimination is likely to be even greater than the already alarming levels indicated in the GAO report.

Moreover, in spite of Congress' attempt to enact a meaningful antidiscrimination provision, it is now evident that significant loopholes remain. For example, IRCA's citizenship status protections apply only to those aliens who qualify as "intending citizens." This is a narrowly defined category under IRCA that only extends to legal permanent residents, political refugees, asylees, and certain persons who obtained legalization under the amnesty program. Many persons are left unprotected, including those who obtained legal status under the Special Agricultural Worker program.

Congress clearly intended these people to become members of U.S. society. It is therefore unacceptable that they not be covered by IRCA's protections against discrimination. Because this group and others are not protected by the citizenship status antidiscrimination provisions, the methodology employed by the GAO will underreport the extent to which they will suffer unlawful discrimination.

We should emphasize that, in our belief, the full discriminatory impact of employer sanctions has yet to be realized. This is so simply because employer sanctions went fully into effect only recently (June, 1988) and for agricultural employers only in December 1988. Until that time, employers in violation of the sanctions law were subject to a citation—not a fine—only if they had first been visited by a representative of the INS who explained the law to them.

RECOMMENDATIONS

In light of the GAO's findings, we recommend the following courses of action:

A supplemental request for additional appropriations for the Office of Special Counsel. These funds should be used for the following purposes:

Additional attorney personnel as well as for the establishment of regional offices of the Office of Special Counsel to assist in outreach and processing of claims made by victims of discrimination. To maximize scarce resources, OSC should establish a presence within EEOC offices.

The development of a comprehensive public education campaign on the antidiscrimination provisions of IRCA. The GAO report suggests that the Special Counsel be directed to develop, in conjunction with other federal agencies including EEOC, INS, and DOL, a coordinated strategy to educate the public about IRCA's antidiscrimination provisions, as well as an implementation plan and budget proposal for the federal budget process.

In addition, the report indicates that a more coordinated federal effort would make employers less likely to engage in unfair employment practices. Clearly, a public information effort aimed at both employers and the potential victims of discrimination is vital to the prevention of unfair employment practices.

Support for legislation to amend and expand the coverage of the antidiscrimination provisions of IRCA to include Special Agricultural Workers.

In conjunction with the development of a comprehensive public education campaign, we strongly suggest a return to the citation and education phase of employer sanctions/antidiscrimination implementation.

As you will recall, the INS devoted several months of its first year of implementation to a public education campaign on the use of the I-9 employment verification form. Since there is substantial evidence that employers are not yet adequately informed of their responsibility not to discriminate, more public education is obviously needed.

The effective implementation of such a public education campaign calls for a moratorium on the enforcement of civil and criminal penalties under employer sanctions, as well as the record-keeping requirements of the sanctions provisions. Failure to implement such a moratorium would only guarantee the perpetuation of immigration-related employment discrimination in a manner prohibited by Section 274B of the Immigration and Nationality Act and other federal laws, including Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

CONCLUSIONS

There is now little doubt that employer sanctions are causing alarmingly high levels of employment discrimination. It is also clear that such discrimination will not be eliminated or reduced substantially simply through the continuation of current policies and practices. We believe strongly that all persons should be protected from unlawful discrimination in the workplace. Continuation of policies and practices, which both stimulate unlawful discrimination and fail to adequately address such discrimination, is intolerable in a pluralistic society committed to the goal of equal opportunity.

For the foregoing reasons, we respectfully urge your immediate attention to the urgent matter of discrimination under IRCA. We would welcome the opportunity to meet with you, at your convenience, to discuss these concerns more fully.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE,
Washington, DC, January 19, 1989.

Mr. CHARLES KAMASAKI,
Ms. CECILIA MUNOZ,
National Council of La Raza, Washington, DC

DEAR MR. KAMASAKI AND MS. MUNOZ: Thank you for your letter of December 8, 1988 to the Attorney General. He has asked us to respond in his behalf. All of us share your concerns about the anti-discrimination provisions of the Immigration Reform and Control Act (IRCA) of 1986: enforcement of employer sanctions need not and must not lead to discrimination against anyone authorized to work in this country.

The findings of the Second Annual General Accounting Office (GAO) Report that there is no widespread pattern of discrimination will not lead the United States government to lessen its efforts in this area. Our policy is not to argue over what threshold constitutes a widespread pattern of discrimination but to flatly state that one case of discrimination is one case too many.

It is our belief that continued and increased education of employers, employees, and the general public is the best bulwark against discrimination. Long before the GAO Report, the Department was addressing that need.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) and the Office of Special Counsel for Immigration Related Unfair Employment Practices (OSC) have undertaken a number of measures to get the word out. Together we produced a pamphlet entitled "Immigration Reform and Control Act (IRCA) of 1986: Your Job and Your Rights." Over 1,400,000 copies of this easy to read, informative brochure have been distributed, and an additional printing of one million copies is in the works. A Spanish Language version is also being produced. The OSC provides a copy to every alien who files a "Declaration of Intending Citizen" (INS Form I-772). The INS plans to distribute this brochure to every alien who is granted permanent resident status, granted asylum, or admitted as a refugee. In addition, they will be made available to all immigrants at U.S. ports of entry. Our goal is to make the brochure available to every alien eligible for protection from citizenship status discrimination.

Both the INS and OSC have enlisted the aid of other governmental entities with responsibilities under IRCA such as the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and the Department of Labor to help distribute "Your Job and Your Rights". Hundreds of public interest organizations (including your own) have also been given supplies of the brochure.

The INS has reached out to Task Forces such as those in New York State and public interest studies such as The Program for Research on Immigration Policy of the Rand Corporation and The Urban Institute. It is our desire to contribute to a better understanding of potential discrimination issues. We appreciate the work of such groups, and we seek participation in their efforts.

The mass media has been used to convey our message. The INS and the OSC produced radio and television public interest spots featuring Jimmy Smits, who plays the lawyer "Fuentes" on the "L.A. Law" television series. Mr. Smits, by the way, donated his time and labor. These spots, which ran on radio and television stations all across the country, urged viewers who believe that they might be victims of discrimination to call the OSC's toll free number. They were broadcast in English and Spanish. The OSC was flooded with calls after they ran. Because of the success of this effort, a second public service announcement with another entertainment star is planned.

The INS and OSC have recently introduced an educational handout for employers, which will be distributed by the INS and the Department of Labor during educational visits and I-9 inspections. The OSC's toll free 800 number has been included in INS education materials concerning I-9 requirements, such as posters and handbooks.

The INS has instituted a service-wide program to educate its staff on IRCA's anti-discrimination requirements; this program includes videotape presentations and related educational materials.

The OSC has conducted a series of mass mailings to state and local human rights agencies, qualified designated entities, unions, legal aid offices, and public interest groups, providing them with information about IRCA's anti-discrimination prohibitions and forms for filing charges with the Office.

The OSC has worked to make the charge filing process as simple as possible. When it found there was confusion over whether to file charges with the EEOC or the OSC, an agreement was developed between those two offices, under which each serves as the other's agent for receiving charges. This agency relationship eliminates the danger of loss of rights by deserving charging parties who file with the wrong office and miss the filing deadlines.

We also found there was confusion over whether to file the Declaration of Intending Citizen form with the INS or with the OSC. Again, we acted to simplify the process. Under an agency agreement between the INS and OSC, it is now permissible to file the Declaration with either.

We believe it is important to point out that most of these educational efforts were carried out after the GAO had distributed its survey questionnaire, in November 1987. Is is certainly reasonable to expect that the results would be different if the survey were conducted today.

With regard to employer sanctions, it would not be appropriate to return to the citation phase in light of the current legislation; however, you may be assured by the continued balanced approach to sanctions in which education will continue to be an integral part. Note that INS offices do exercise discretion and still often issue a warning before issuing a fine, particularly if a prior educational visit had not taken place.

Nevertheless, we all agree that even more needs to be done. This will be an opportune time to invite your suggestions on how to better educate employers and the general public on the anti-discrimination message and to insure that all incidents of discrimination reach the proper forum.

Both of us look forward to the meeting scheduled with you and your colleagues on January 26, 1989 to explore how to improve our education efforts and to discuss other IRCA related matters of mutual interest.

We appreciate your interest in this matter and trust this response demonstrates our commitment to eliminating employment discrimination.

Sincerely,

ALAN C. NELSON,
Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service.

LAWRENCE J. SISKIND,
Special Counsel, Office of Special Counsel, Department of Justice.

WASHINGTON, DC, February 6, 1989.

Hon. RICHARD L. THORNBURGH,
U.S. Attorney General, Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: Thank you for your assistance in arranging a meeting with representatives of the Department of Justice and other federal agencies to discuss enforcement of the antidiscrimination provision of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 (IRCA).

On January 26, 1989, representatives of our respective organizations met with Alan C. Nelson, Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service; Lawrence J. Siskind, Special Counsel, Office of Special Counsel; John R. Schroeder, Assistant Commissioner of the INS, Employer and Labor Relations; and representatives from the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Department of Labor, and the General Accounting Office. The meeting was a very useful beginning in what we hope will be an ongoing cooperative effort to address problems of employment discrimination under IRCA.

As you know, the meeting was the outgrowth of an exchange of correspondence between us concerning the findings of the Second Annual Report (November 1988) from the General Accounting Office of the enforcement of employer sanctions and the related problem of employment discrimination. You will recall that the GAO had found, among other things, that of the 3.3 million employers in this country who had heard of IRCA, one in six, or as many as 528,000 had begun or increased the practice of (1) asking only "foreign looking" persons for work authorization documents, or (2) hiring only U.S. citizens; 248,000 (or 15%) of those surveyed were unclear about the penalties for employers who discriminate.

We are pleased that you share our concerns about employment discrimination and the enforcement of the antidiscrimination provisions of IRCA. As Commissioner Nelson and Special Counsel Siskind indicated in their letter to us dated January 19, 1989, we agree that there is no need to dispute that threshold of discrimination constitutes a "widespread pattern of discrimination", and that even a single case of discrimination is intolerable. The results of the GAO report clearly indicate to us that discrimination is occurring on a massive scale. We continue to feel strongly that immediate steps must be taken to alleviate this very serious problem.

The Nelson-Siskind letter was particularly helpful in setting out activities already undertaken by the INS as part of its public education activities in the area of employer sanctions enforcement. As we understand it, Assistant Commissioner Schroeder and his staff have also designed an additional public education campaign focusing on the antidiscrimination provisions of IRCA. We look forward to our continued work with Mr. Schroeder in the development of a meaningful public education campaign. However, we also believe that additional initiatives are needed.

At the conclusion of the meeting, we offered several recommendations which are designed to complement the outreach activities which are currently underway:

Attorney General's Policy Statement Opposing Employment Discrimination.—We urge the Attorney General to issue a policy statement on behalf of DOJ that deplores employment discrimination in all of its forms. The statement should focus particular concern on recent reports of discrimination against individuals authorized to work in the United States, which some attribute to employer sanctions. The purpose of the statement is to raise public consciousness about IRCA-related employment discrimination. Employers should be as concerned about violating antidiscrimination prohibitions under IRCA as they are with complying with employer sanctions. We urge the Department of Justice to state explicitly that it places equal importance on the enforcement of both elements of the law;

Regional Offices for the Office of Special Counsel.—We urge the Office of Special Counsel to establish regional offices in areas with high concentrations of immigrants. At a minimum, this would mean opening offices in Chicago, Dallas, Los Angeles, Miami and New York City, locations identified by the GAO report as "high alien popualtion cities." This would increase the visibility of the OSC to potential victims of discrimination, and should facilitate the filing of discrimination claims under IRCA;

Special Counsel Task Force on Public Education.—We recommend that the Attorney General direct the Special Counsel to develop a task force in conjunction with other federal agencies, including EEOC, INS, and DOL. The goal of such a task force would be to develop a coordinated strategy to educate the public about IRCA's antidiscrimination provision and develop a plan for carrying out the strategy, including a budget. OSC should submit this information to the Director of OMB for consideration during the federal budget process because no specific appropriation exists for education and more than one federal agency is involved. This is in accordance with a principal recommendation made by the General Accounting Office in its Second Annual Report.

In addition, we believe that the responsibility of such a task force should include the implementation of a public education campaign containing the following elements:

The continued use of public service announcements which feature media personalities; according to the INS and the OSC, one such announcement has already proven to be effective in informing the public about national origin and citizenship status discrimination; and

The development of a media campaign focused on ethnic media in cooperation with local community-based organizations. This campaign should follow the model used in the final phase of the outreach campaign implemented by the INS and community agencies for the closing months of the legalization program;

Legal Services Corporation Representation for Newly Legalized Persons.—We urge the Department of Justice to support the provision of Legal Services Corporation representation to newly legalized persons. As you know, the Legal Services Corporation has proposed restricting such services for a period of 5 years. We believe that this proposal is unconscionable; it would deny persons particularly vulnerable to discrimination access to a means of legal redress.

We appreciate your concern and attention to this critical matter, and we respectfully request your consideration of these recommendations. Our organizations are eager to assist in resolving problems associated with IRCA-related employment discrimination. Thank you for your consideration of these views.

Sincerely,

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, SPECIAL COUNSEL FOR IMMIGRATION RELATED UNFAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES,
Washington, DC, April 4, 1989.

CHARLES KAMASAKI,
National Council of La Raza, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. KAMASAKI: This responds to your February 6, 1989 letter to the Attorney General. He referred it to this Office for response.

Your letter offers a number of recommendations designed to complement the outreach activities currently underway. The Department has already taken actions effecting many of them.

You urge that the Attorney General issue a statement deploring employment discrimination. The Attorney General has gone on record many times deploring discrimination of every kind, and pledging vigorous enforcement of the statutes designed to prevent it. He believes that actions are a better way to combat IRCA-related discrimination than words.

For that reason, the Attorney General has recently endorsed one of your other recommendations. On March 23, 1989, he directed me to chair a task force of Federal agencies to conduct a concerted public education campaign. He has requested that the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Department of Labor, and the Small Business Administration participate. He has directed me to report directly to him on the task force's progress.

The Attorney General believes that the best way to eradicate discrimination is to educate employees so that they know their rights and how to protect them, and to educate employers so that they don't discriminate in the first place. The task force will be the Government's vehicle for implementing a coordinated and sustained educational effort. We will rely on mass media advertising, as well as more specialized outreach activities. We will also work closely with private organizations, such as yours, to communicate our message to the public. Please consider this letter an invitation to you to share your thoughts on how we can best publicize our message.

You recommended that the Office of Special Counsel establish regional offices. In the current budget climate, I do not think the idea will fly. Instead, the Department has sought practical alternatives which allow us to take advantage of existing government facilities. For example, pursuant to an agreement between OSC and EEOC, it is possible to file IRCA discrimination charges with any EEOC field office. We are entering into similar arrangements with State and local fair employment practices agencies. These arrangements also call for information sharing. In addition, INS has instituted procedures to ensure that any discrimination charges received by it are forwarded to OSC within 24 hours. Finally, the Department of Labor has established a procedure for informing OSC of potential discrimination discovered during its audits. The net effect of all these measures is to project an OSC presence in cities all over the country.

Finally, you urge that the Legal Services Corporation be allowed to fund legal representation for newly legalized persons. As you know, there are regulations pending that would prohibit this. The Attorney General has not yet reached a conclusion on whether these regulations should issue. I can assure you that he has been made aware of the many powerful arguments that support your position on this issue. I hope to be able to report to you on his final decision in the very near future.

I look forward to continuing our dialogue. Please continue to bring your concerns and recommendations to the attention of the Department and this Office. We may occasionally differ on tactics but we are one on the basic goal: to counter IRCA-related discrimination without pause or respite.

Sincerely,

LAWRENCE J. SISKIND,
Special Counsel.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS,

Washington, DC, February 16, 1989.

Mr. ALAN C. NELSON,
Commissioner, U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Washington, DC.

Mr. LAWRENCE J. SISKIND,
Special Counsel, Office of the Special Counsel, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC

Dear MESSRS. NELSON AND SISKIND: The purpose of this letter is to urge the Government both to expand its education and enforcement efforts with respect to IRCA's discrimination prohibitions and to focus those efforts where recent studies show that education is most needed.

It is a critical first step in this regard that potential job applicants understand their rights and obligations. We therefore continue to believe that a presence by the Office of Special Counsel around the country is essential to that end. (In saying this, we do not mean to imply that new and separate offices must be established in every instance or to preclude taking advantage of current Justice Department and INS facilities.) We would be pleased to work with you and your staff people in designing the least expensive ways of achieving this end.

Equally to the point the Government has an urgent obligation to begin a major education effort targeted at those parts of the employer community where the evidence suggests it is most needed. This means both geographical targeting and a focus upon smaller employers. This is not the occasion to detail our thoughts on how such a program might operate; suffice it to say that, again, we are willing and anxious to work with you and your staff people.

The AFL-CIO is, and I believe you know, committed to ensuring that IRCA's employer sanctions provisions do not produce discrimination against persons who are legally authorized to work in the United States. It was out of this concern that, during consideration of the bills that became the 1986 Act, we urged Congress to adopt provisions prohibiting such discrimination and then endorsed the Frank provisions that were enacted.

Against this backgound, we are deeply concerned by the recent GAO study showing that numbers of employers do not understand what the sanctions provisions require and what the Frank provisions bar, and that, consequently, some employers are not conforming with the law. We likewise find it unacceptable that, as the State of New York Inter-Agency Task Force reports, there are employers in the New York City area who refuse to accept job applicants' valid evidence of authority to work. These data, and others that have been reported, impose an obligation to increase the efforts to bring about genuine understanding of, and compliance with, IRCA.

It is out of that sense of obligation that the AFL-CIO offers the suggestions set out in this letter. And it is in the same spirit that we urge the new Administration to seek funds committed to the program we discuss above. The labor movement, you have my assurance, would actively support such a request and would work in Congress for the necessary appropriation.

Sincerely,

LANE KIRKLAND,
President.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS,

Washington, DC, March 9, 1989.

Hon. RICHARD L. THORNBURGH,
U.S. Attorney General, Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

Dear MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: We appreciate the willingness you expressed to the Executive Committee of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights when we met with you some weeks ago, to continue a dialogue with the civil rights community. We write now to pursue one of the subjects that was raised at that meeting, namely, enforcement of the anti-discrimination provisions of the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act (IRCA).

Shortly after enactment of IRCA, the Leadership Conference, which had taken no position on the legislation but which, of course, regularly monitors enforcement of federal civil rights statutes, established an Ad Hoc Task Force to monitor enforcement of the new law's anti-discrimination provisions. That Task Force has now reported to the Executive Committee on recent developments including the November, 1988, findings of the General Accounting Office. As reported by the GAO and others looking at these matters, there is today both ignorance and misunderstanding of IRCA's requirements and alarming employer discrimination against those who look or sound "foreign". Thus, GAO tells us that:

"Since November 1986 an estimated 528,000, or 16 percent, of the 3.3 million employers who were aware of the law reported beginning or increasing policies or practices that may not be permitted under the law."

The Executive Committee believes that substantial and focused new Executive Branch effort must now be directed to clarifying public understanding and to effective prevention of such discrimination. We are aware of the efforts heretofore by the office of Special Counsel and by the INS, and likewise aware of the present budget constraints. Nonetheless, such discrimination is intolerable (as we are sure you agree). The Justice Department, as the enforcement agency for the relevant IRCA provisions, is the appropriate agency to take the least in the additional activities that are so clearly needed.

To that end, we urge the following actions, which we know have already been recommended to you by others:

1. That the Attorney General issue a policy statement on IRCA-related discrimination. We recommend that the statement deplore such discrimination, point out its illegality, commit the INS as well as the Office of Special Counsel (OSC) to enforcement of the legal prohibitions, and emphasize that enforcing the anti-discrimination provisions is as important as enforcing employer sanctions. Such a statement could go far to improve general public awareness of the IRCA prohibition, and to improve employer appreciation of the behavior the Government will insist upon.

2. That the OSC establish a physical presence in areas with high concentrations of immigrants, i.e., Chicago, Dallas, Los Angeles, Miami and New York City. The LCR has long urged that such a presence is essential if the discrimination provisions of IRCA are to be made meaningful, and we believe that the 1988 GAO Report now puts the matter beyond debate. Such a presence need not entail free-standing new government offices, but could build upon and work within existing federal offices such as those of the EEOC, the Department of Labor, the Social Security Administration and others. The critical ingredient is the presence of OSC personnel who can speak and educate within the community and provide an accessible and welcoming place for the receipt of discrimination charges and the provision of advice and assistance.

3. That the Attorney General support the provision of Legal Services Corporation representation to persons newly-legalized under IRCA. Both the Department of Justice and the Legal Services Corporation (LSC) have proposed regulations that would include legal services as one of the federal financial assistance programs from which newly legalized residents are barred for a period of five years. Many LCCR member organizations have maintained in comments on the proposed regulations that legal services do not constitute a form of "financial assistance" that Congress intended to restrict. It is our additional concern that denying these residents access to LSC services would mean denying a means of legal redress to the group most vulnerable to the threat of discrimination under IRCA. Many of those subject to this sort of discrimination would be eligible for and in need of the kinds of services that LSC-funded organizations provide. An Executive Branch effort to curtail the discrimination that is occurring under IRCA must include support and encouragement for institutions that assist the victims of unfair hiring practices in filing charges.

4. That the Special Counsel take the initiative in setting up an Executive Branch task force of all relevant federal agencies (EEOC, INS, DOL) to develop and launch immediately a strategy for the public education that is needed in this area. The Department of Justice should seek the funds necessary to implement fully this public education campaign.

The elements of a public education campaign of the kind we think the evidence shows is required include: education of the public generally as to the national origin and citizenship status discrimination that is made illegal by IRCA; education of the population that is at risk as to what it cannot legally be subjected to and what, where and how redress is available; and education of employers on just what it is that IRCA requires and, equally important, what it forbids them to do. The first element is directed to the populace generally, the second to those who are immigrants or who have characteristics of appearance or speech that may be taken as making them "foreign", and the third to that part of the employer community that is the most likely to hire persons in the second category and most likely to discriminate against some among them. The EEOC would seem particularly qualified to address this last element.

We thank you for your attention to this important issue and for your consideration of our suggestions. We stand ready, of course, to do anything that we can to assist the Government's efforts to combat and prevent discrimination related to the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act.

Very truly yours,

BENJAMIN L. HOOKS,
Chairperson.

RALPH G. NEAS,
Executive Director.

LAUREL, MD, ELECTRONIC EMISSIONS TEST LABORATORY

Mr. HATFIELD. I would like to inquire of the distinguished chairman whether my understanding is correct that, in appropriating in this bill the full amount requested by the administration for the operation and facilities of the Federal Communications Commission, that request includes no funds designated for upgrading of the Commission's Laurel, MD, Electronic Emissions Test Laboratory.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I am concerned about lack of adequate resources for this facility, because its services are vital to the continued progress and marketing competitiveness of the U.S. electronics industry. Especially at this critical juncture when industry is about to move into major new technologies and products, such as high definition visual systems and advanced communications based on fiber optics, we can ill-afford Government testing facilities that are slow and antiquated.

Before any new electronic products can be marketed in the United States, they must be tested and approved by the FCC at the Laurel Lab to assure that they emit only a minimum of radio signals which could interfere with airborne communications. Without the FCC stamp of approval for such emissions, no computer or other electronic device can enter the stream of U.S. commerce.

Important as that test process is, however, and as rapidly as the electronics sector is increasing in technological sophistication, the FCC laboratory which must test this flood of products has not been reequipped for decades. Much of the equipment in the lab dates from the early 1970's, and some from the 1940's. Far from being "state-of-the-art" to match the equipment it must analyze, the lab's equipment is limited and antiquated. As a result, tests that would take a modern private testing laboratory a few hours to perform can take weeks at Laurel.

Mr. President, FCC officials have contingency plans for replacing their antiquated equipment, and estimate that it would cost between $1.5 and $5 million, depending upon the level of capability to be achieved. The reason that amount of money is required now is that very little has been reinvested in the equipment over the past decade or more. Even when the FCC budget, as approved by OMB and the administration, has included some funds for equipment, those funds have often been diverted to other priorities and purposes. As I have noted, although we are appropriating the full amount for the FCC requested by the administration for 1990, there are no funds for this purpose included in the administration request.

Mr. President, I believe the Committee on Appropriations, and the relevant authorizing committees of the Congress ought to take a closer look at the situation at the Laurel Laboratory, and its trade and regulatory implications for the electronics industry, perhaps culminating in a hearing, with an eye toward earmarking funds in fiscal year 1991. In the meantime, during the coming fiscal year 1990, it would be this Senator's hope and expectation that the FCC would allocate some of its discretionary funds within the total budget provided in this bill to begin to remedy the laboratory's equipment and other problems, which, as I've indicated, are otherwise likely to be worse as the burden of new electronic products to be tested continues to expand. I'm told that certain basic equipment could be replaced and automated for as little as $150,000, which would have a significant immediate benefit. I would think that the Commission could find at least that much in its fiscal year 1990 budget to devote to urgently needed laboratory equipment without inhibiting the Commission's ability to perform its other functions and services. I would urge the Commission to do just that, and I would ask the chairman if he concurs and could join with me in looking further at this matter as the committee reviews FCC funding requirements for fiscal year 1991.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the Senator for his comments. I share his concerns and his interest in seeing to it that the regulatory functions of the FCC do not unreasonably impede the ability of manufacturers to enter the marketplace with new products in a timely manner. I would be more than happy to join with the gentleman in examining this situation further and, if necessary, consider taking further action in fiscal year 1991.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank the Senator from Oregon for his comments and associate myself with his remarks. I would ask the Senator, however, whether in describing the shortcomings of the Laurel Laboratory it is his intent in any way to find fault with the engineering staff of the laboratory. I must say that I am advised by industry representatives that the test engineers employed by the FCC at the Laurel facility, while underequipped and to some extent understaffed, do yeoman's work with what they have and are generally highly professional and competent. Does the Senator agree that we appear to have here more a problem of outmoded equipment than any lack of professional expertise?

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator makes an excellent point, and I think he is quite correct. Indeed, considering the type of equipment they must contend with, and the heavy burden of applications, the employees of the laboratory deserve special commendation and credit for their work, rather than any criticism. That is certainly my view, and it is my intent in raising this issue to reward their efforts with at least a careful look at the need for new equipment to make them even more productive.

TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE CENTER FUNDING

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I would like to take a few moments to discuss some difficulties that have arisen with regard to funding of the trade adjustment assistance centers [TAAC's] in the Department of Commerce trade adjustment for firms program.

This program is very small. It is regularly less than $15 million annually, most of which goes to 12 regional trade adjustment assistance centers that provide technical assistance to firms injured by imports. Firms are certified eligible in Washington and then work with their local TAAC to develop an adjustment plan, which generally involves assistance on management, better manufacturing techniques, new marketing plans, et cetera. The TAAC's use the money to fund plan development and the actual assistance provided. There are no longer any loans or loan guarantees.

It has recently come to my attention that there may be a serious discrepancy in some of the data relating to the TAAC Program that the Appropriations Committee considered in its deliberations this year. That discrepancy concerns the amount of unobligated balances being carried over, a sum that relates directly to the fiscal year 1990 appropriation level.

Let me preface that discussion with the comment that there are also several matters on which we all seem to be in agreement.

First, all parties seem to agree that a current services level of expenditures for the TAAC's is between $11 and $12 million. Some of us, of course, would prefer a bigger program, but there seems to be no dispute that maintaining the TAAC's as they presently are would take an amount in the range I mentioned. The Department of Commerce makes that estimate. The TAAC's agree, and I am prepared to go along with it.

Second, we all agree that the amount of the fiscal year 1990 appropriation ought to be the current services level minus the unobligated balances.

Obviously, therefore, determining the amount of these balances is critical to determining the proper level of appropriation. Earlier this year, the Department of Commerce submitted to the Appropriations Committee an estimate of those balances of somewhat more than $9 million. That was a reestimate from the figures submitted to the House committee. On that basis, the Senate committee settled on an appropriation of $4.6 million, an amount sufficient to cover TAAC expenses plus the other activities of this program when added to the unobligated balances.

Now, however, some of us are hearing directly from the TAAC's that the Commerce estimate was wrong, that little if any of those balances are, in fact, unobligated. If that assertion is correct, then it is a virtual certainty that the TAAC's will run out of money early in calendar 1990. There are a number of reasons given for this difference of opinion, some of them benign and some of them quite critical of the Commerce Department's motivations in running this program.

It is not my intention at this point to get into that debate, Mr. President. This is a factual question that we ought to be able to answer with some degree of accuracy and finality, regardless of why the discrepancy may have occured.

Unfortunately, it appears that we may not be able to answer that question until next week. The TACC's will be submitting to the Commerce Department an accounting of their unobligated balances as of the end of fiscal year 1989 after this weekend. Those submissions will give us a much-clearer picture of where this program actually stands and whether there are sufficient unobligated balances to get us through next year with the appropriation that the committee has approved.

However, since we will most likely act on this bill prior to having this information, the matter will have to be resolved in conference. It is not my intention at this time to offer an amendment in the absence of hard data on the actual financial situation. Since the House level is higher than the Senate's, the conferees will have the option of accepting the higher figure should they discover next week that Commerce's estimates were erroneous.

I would, however, like to understand the attitude of the managers of the bill on this matter. I would hope that the managers remain committed to funding the TAAC's at a level sufficient to allow them to continue their current level of activities, and that the managers will act in conference consistent with that commitment. Specifically, I would welcome their assurance that if the actual level of unobligated balances is significantly below the Commerce Department's estimate submitted to the Senate committee, they will agree to a level of funding sufficient to keep the TAAC's operating at current levels. Can the managers reassure me on that point?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania. The subcommittee supports continued funding of the TAAC's at the level necessary to maintain their current level of activity. We will examine the new data expected next week, and if it indicates a likely shortage of available funds in fiscal year 1990, we will be prepared to make an adjustment in conference.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I also want to express my support for this program and its continuation at current levels. We have had the same discrepancy brought to our attention directly and are committed to resolving it. Should the data demonstrate that an adjustment is necessary to maintain the TAAC's at the agreed-upon level, then I will also consider it in conference.

Mr. HEINZ. I thank the managers for their consideration and support.

TIDE MEASURING STATIONS IN THE CHESAPEAKE BAY

Ms. MIKULSKI. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the Commerce, State, Justice, and Judiciary Subcommittee of the Appropriations to join in a colloquy regarding the funding provided in this appropriations bill for the six tide measuring stations in the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Of course I will.

Mr. RUDMAN. Yes.

Ms. MIKULSKI. It is my understanding that funds are included in the fiscal year 1990 NOAA appropriations for the operation and maintenance of six tide measurement stations in the Chesapeake Bay. It has come to my attention that the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is under the impression the funds are not included for the continued operation and maintenance for the tide stations located at Tolchester, MD, and Windmill Point, VA. I will ask unanimous consent that a letter from Harold M. Stanford, Chief, Physical Oceanography Division of NOAA to Capt. Michael R. Watson, President, Association of Maryland Pilots be included into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. However, I ask the chairman and ranking member if funding is included for these six stations.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, it is my intent that funds be provided within the level of appropriations for NOAA for all six tide gages in the Chesapeake Bay. As the Senator from Maryland is well aware these gages provide important information to the shipping community which provide for safe and reliable travel in the bay as well as important data used to analyze the effects of global warming. I also want to point out that the NOAA letter mentioned by Senator MIKULSKI erroniously reflects the action of Congress and was premature in speaking to this issue before final congressional action.

Mr. RUDMAN. Let me add that it is clearly my intention that NOAA continue to fund all six tide gages in fiscal year 1990 within the fund appropriated for NOAA in this bill currently before the Senate. These gages not only have the beneficial impact articulated by the chairman but they will enhance the receipts to our U.S. Treasury in the form of increased exports.

Ms. MIKULSKI. I thank the two distinguished Senators. As always I find them to be both informative and helpful. I just want to add one additional point regarding these important tide gages. As the Senators know I chaired the subcommittee in the House which authorized the activities involving merchant marine matters and became familiar with these gages. It is important for NOAA to continue operating all six stations so that environmental protection consistent with the Federal and multi-State agreement on the Chesapeake Bay is monitored. It is vital that every effort both large and small be pursued to improve the overall quality in the bay.

CENTER FOR OCEAN ANALYSIS AND PREDICTION

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I would like to draw my colleagues' attention to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's [NOAA] Center for Ocean Analysis and Prediction in Monterey, CA. This new coastal and global ocean analysis center, with its proximity to one of the world's best sources of physical oceanographic data, is helping NOAA to carry out its coastal and ocean missions. The center also serves as a critical component of NOAA's Ocean Communications Network, which is designed to distribute high volumes of data and information, forecast guidance outputs and other products necessary to develop reliable predictions on environmental changes of importance for the well-being of the Nation. I would urge the Chairman to consider in conference the adoption of language directing NOAA to provide support for the infrastructure and communications capabilities at this important center.

Mr. CRANSTON. I support this request.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank my friends from California for bringing this matter to my attention and I'll take a look at this forthcoming conference regarding NOAA's support of this program next year.

AMENDMENT NO. 901

(Purpose: To improve drug enforcement efforts in small towns and rural areas of the country)

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senator BENTSEN and others and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], for Mr. BENTSEN, for himself, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. NUNN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. WILSON, Mr. GRAHAM, and Mr. RUDMAN, proposes an amendment numbered 901.

Mr. INOUYE. I ask unanimous consent that reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At page 42, between lines 6 and 7, insert the following:

"In carrying out the drug enforcement activities funded by this title, the President, through the Attorney General and the Director of National Drug Control Policy, shall ensure that appropriate emphasis is given, and adequate federal resources are committed, to drug enforcement programs in the rural areas and smaller towns across the country."

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself, Senator BYRD, Senator HOLLINGS, Senator NUNN, Senator BAUCUS, Senator PRYOR, Senator GRAMM, Senator CONRAD, Senator WILSON, and Senator GRAHAM.

Mr. President, I know I don't have to stand here and tell my colleagues about the drug problem we have in this country. It is a subject with which we are all too familiar. Every day we see and hear and read about the tremendous toll drug dealers and drug users are taking from our country.

Without a doubt, the drug problem in our major cities is at a crisis level. Drug-related killings here in Washington have soared, workers on Wall Street are promised drugs as an incentive to boost their output, and street gangs in Los Angeles have developed a nationwide—and ruthless—drug network.

But the drug problem is not limited to our big cities. In recent years, particularly with the emergence of the highly addictive drug known as crack cocaine, there has been an alarming increase in drug abuse and drug-related crimes in small towns and rural areas across this Nation. Recent DEA reports provide dramatic evidence of this spread.

In 1986, the DEA surveyed its field offices and found crack cocaine to be available in 28 States and in the District of Columbia. When the DEA conducted another survey in December 1987, that number had jumped to 45 States. And while the DEA noted that crack cocaine was a more serious problem in the inner cities, it went on to report—and I quote—that:

Recent seizures indicate that crack has appeared in rural parts of Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida, Alabama, North Carolina, Delaware, Maryland, New York, and California. This rapid appearance of the drug in rural areas highlights the easy marketability and speed with which it is capable of spreading through society.

Crack cocaine seems to have made its way into rural areas of my home State only recently—Texas was not one of the 10 States listed by the DEA as having a crack cocaine problem in rural areas as of December 1987. But by early this year, the DEA was reporting substantial crack abuse and drug-related crime in widespread areas of rural Texas. There is no doubt that crack cocaine has established strongholds in rural areas of my State.

Our Texas law enforcement officers are working hard to fight the crack cocaine problem in these areas. And they are having some success. Last December, 54 suspected crack dealers were arrested in Marshall, TX. In June of this year, 31 persons involved in a crack cocaine ring active in San Augustine, TX were also arrested. Unfortunately, the list goes on.

Mr. President, when we are seeing crack houses in the rural areas of Texas, in small Texas towns like Gladewater (population 6,500) and San Augustine (3,000), and in cities like Marshall (25,000), Amarillo (150,000), and Lubbock (175,000), we have solid evidence of a serious drug problem in rural America and in our smaller towns and cities. We cannot ignore that problem; we must fight it.

I know that our national drug control strategy must include strong measures aimed at our major cities. But the urban problem must not be the exclusive focus of our effort if we are to make real progress. If we focus solely on the big cities and don't attack the drug problem in rural areas, all we are doing is buying ourselves a bigger drug problem in rural America. I for one don't think that is a good idea.

That's why I contacted Secretary Bennett back on July 14 to urge him to give real thought and attention to our rural drug problem in the President's drug control strategy. And I was pleased when he promptly responded "we understand that drugs and the problems they cause are not confined to our urban areas" and that "rural and suburban areas will not be forgotten" in the President's strategy.

After Secretary Bennett's assurances, I was dismayed when September 5 rolled around and the President unveiled his drug control strategy without any call for action on the rural drug problem. That's a big mistake.

That's why I'm offering this amendment today. It's a simple, straightforward amendment. It doesn't increase our spending in the war on drugs; and its sole aim is to ensure that we don't overlook an important aspect of the problem. The amendment states that the President, through the Attorney General and the National Drug Control Policy Director, shall ensure that appropriate emphasis is given, and adequate Federal resources are committed, to the drug problem in the small towns and rural areas of the country.

Mr. President, this amendment does not get into specifics. But it does lay a foundation for a comprehensive program aimed at stopping the spread of crack cocaine into rural America, and it fills a glaring gap in President Bush's drug control strategy. When we turn to the authorization bill, which I understand may happen as soon as next week, I will be working with Mr.

BIDEN and others on legislation that will give the administration some more direction on how the Senate thinks drug enforcement should be improved in rural areas. At that point, we can target some resources to this important effort.

As we escalate our war against drugs, we must attack drugs in rural areas and in the major cities. This amendment sends us down that road, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the amendment by the Senator from Texas. I share his deep concern that, in our desire to commit adequate resources to fight the drug epidemic in the Nation's cities, we run the risk of neglecting the fight against drugs in rural areas.

Congress has attempted, in the drug bills passed in 1986 and 1988, to direct more Federal resources toward drug interdiction, law enforcement, and drug treatment and prevention. I have made clear my view that the most appropriate and most effective role for the Federal Government is to support activities that reduce the demand for drugs in the United States. Law enforcement and drug abuse treatment and prevention are key to the demand reduction effort.

Rural law enforcement agencies don't necessarily find themselves confronted with many large drug cases, but they do routinely deal with drug possession and sales cases. Many law enforcement agencies have stressed that they need more support for training their personnel on how to handle drug cases and also note the need for funds to coordinate enforcement activities among local and State law enforcement agencies.

The New York Times recently ran a story about the movement of drug gangs into rural areas. The story quoted Attorney General Richard Thornburgh as stating that significant cocaine operations have been found in Wyoming, heroin trafficking in Iowa, and LSD trafficking in rural Georgia. Unfortunately, I am not surprised by the news of this activity in rural areas. I understand that there have been some reports of drug gang activity in my home State. The Times story points out the folly of assuming that drugs respect national, State, or city boundaries. To ignore the drug problem in rural America is to ignore the power and reach of drug organizations.

When Congress has authorized new drug initiatives, we have tried to leverage Federal funds by requiring State and localities to match Federal funds. While I think that is good policy in theory, I must note that many cities in Arkansas have to struggle to meet any sort of matching requirement. When Congress authorizes matching grant programs in the future we need to be aware of the particularly tight budget constraints that face many small towns and rural counties and provide flexibility in certain cases.

I am pleased that the Senate approved a modification of the formula for distribution of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health [ADM] block grant as part of the Byrd drug package. When Congress reauthorized the block grant last year, the ADM formula was heavily weighted to urban areas. Proponents of this approach argued that it was necessary to direct resources to urban areas that are suffering the worst effects of the drug war. That argument neglects the fact that the drug problem is also ravaging rural America. Our action this week corrects that unfair urban bias in the formula.

Young people in rural Arkansas are using the same drugs as young people in New York City, Miami, or Chicago, and the problems and costs of providing treatment services for those drug abusers are as serious in Arkansas as in any urban area. Crack and cocaine have hit the countryside in Arkansas, and the citizens of my State are desperate that their children have good drug treatment options.

The fight against drugs is an international fight. I wish rural America could be protected from the tragedy of drug abuse, but it cannot. The fight against drugs demands a united approach on the international, national, State, and local levels.

I commend the Senator from Texas for directing the Senate's attention to the drug crisis in rural America.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared by both sides. We find it meritorious. I ask that it be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 901) was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania will please suspend.

The Senate will be in order. Senators are requested to please take conversations to the Cloakroom.

The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought the floor to make a few brief comments about issues which might have called for amendments and votes, but at this stage will not.

First, I would like to compliment the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Senator HOLLINGS, and the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, Senator RUDMAN, for their effective handling of this very important legislation. They are very experienced; Senator HOLLINGS having been a Governor before a long-term Senator, and Senator RUDMAN having been an attorney general before coming to the Senate in the fabled class of 1980.

They have handled the difficult bill very effectively, even though they did not see it exactly my way on the prison issue. But that matter, I think, will be revisited and I intend to move forward in the Judiciary Committee with authorizing legislation to try to have a larger Federal role on the issue of pretrial detention.

Mr. President, I had considered offering an amendment on issues relating to the strike force but have decided not to do so, after having had extensive conversations with the managers of the bill and with other Senators. That matter relates to a proposal by the Attorney General to abandon the strike forces over the considerable opposition of many of us in the Senate who have felt that the strike forces have been effective.

It was considered for a time to offer an amendment to restrain any expenditures under the justices appropriations bill for that purpose, but that has not proceeded.

The thought, instead, by a number of us, is to deal with this issue on the crimes bill, on the authorizing legislation. This Senator had considered an alternative to the strike forces by having some more extensive congressional oversight on the question of Justice Department activity. I had circulated the idea of having an amendment to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 6(e) which would have given the Congress more access to closed Justice Department files.

That, Mr. President, is a subject which I think ought to be considered, but not on this bill. The essence of the matter boils down to this: If the Justice Department is going to abandon the strike forces then there ought to be greater congressional oversight as to what the Justice Department is doing without the strike forces. Beyond the strike forces, it is my view there ought to be more extensive oversight generally.

I believe the rule of secrecy in the grand jury, while important for many, many purposes, ought to have a limitation when it comes to the critical function of congressional oversight. Many of our colleagues, if not most of our colleagues, have been troubled by their inability to have effective oversight and to find out what the Justice Department has done. It is a legiti-mate congressional function to have the oversight.

One case is illustrative. That is the case, the so-called MOVE case in Philadelphia where a bomb was dropped, where a fire raged without any efforts made by public authorities to put it out, where an entire block was burned up, where 11 people were killed, where there were serious questions of violations of the U.S. Civil Rights Act.

After that file was closed, after some 3 years of investigation, this Senator sought to find out why no action was taken and it was a closed file. This Senator was told that the matter could not be discussed because of grand jury secrecy rules.

Many of my colleagues have had similar problms with the Justice Department. The distinguished Senator from Iowa, Senator GRASSLEY, who is on the floor at the moment, has been a leader in the procurement issue and has sought to find out precisely what has been going on with many procurement cases.

Notwithstanding his very extensive, diligent, even valiant efforts, he could not get answers to a great many issues. It was a subject where I worked with him on the Administrative Practices Subcommittee a few years ago which even resulted in efforts to hold the then-Attorney General of the United States in contempt of Congress for failing to respond.

I mention this, Mr. President, because I think it is important to note it at a time when the Attorney General may move away from the strike forces, to say this Senator intends to pursue the idea with authorizing legislation in the Judiciary Committee.

I believe we can craft a narrow enough exception. Perhaps the closed files—and I emphasize closed files so we do not have any interference with pending matters—closed files could be viewed by Senators only. And maybe limited to the staff of the chairman or the staff of the ranking member, as those two staff members now have access to FBI files on judicial nominees. Or maybe it should be limited just to the discretion of the chairman and ranking member on the application of a Senator on the committee.

I do believe it is important that there be congressional oversight, and that cannot be accomplished now. With the elimination of the strike forces or at least some of the strike forces that matter is called into sharper focus.

There is one other matter, Mr. President, I would like to discuss briefly, and that is the issue of the allocation of agents from the Drug Enforcement Agency. I had discussed this matter with the chairman, Senator HOLLINGS, and with the ranking member, Senator RUDMAN. It would be my hope that the Drug Enforcement Agency would take a close look at three locales in my State of Pennsylvania. Specifically, the Erie area, the Wilkes-Barre/Scranton area and the area around New Castle, PA, which is very close to Youngstown, OH.

We have made available to the Drug Enforcement Agency a substantial number of new agents. I believe the number is 164 agents. That additional authorization has been provided because of a congressional determination that we need more DEA agents, based on what those of us in the Congress know.

It is not our decision to make the final judgment as to where the DEA agents will be assigned. That is not our function. I do believe, however, that when the authorization and appropriation has been made by the Congress, that the congressional views are entitled to some weight.

I have made recommendations in these three locales, not because someone has asked me to but because I have visited these areas. I have gone to Erie, PA and sat down with the U.S. attorney from the western district and the assistant U.S. attorney assigned to Erie and with the local prosecutors in the area and the local chiefs of police and have gone through their drug problems. I have seen that they have a very acute situation. They are close to Cleveland. They are close to Buffalo. They are on the Great Lakes. I believe they have made a compelling case to have a full-time DEA agent in Erie to carry on the Federal work and also to be of assistance to State and local enforcement agents.

The same situation prevails in the Scranton-Wilkes-Barre area, a very highly populated area which is located on major highways, a close distance from New York City and from Philadelphia. They, too, have demonstrated a need for extra Federal help on drug enforcement.

There again, I sat down with the U.S. Attorney from the middle district and with the local district attorneys and with local police officials and I think they have a very strong case to be made for a full-time DEA agent.

The same is true with New Castle, PA, located north of Pittsburgh and in proximity to Youngstown, OH. It would be my hope, Mr. President, that there could be some recognition by the Drug Enforcement Agency of the well-founded requests, like the ones this Senator has made and is making today, for these three particular locales. I would be very interested to hear of the views of my distinguished colleague from New Hampshire on this subject.

In the event Senator RUDMAN did not hear everything I said, this is the subject he and I talked about before on a Senate response or a committee response after a Senator, with some background and knowledge in the field, has made a very close survey and has made this kind of request.

Mr. RUDMAN. I would say to my friend from Pennsylvania that although I would agree——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN].

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank the Senator. I thought the Senator who asked the question still kept the floor.

Does the Senator yield the floor?

Mr. SPECTER. I do.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank the Chair.

I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania I do agree it is not our role to decide how agents are assigned. But I do believe in our responsibility in overseeing the expenditure of the funds that we have to be sure that high-impact areas receive their fair share of the allocation when we put in the kind of massive infusion of new personnel as we are doing across the board in the drug area, particularly in the DEA and FBI.

We will be pleased to work with the Senator from Pennylvania to assure those considerations are brought to the attention of the DEA, and that areas such as the ones the Senator has mentioned are certainly looked at closely to assure that, in fact, if they meet those criteria they do receive new personnel.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from New Hampshire for those comments. I do know from time to time Federal agencies may feel that there is some congressional intrusion. In an area like drugs have where those of us who have been in law enforcement in the past and have some substantial knowledge from those activities and where we have made a close review of the situation, as this Senator has done, for example, in Erie, Wilkes-Barre, Scranton and in the area around Youngstown and western Pennsylvania, New Castle, PA, that close attention be paid.

In closing, I want to thank my colleague, Senator RUDMAN, for coming to Philadelphia and taking a look at the Philadelphia strike force there. I thank the committee for the support of that special activity on drugs.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 902

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress that the international drug summit should include several items on its agenda, including consideration of measures to remove from power the drug trafficker, Manuel Noriega)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] proposes an amendment numbered 902.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill insert the following new section:

SEC. . The Congress finds that—

(1) The illegal use of drugs is a crisis in America, causing incalculable suffering and damage to individuals, families, and social institutions;

(2) The economic and social dislocation caused by illegal drugs has had a devastating effect on the fabric of our society and citizens;

(3) It is take a multi-faceted approach, both domestically and internationally, to successfully address the multi-faceted problem of illegal drugs;

(4) Manuel Noriega's continued exercise of power in Panama has contributed to political unrest and international illegal drugs trafficking in the hemisphere and the world, and that he should be removed from any position of power in Panama in order to reduce the drug flow and increase democracy;

(5) Public law 100-690, the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1983, enacted on November 18, 1988, expressed the sense of the Congress that the President should convene as soon as possible an international conference on combating illegal drug production, trafficking, and use in the Western Hemisphere; and

(6) The National Drug Strategy announced by the President on September 5, 1989, states that "priority consideration should be given to convening at an early date a drug summit:"

It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) The agenda of the international drug summit should include, among others, the subjects of interdiction, crop eradication, crop substitution, law enforcement, education and prevention, and the international sharing of intelligence;

(2) The President should consult with the leaders of participating countries at the international drug summit on ways to achieve international cooperation and coordination in support of measures directed at removing Manuel Noriega from any position of power in Panama; and

(3) In addition to or in the absence of an international drug summit, the United States should intensify unilateral and bilateral efforts as well as efforts in concert with international organizations and other multinational forums to assist the nations of the hemisphere in their battle against drugs and the drug traffickers, including measures directed at removing Manuel Noriega from any position of power in Panama.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the amendment I offer is straightforward. It expresses the American people's and Congress' determination to confront international drug traffickers, and free our country and hemisphere from drugs and the drug traffickers who parasitically profit from the suffering and destruction caused by illegal drugs. Congress last year passed legislation which said that the President should convene an international conference on illegal drugs as soon as possible. This resolution reemphasizes that intent, and encourages international cooperation.

My amendment also expresses our revulsion at, and ongoing determination to end, Manuel Noriega's outlaw regime, and the other powers, both governmental and extra-governmental, that profit from drugs at the expense of civilization itself.

Mr. President, this amendment expresses our conviction that the resources and power of the greatest nation on Earth should be marshaled to intensify unilateral, bilateral, and international efforts to free our Nation and the world from the grip of the tyranny of drugs, and despicable characters such as Noriega. This amendment states that we should seek "international cooperation and coordination in support of measures directed at removing Manuel Noriega from any position of power in Panama." This expresses administration policy, the intent of Congress, the fervent desire of the American people, and the hope of civilized people everywhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

There being no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 902) was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 903

(Purpose: To express the sense of Congress that the Comptroller General should report to Congress on the progress on the implementation of the agreement between the United States and Japan on the development of the FS-X Weapon System)

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in behalf of Senator BYRD and Senator DIXON and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], for Mr. BYRD (for himself and Mr. DIXON) proposes an amendment numbered 903.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . (a) It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) not later than June 1, 1990, and not later than June 1 each year thereafter, the Comptroller General of the United States, after consultation with appropriate officials of United States agencies represented on the Technical Steering Committee, should submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairmen of the Committees on Foreign Relations, Armed Services, Commerce, Science, and Transportation, and Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate a report describing the progress made in implementing the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) Between the United States Department of Defense and the Japan Defense Agency on Cooperation in the Development of the FS-X Weapon System, signed on November 29, 1988, and related documents thereto;

(2) not later than December 1, 1990, and not later than December 1 each year thereafter, the Comptroller General should submit to the President Pro Tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives an interim memorandum describing the progress that has been made in implementing the memorandum of understanding referred to in paragraph (1);

(3) the reports referred to in paragraph (1) and the interim memorandums referred to in paragraph (2) should assess, in detail, whether the requirements concerning, and the prohibitions on, the transfer of United States technologies to Japan, as provided in the memorandum of understanding referred to in paragraph (1), have been and are being complied with; and

(4) the Comptroller General should continue to submit such reports and interim memorandums so long as the memorandum of understanding referred to in paragraph (1) continues in effect.

(b) For purposes of subsection (a), the term "Technical Steering Committee" means the FS-X Technical Steering Committee established jointly by the Japan Defense Agency and the United States Department of Defense.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, this amendment has been reviewed by both sides and we find it to be in proper form.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared on this side.

MONITORING THE FSX PROJECT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on September 13 the Senate voted on a motion to override the President's veto of Senate Joint Resolution 113 on the FSX fighter deal with Japan. That resolution originally passed the Senate by a vote of 72 to 27, but President Bush managed to change the minds of enough Senators to avoid an override by one vote. I do not intend to revive the FSX dispute. The Senate has closed that chapter. But, now more than ever I intend to make sure Congress stays informed. I am offering an amendment calling for the GAO to monitor the progress of the FSX development program and provide Congress with periodic reports.

Certainly, I could simply make a request, as any Senator or Representative could, directly to the GAO, asking them to perform this work. Instead, I have chosen to offer this amendment and make it clear that this is a request from Congress, not from a single Member.

The amount of bipartisan support for my original resolution indicates the breadth of concern over this issue, and by adopting this amendment Congress can let it be known that we are still concerned. By staying informed and maintaining a spotlight on the FSX we can give the President's negotiators an additional lever to use in future negotiations with Japan. And I am sure our continuing role will not be lost on the Japanese.

I have here a copy of an article from Investor's Daily, September 15, 1989, titled "Mosbacher Says U.S. Is Getting Raw Deal on the FSX Fighter." The article describes the Secretary's remarks to a group of reporters in Japan. Mr. President, it does not help matters to have this country's highest commercial officer quoted in this context. It is doubly distressing that these remarks were made to a Japanese audience. This kind of report certainly doesn't do much to calm my fears about the FSX deal, but it does reinforce my desire to stay informed as the project progresses.

Mr. President, I introduced the legislation which eventually became Senate Joint Resolution 113 out of concern for America's economic future. I felt that once again the narrow parochial Defense Department view had prevailed within the administration. That view ignores the vital linkage between America's economic health and national security. Like the French who built the Maginot Line after World War I, we continue to prepare for the war we just won. The Bush administration continues to fight the cold war when we should be preparing for the economic competition of the 1990's and beyond. They ignore the changing realities of the world situation, preferring to focus solely on military might to the exclusion of U.S. economic security. The distinguished majority leader, Mr. MITCHELL, was right on the mark when he said the administration seems almost misty-eyed, almost nostalgic for the simple good old days of the cold war.

The ground is shifting rapidly in the world today, on the continent of Europe and on the Pacific Rim. The Soviets have recognized this—what does perestroika mean if not that economic reality is setting in in Moscow. Missiles or not, without computers, without fiber optics, without inventiveness, without economic and technological progress, the Soviets are going to be left out and they know it. It is about time we recognize this lesson too. It is America's economic vitality which will keep us great in the coming decades and I will continue to do everything within my power to insure that we maintain that vitality.

MOSBACHER SAYS U.S. IS GETTING RAW DEAL ON THE FSX FIGHTER

TOKYO.—Japan will benefit more than the U.S. from technology swapped under an agreement to jointly develop the FSX jet fighter, U.S. Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher said yesterday.

The U.S. Senate Wednesday sustained a presidential veto, allowing the U.S. and Japan to proceed with joint development of the FSX fighter under terms set earlier this year by President Bush.

A White House spokesman said the administration is pleased with the result of the Senate FSX vote.

A spokesman for Japan's Defense Agency said the vote represented the end of the conflict between the U.S. and Japan over the FSX. Full-scale development of the new fighter should now begin, he said.

Mosbacher said he was not completely satisfied with the deal and would rather see Japan fill its defense needs by buying F-16 fighters from the U.S. instead of developing the new fighter, which is based on the F-16.

The commerce secretary said that in terms of advanced technology, the Japanese will be the greater beneficiaries of the FSX program.

"In most cases, the vast majority of cases, the technology flow has been one way from us to Japan," Mosbacher told reporters on the third day of a four-day visit to Japan.

In a related development, Mosbacher reached an agreement with Japan's major domestic telecommunications company, Nippon Telephone and Telegraph, to cooperate on research and development in computer and telecommunication related fields.

The agreement is an extension and expansion of research cooperation that began in 1984 between the Japanese company and the National Institute of Standards and Technology of the U.S. Commerce Department.

"This agreement allows both Japan and the United States to enrich their technical capability without duplicating basic research in costly and time-consuming areas," Mosbacher said in a written statement announcing the agreement.

The Senate voted 66-34 to sustain a Bush veto of legislation that would have required the president to set tougher terms for the FSX agreement. Opponents of Bush's FSX deal fell one vote shy of the two-thirds margin needed to force Bush to accept a different version.

The vetoed legislation had asked that the U.S. get no less than 40% of the production work, barred the transfer of sensitive jet engine technology to Japan, directed the General Accounting Office to monitor the deal, ordered the Commerce Department to review production agreements and required that the president consider the agency's views on the production pact.

(Purpose: Expressing the support of the Senate for additional designations of new international gateways to foster increased export trade opportunities for nontraditional international gateway cities)

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senator DECONCINI and Senator MCCAIN and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], for Mr. DECONCINI (for himself and Mr. MCCAIN) proposes an amendment numbered 905.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . (a) The Senate finds that—

(1) officials representing eight United States airports recently met with Secretary Skinner to discuss the need for more airport gateways for United States cities for international service;

(2) these officials believe that the United States Government must place greater emphasis in United States international aviation negotiations on maximizing the new international trade opportunities;

(3) direct nonstop air service to foreign destinations facilitates international business for our country's industries, attracts foreign investment, makes travel abroad more convenient for United States citizens and increasees foreign tourism;

(4) direct international air transport is especially important to tourism and the high-tech industries on the cutting edge of our Nation's drive for international competitiveness, both of which tend to be located away from traditional air service gateways;

(5) a single nonstop air service to a previously unserved foreign point can result in economic benefits to the United States community alone of up to a quarter of a billion dollars or more in the first year, with the benefits compounding thereafter; and

(6) the time savings to United States travelers alone from such a service are greater than profits United States airlines would lose, if any, from traffic diversion.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that the United States Senate support the designation of markets previously without nonstop international air international service as new "gateways", and believes that other airlines, United States or foreign, be able to provide "gateway" service when United States airlines already serving the foreign country in question fail to do so.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise to attempt to advance development of international trade opportunities for all U.S. communities and to revive competitiveness in the international air carrier industry. The DeConcini-McCain amendment urges the immediate expansion of direct air service to nontraditional gateways while protecting the legitimate needs of our national air transportation system. In short, I am convinced the U.S. aviation system is being stifled by market dominance by only a very few U.S. carriers at the expense of the rest of the U.S. industry and the American international aviation services consumer.

Mr. President, no one in this body can deny the simple fact that today's economic marketplace is far more expansive than the confines of our national borders. Given this reality, it makes little sense to continue to deny American communities the essential direct international air services to expand their local economic base without an overriding and compelling national interest. I have been told that the Department of Transportation and State Department have traditionally insisted that new international gateways have not been approved because of compelling U.S. interests to protect U.S.-based carriers from competition from foreign-based carriers. It is argued that such protection is indispensable to provide for the efficient and orderly development of the national air transportation system.

Mr. President, at the same time, I have been advised that some U.S. carriers have what amounts to unlimited access to provide direct air service into the same foreign country markets as those desired by many non-traditional gateway U.S. communities, but have deliberately not taken advantage of those rights. And lastly, I am advised that more than one foreign air carrier has expressed interest in providing direct air service to nontraditional gateway communities. In short, our U.S.-based air carriers are preventing, with the aid of agencies of our Federal Government, the provision of international air services to the American public by very few U.S.-based airlines when other airlines, foreign and domestic alike, are seeking to satisfy what they believe to be sufficient consumer demand to warrant provision of direct international air services.

The sense of the Senate amendment before you cannot be construed to prevent the orderly development of our national air transportation system. Instead, it reemphasizes the intent of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978's specific intent to promote actual and potential competition rather than enhanced market domination by only a few existing air carriers.

This amendment addresses the needs of the domestic air carrier industry, but does not protect them when their interests are wholly detrimental to the ability of non-traditional gateway communities to benefit from the foreign trade advantages enjoyed by so-called traditional gateways which have such direct air international service.

Mr. President, the time has come for the Senate to send a message to the administration, and particularly the Department of Transportation, that the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 mandates that each give far higher priority to the consumer and community needs than the Department of Transportation and State Department, the lead agencies on this issue, do today. My amendment urges that the administration bridle its emphasis upon market regulation in order to protect the interests of U.S.-based air carriers which currently dominate the direct international air service marketplace. It specifically sends the message that other American communities require greater consideration than previously afforded them during the negotiation of air transportation agreements with foreign nations.

Mr. President, this amendment would again place the Senate on record in support of enhanced competition in international aviation. My friend from South Carolina has advised me that the amendment has been agreed to so I shall not delay further action on this important legislation. I thank the chairman and the ranking member of the subcommittee, Senator RUDMAN, for their patience and support. I also thank my dear friend from Kentucky, Chairman FORD, and the ranking members of full committee and Subcommittee on Aviation of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation, Senator DANFORTH, and my able colleague from Arizona, Senator MCCAIN, for their support and assistance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 905) was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 906

(Purpose: To commend efforts by the U.S. Departments of Justice, State and Defense to eliminate anti-competitive bidding practices at U.S. military facilities in Japan and for other purposes)

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI] proposes an amendment numbered 906.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

The Senate finds that in 1984, 140 Japanese Construction firms formed an association known as "United States Military Construction Safety Technical Research Association" which engaged in widespread bidding activity on contracts funded by the U.S. government at the United States naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan, from 1984 through 1987.

The Senate finds that in December 1988, these 140 Japanese construction companies received warnings from the Japan Fair Trade Commission for bidrigging activities at the U.S. Naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

The Senate finds that 70 of these construction firms were fined by the Japan Fair Trade Commission for serious bidrigging activities at the United States naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

The Senate finds that the United States Department of Defense has proposed for debarment, eight companies, twenty corporate officials and four subsidiary firms involved in bidrigging activities at the United States Naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

The Senate finds that the aforementioned bidrigging activities have seriously undermined the procurement process at the United States naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

The Senate finds that bidrigging at the United States naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan from 1984 through 1987, contributed to increased construction costs at the facility, and hindered efforts to ensure the efficient use of funds appropriated for military construction associated with United States security commitments in the Pacific.

The Senate finds that the United States Department of Justice has formally requested full compensation from the 140 firms involved in bidrigging activities at the United States Naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

Therefore, it is the sense of the Senate that the Senate commends the United States Department of Defense and the United States Department of Justice for their efforts to eliminate bidrigging activities at United States facilities in Japan.

The Senate urges the United States Department of Defense to seek debarment of all Japanese construction firms involved in bidrigging activities at United States military facilities in Japan.

The Senate urges the United States Department of Justice and the United States Department of State to work with the Japanese government to insure that the United States government receives full compensation for overpayments for construction services and goods at Yokosuka Naval base in Japan that occurred as a result of anticompetitive bidding practices that have been formally documented by the Government of Japan.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, this is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution. It addresses specifically a finding in 1988 that some 70 Japanese firms were in violation and fined by the Federal Japan Fair Trade Commission for serious bid rigging activities at the United States naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

The amendment specifically commends the Department of Defense and the Department of Justice for their efforts to eliminate bid rigging and urges the Department of Defense to seek debarment of all Japanese construction firms involved in bid rigging and asks the Department of Justice and the Department of State to work with the Japanese Government to ensure the U.S. Government receives full compensation.

I conclude by adding that the Japanese Embassy has been most cooperative in this regard, and I want to commend the Government of Japan for assisting in this effort. It is my understanding that the sense-of-the-Senate resolution has been approved by both sides.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from Assistant Secretary Pyatt, a letter to the Secretary of Defense from me, a letter from the Deputy Secretary of Defense to me, and an article be printed in the RECORD:

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DEPUTY SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC.

Hon. FRANK H. MURKOWSKI,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MURKOWSKI: This is in response to your letter of April 14, 1989, expressing concern regarding evidence of bidrigging by Japanese construction firms at U.S. bases in Japan. I am responding for the Secretary of Defense.

As you know, a Naval Investigative Service (NIS) investigation uncovered collusive bidding among some 160 Japanese contractors, organized as an association, known as the Star Friendship Association. The Japan Fair Trade Commission has also investigated the activities of the Star Friendship Association in relation to bid-rigging on construction projects ordered by the U.S. Navy.

To date, the Navy proposed eight companies, twenty corporate officials and four subsidiary firms for debarment, based on the evidence produced in these investigations. The parties proposed for debarment have thirty days after receipt of notice to submit arguments in opposition to debarment. The Navy Debarment Committee is reviewing additional cases at the present time and will be making a recommendation concerning their disposition in the near future.

As always, if the Department can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact us.

Sincerely,

D.J. ATWOOD.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, April 14, 1989.

Hon. DICK CHENEY,
Secretary of Defense, the Pentagon, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am contacting you to convey my concerns regarding evidence of bid-rigging by Japanese construction firms at U.S. bases in Japan.

Late last year, after reading reports in the Japanese press that the Japan Fair Trade Commission was investigating allegations of bid-rigging at Yokosuka Naval Base in Japan, I contacted our Embassy in Tokyo to request that they inform me of the U.S. response to the investigation. In December, the Fair Trade Commission issued warnings to 70 of the firms under investigation and fined 70 others for bid-rigging activities.

Upon learning of the JFTC's actions I immediately contacted the Embassy in Tokyo to request information regarding what action the U.S. government was taking to bar the guilty firms from bidding on future projects, or to investigate allegations of bid-rigging at other U.S. bases. After several inquiries, I was referred to the office of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Shipbuilding and Logistics to whom I wrote on February 27, 1989. I have enclosed a copy of that letter for your reference.

I recently received a response from Assistant Secretary Everett Pyatt, which I have also enclosed. In his letter, Assistant Secretary Pyatt informed me that while the Navy had been informed of the JFTC's ruling in December, to date, the debarment committee of the Navy has taken no formal action against the firms involved.

I am concerned that the Navy's failure to act swiftly and decisively against bid-rigging on the bases may serve to undermine the integrity of the procurement process. In addition, lax enforcement of our procurement regulations will continue to hinder the efforts of U.S. construction firms seeking to provide construction services in Japan, including services at the U.S. bases.

On several occasions, U.S. construction firms operating in Japan have expressed their view that bid-rigging among Japanese construction firms is taking place at U.S. bases in Japan. They have commented that the situation may be exacerbated by the close relationship which exists between the construction firms and the Japanese nationals working at base procurement offices. I am therefore considering introducing legislation that would require that the procurement offices at the bases overseas be staffed by U.S. citizens.

In the interim, I will continue to seek additional information regarding bidding irregularities at U.S. bases in Japan, and to pursue appropriate sanctions against firms engaging in such activities. I hope you will assist in my efforts to address this serious problem.

I look forward to hearing from you in the near future.

Sincerely,

FRANK H. MURKOWSKI,
U.S. Senator.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, February 27, 1989.

Hon. EVERETT PYATT,
Assistant Secretary for Shipbuilding and Logistics, Department of the Navy, the Pentagon, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PYATT: In May of last year, the Japanese Fair Trade Commission began an investigation of 144 firms alleged to be involved in bid-rigging activities at Yokosuka Naval Base in Japan. In December, the Japanese press reported that the JFTC had fined 70 of the firms for illegal activities associated with bids at the base.

I have followed this case with great interest because of my efforts to open up the Japanese construction market to U.S. firms. In my discussions with U.S. construction firms attempting to do business in Japan, they have continually expressed their view that anti-competitive activities, even at the U.S. bases, severely hindered their efforts to gain access to the Japanese construction market. To my knowledge, the Yokosuka case is the first one in which such activities have been documented.

In order to more effectively assess allegations of bid-rigging at U.S. bases and the impact of such anti-competitive practices on U.S. efforts to enter the Japanese construction market, I would appreciate receiving any information which you may have regarding the Yokosuka case. In particular, I would like to receive the names of the 70 firms that were fined by the Japanese government. I am also interested in knowing what, if any, action DOD has taken against the guilty parties and whether DOD is undertaking an independent investigation into allegations of bid-rigging activities at other U.S. bases in Japan.

I appreciate your assistance on this matter and look forward to hearing from you as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

FRANK H. MURKOWSKI,
U.S. Senator.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, DC, April 10, 1989.

Hon. FRANK H. MURKOWSKI,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MURKOWSKI: This is in response to your letter of February 27, 1989, requesting information concerning bid-rigging activities at Yokosuka Naval Base, Japan. A Naval Investigative Service (NIS) investigation uncovered collusive bidding among some 160 contractors, organized as an association, officially known as the "U.S. Military Construction Safety Technical Research Association". The unofficial title was the "Star Friendship Association". The NIS investigation concentrated on the larger or more active contractors involved in the conspiracy.

The Japan Fair Trade Commission has also investigated the activities of the Star Friendship Association in relation to bid-rigging on construction projects ordered by the U.S. Navy. Based on this investigation, enclosure (1) notified the Officer in Charge of Construction, FAR EAST (OICC-FE), that the Japan Fair Trade Commission was issuing warnings and mischarge payments against seventy (70) companies involved in collusive bidding in the Star Friendship Association, in violation of the Japanese Antimonopoly Act. The list of seventy companies, which you requested, is contained in enclosure (1). This list has now been publicly released in Japan.

The Commander-in-Chief U.S. Pacific Fleet has forwarded proposed debarment actions against nine Japanese contractors from Yokosuka to this office as a result of this NIS investigation which developed adequate evidence of collusive bidding practices on U.S. Navy contracts. Those nine firms recommended for debarment are included in the list of seventy companies found guilty of violating Japan's Antimonopoly Act.

The Navy Debarment Committee is reviewing these cases at the present time and will be making a recommendation concerning their disposition in the near future.

I have been informed by the NIS that investigations of collusive bidding have also been conducted in Okinawa.

If we can be of further assistance, please let me know.

Sincerely,

EVERETT PYATT,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy (Shipbuilding and Logistics).

FAIR TRADE COMMISSION,
Tokyo 100, Japan, December 8, 1988.

Mr. J.B. GREEN, Jr.,
Captain, Civil Engineer Corps, U.S. Navy, Officer in Charge of Construction, Far East.

DEAR MR. GREEN: Enclosed please find a copy of our press release, to be made public today, with respect to the warning and surcharge payment orders against the bit rigging on construction projects ordered by the U.S. Navy's OICCFE. In addition to this, I am enclosing a list of the 70 companies which the Fair Trade Commission (FTC) ordered to pay a surcharge under Section 48-2 of the Antimonopoly Act. I would be very grateful if you would keep this list confidential, because the FTC will not disclose the names of the companies involved except for those listed in the Tokyo Stock Exchange.

I would like to thank you very much for your cooperation during the course of our investigation.

Sincerely,

MITSURU SUZUKI,
Director, First Investigation Division.

WARNING AND SURCHARGE PAYMENT ORDERS AGAINST THE BID RIGGING ON CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS ORDERED BY THE UNITED STATES NAVY'S OFFICER IN CHARGE OF CONSTRUCTION FAR EAST

DECEMBER 8, 1988.

Fair Trade Commission: Having investigated the case of suspected violation of the Antimonopoly Act with respect to bidding on construction projects ordered by the United States Navy's Officer in Charge of Construction Far East (hereinafter referred to as OICCFE), the Fair Trade Commission (FTC) has today issued a warning and surcharge payment orders as described below.

1. PARTIES SUBJECT TO THE WARNING AND TO THE SURCHARGE PAYMENTS ORDERS

Warning: 139 members of the former US Military Construction Safety Technology Research Group and Kajima Corporation.

Surcharge payment order: 69 members among the members of the former US Military Construction Safety Technology Research Group—the members who received orders for the aforementioned construction projects (excluding those who face a surcharge payment of less than 200,000 yen) and Kajima Corporation.

Note: The former United States Military Construction Safety Technology Research Group had its office in Yokosuka City, Kanagawa Prefecture. Its membership consisted of entrepreneurs who submit bids on construction projects, etc. for which orders had been placed by the OICCFE. Voluntarily established on March 27, 1984, it was ultimately dissolved on October 8, 1987.

2. OUTLINE OF THE ILLEGAL ACT AND APPLICATION OF THE LAW THERETO

The former United States Military Construction Safety Technology Research Group (hereinafter referred to as the Group), substantially restricted competition in the field of transactions involving construction projects ordered by the OICCFE (hereinafter referred to as U.S. Navy-ordered projects) by having its members designate expected order recipients from among its members for construction projects ordered during the period March 27, 1984 to October 8, 1987. This act constitutes a violation of Section 11, Clause 1, Article 8 of the Antimonopoly Act.

Kajima Corporation (hereinafter referred to as Kajima), in collaboration with members of the Group, also designated expected order recipients, thereby substantially restricting competition, against public interests in the field of transactions involving US Navy-ordered projects. This act constitutes an undue trade restriction as stipulated in Clause 6, Article 2 of the Antimonopoly Act and a violation of Article 3 of the Act (see the appendix "Background Information and Application of the Law").

3. OUTLINE OF THE MEASURES TAKEN

(1) Warning: As described above, the Group and Kajima had been engaging in illegal acts. The FTC issued a strong warning to Kajima and the former members of the Group as the Group had been dissolved in the interim. The warning obliged the parties involved to refrain from further such activity and instructed that necessary measures be taken to prevent a recurrence of illegal acts.

(2) Surcharge payment order: Since the aforementioned illegal acts fall under Clause 1, Article 7-2 of the Antimonopoly Act, the FTC ordered 69 former members of the Group and Kajima to pay a surcharge amounting to 1.5 percent of the sales generated from US Navy-ordered projects that had been undertaken during the period of illegal activity as described below.

(A) The period during which the illegal acts were committed:

(i) Commencement date.—The date of first bidding on or after March 27, 1984, when the Group was established.

(ii) Termination date.—October 8, 1987, on which date the Group was dissolved.

(B) Surcharge.—The total amount is set at 289,890,000 yen

(C) Payment deadline.—February 9, 1989

Appendix:

Background Information and Application of the Law.

1. BACKGROUND INFORMATION

(1)(A) The United States Military Construction Safety Technology Research Group (hereinafter referred to as the Group) had its office at 4-banchi, 3-chome, Wakamatsu-cho, Yokosuka City, Kanagawa Prefecture. Its membership consisted of enterpreneurs who submit bids on construction projects, etc. that had been ordered by the Officer in Charge of Construction Far East (hereinafter referred to as OICCFE), under authority of the United States Navy. The Group was voluntarily established on March 27, 1984, set up its bylaws, instituted the post of chairman, secretary general, etc., and had 145 members as of October 8, 1987.

Though its bylaws stipulated that the Group's purpose was to conduct research into safety technology relating to the aforementioned construction projects, the Group was actually attempting to designate order recipients of the construction work projects.

(B) Members of the Group received most of the orders for construction projects that were tendered in Japan by the OICCFE (hereinafter referred to as US Navy-ordered projects).

(C) Kajima Corporation (hereinafter referred to as Kajima) is headquartered at 2-ban 7-go, 1-chome, Motoakasaka, Minato-ku, Tokyo, and engages in the construction business. Although it did not become a member of the Group, Kajima has participated in bidding on US Navy-ordered projects.

(D) The OICCFE offered the majority of the construction projects via the tendering process.

(2) (A) Prior to the establishment of the Group, entrepreneurs participating in the bidding for US Navy-ordered projects formed an organization called Yokakai which attempted, among other things, to prevent the prices of the projects from falling. However, because the number of non-Yokakai bidders increased after 1983, the organization began to experience difficulties in achieving its objectives.

Therefore, the directors and officers of Yokakai decided to set up the Group as a new entity to replace Yokakai. On November 10, 1983, they held a meeting to explain their objectives at Yokosuka Kenko Kaikan, located in Yokosuka City, Kanagawa Prefecture. The approximately 110 entrepreneurs, participating in the bidding for the aforementioned projects who were present at the meeting, were requested to join the Group.

Subsequently, the directors and officers of Yokakai and others held a general assembly to establish the Group at the Yokosuka Kenko Kaikan on March 27, 1984.

(B) At the aforementioned general assembly, the following matters relating to US Navy-ordered projects, were decided by the Group:

(i) Henceforth, members of the Group would designate the one who should receive orders (hereinafter referred to as expected order recipients) after holding consultations among participants in the bidding.

(ii) To implement (i), (a) members of the Group, upon receiving tendering information, would report the project number and project name to the secretariat of the Group; (b) the secretariat and directors of the Group, by taking part in meetings to get instructions at projects sites, etc., would endeavor to obtain information concerning those who would be expected to participate in the bid; and (c) the secretariat of the Group would notify expected bid participants of the date, time and venue of the meeting where expected order recipients would be determined (hereinafter referred to as an arrangement meeting).

(C) The Group, by holding arrangement meetings on the basis of the aforementioned criterion, had its members who received tendering documents for US Navy-ordered projects determine expected order recipients. In addition, matters were arranged in such a way that the bid price of the expected order recipients would be the lowest by arranging the bid prices of other participants.

(3) Kajima attended both the meeting to explain objectives and the general assembly to establish the Group. In collaboration with the members of the Group at arrangement meetings, it also determined expected order recipients and arranged matters in such a way that the bid price of the expected order recipients would be the lowest by arranging the bid prices of other participants.

(4) (A) The Group was dissolved as a result of a resolution adopted at its extraordinary general assembly held on October 8, 1987, at Hotel Centraza, located in Yokosuka city, Kanagawa prefecture.

(B) The former members of the Group and Kajima have not designated expected order recipients on the basis of the aforementioned criteria since the dissolution of the Group.

2. Application of the Law:

(1) As described in the above items (1), (2), and (4), the Group was trade association subject to Clause 2, Article 2 of the Antimonopoly Act. The Group worked to substantially restrain competition in the field of transactions of US Navy-ordered projects by having its members designate expected order recipients for the projects. Such actions constitute a violation of Section 1, Clause 1, Article 8 of the Antimonopoly Act.

(2) As described in the above items (1), (2), (3), and (4), Kajima violated the public interest by working in collaboration with members of the Group, to substantially restrain competition against public interest in the field of transactions involving US Navy-ordered projects by determining expected order recipients with regard to the projects. Such actions constitute undue restraints of trade as set forth in Clause 6, Article 2, of the Antimonopoly Act, and constitute a violation of the regulations in Article 3, of the Act.

UNITED STATES SEEKS REPARATIONS FROM JAPAN ON PROJECTS

TOKYO.—The U.S. government is seeking about 5 billion yen ($36 million) in compensation from 140 Japanese construction companies for alleged price-fixing in connection with work done on U.S. Navy projects, industry sources said.

The sources said the issue could fuel fears within Japan's construction industry over further U.S. pressure for Japan to reduce unfair trading practices.

The United Staters criticized the Japanese business practice of cartels, or "dango" during bilateral trade talks earlier this month in Tokyo.

Japanese Construction Ministry officials said it might be too early to say whether the U.S. claims for compensation would affect future trade negotiations between the two countries.

The officials said the U.S. Department of Justice sent letters to Japanese construction firms that were awarded contracts—for work ranging from construction of gas and water pipelines to building renovations—at U.S. Navy facilities in Yokasuka between 1984 and 1987.

The construction firms received a warning from the Fair Trade Commission here last December over the alleged cartel, the ministry officials said.

The letters claim construction costs would have been lower had these companies not negotiated prices privately before bids were called publicly.

Such negotiations are against Japan's Anti-Monopoly Law, ministry officials said.

The spokesman at Kajima Corp. said the company was surprised by the letter, received last week, adding that the company had been examining the contents carefully.

Taisei Corp., which had a 100-million-yen contract in 1987 also is monitoring the issue closely before taking any action, according to a company spokesman, who refused to disclose the nature of the contract.

An official at the Construction Ministry said the government did not intend to intervene in the matter because it was a civil case.

The amendment (No. 906) was agreed to.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 907

(Purpose: To repeal outdated conditions on assistance and sales for Argentina)

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senators HELMS, KENNEDY, and DODD and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] for Mr. HELMS, (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. DODD) proposes an amendment numbered 907.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed, with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of title III, add the following:

"SEC. . Section 725 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981 (22 U.S.C. 2370 note) is hereby repealed.".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, yesterday many Members of the Senate met with President Carlos S. Menem of Argentina who was elected in an important election last May, and sworn in on July 8.

This election was important in two ways. In the first place, it marked the transition of power from one civilian government to another through democratic elections. This was a very important step for reestablishing Argentine democracy. One election does not a democracy make. Rather, the succession of such elections is necessary to the firm establishing of the process. The people of Argentina are to be congratulated for insisting on democratic procedures in their political life.

In the second place, President Menem's government has restored confidence to the people of Argentina. At the time he was sworn in, the economic system of Argentina was in chaos. The country was suffering from hyperinflation. People were rioting in the streets for food, and property owners were defending their property with arms. I understand that in the month of July alone inflation reached 200 percent—capping a year of inflation at 2,000 percent. By August, inflation had dropped to 37 percent.

The reason for this change was the aggressive action that President Menem took to make major changes in the economic system, including legislation and steps to privatize state industries, the increase of public utility rates to realistic levels, the elimination of subsidies and restrictions to foreign investment, and currency devaluation. These measures have not only restored vitality to the stock market and stability to the exchange rate. It is not surprising, therefore, that these and other measures have led to an IMF commitment this week of $1.5 billion.

Moreover, President Menem, who was himself jailed by the military government for 5 years, has taken steps to work for national reconciliation, particularly with the military. Most observers believe that these are constructive steps which will strengthen the foundation for the enjoyment of human rights by all citizens of that country.

In this regard, Mr. President, it is timely to reconsider section 725 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981 which placed restrictions upon assistance and sales to Argentina under the Arms Export Control Act. This provision was sponsored by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. At the time, the Government of Argentina was in the hands of a military junta, and the distinguished Senator expressed concerns that military assistance might be used by the military junta for the abuse of human rights. That concern is no longer appropriate now that two elected civilian governments have succeeded the military junta in orderly fashion, and a high level of observance of human rights has been restored.

I have discussed this matter with the Senator from Massachusetts, and it is my understanding that he agrees that this provision is no longer appropriate. Therefore, he has offered to cosponsor the repeal of section 725 with me. We are also joined as cosponsor by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], who is the chairman of the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, this amendment will essentially repeal some very antiquated parts of our foreign aid law as it pertains to the country of Argentina. It has been cleared on both sides. It is appropriate that this is done today since the President of Argentina is visiting our country, and I urge its immediate passage.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise in support of the pending amendment which is designed to remove from the books certain restrictions and limitations on United States assistance to Argentina.

This is a very timely amendment. President Carlos Menem of Argentina has been in Washington this week. He met with President Bush and yesterday he met with a number of Senators during a luncheon of the Foreign Relations Committee which I was privileged to host.

During that luncheon session, we had an opportunity to discuss a variety of issues relating to United States-Argentina relations. One of those issue was the existing restrictions on aid to the government in Buenos Aires. President Menem made it clear that his government would welcome the removal of these restrictions and would view such action as a very positive step forward in our bilateral relationship.

Mr. President, the political situation in Argentina today is dramatically different from the situation that existed when Congress imposed significant restrictions on aid, both economic and military, to the Government of Argentina. Those restrictions were imposed in the wake of the "dirty war" and the serious record of human rights abuses that occurred during the 1970's.

Today, Mr. President, as throughout much of this decade, the generals no longer hold the reins of government in Argentina. Indeed, President Alfonsin completed his term of office and in July, he stepped down so that President-elect Menem could take his rightful place in the Casa Rosada.

Argentina is justifiably proud of this democratically engineered transfer of power. And by all accounts President Menem has shown the kind of leadership that deserves our strong support and full cooperation.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to approve the pending amendment. It will send a positive message to the Government of Argentina and will serve to strengthen our bilateral relations with an important Western Hemisphere ally.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, yesterday, many of my colleagues and I had the honor of meeting with President Carlos Saul Menem of Argentina. I know I speak for the entire Senate when I say that he is an impressive, courageous leader for Argentina during a very difficult time.

In our meeting, President Menem requested us to lift the current law requiring Presidential certifications on human rights in Argentina as a condition for United States assistance to that country. I am pleased to join with my colleagues, Senators HELMS and DODD, in sponsoring this amendment to lift those restrictions today. This action represents a vote of confidence by the Senate in the government of President Menem and our hope that the progress on human rights in recent years will be continued.

As an original sponsor of that amendment, I have followed closely the events in Argentina over the years. More than a decade ago, at the height of the gross human rights abuses in that country, I joined with Senator Hubert Humphrey in offering an amendment to halt military aid to Argentina. Since then, much information has surfaced about the "dirty war" in Argentina and extensive human rights atrocities committed against the people of that country by the military regime.

Our original amendment, which was later modified to require the Presidential certification, sent a strong message to the military in Argentina that the United States would not provide assistance while those abuses continued.

Two democratic governments have now come to power in Argentina—that of Raul Alfonsin and Carlos Menem. The military is back in its barracks and the gross human rights abuses of the 1970's and early 1980's are past.

President Menem, the new, courageous and democratic leader of Argentina, has asked us to lift these restrictions, and it is appropriate to do so. He faces great difficulties at home, and we should all join together and provide him with this gesture of support.

In taking this action today, the Senate sends a clear message to the people of Argentina. We are impressed with the democratic progress to date, and we hope and fully expect that the progress will continue. Respect for human rights and the rule of law will always remain a condition for United States assistance—not just to Argentina—but to every nation on Earth.

President Menem has made many difficult decisions in his first few months in office. Immediately after taking office, he introduced drastic austerity and reform measures—"major surgery without anesthesia," as he called it. He has devalued Argentine currency, let fuel prices rise, increased utility rates, introduced new tax laws and made cuts in public spending. These are not easy steps to take and President Menem deserves our strong support in his effort to revitalize the economy of his nation.

I urge my colleagues to support President Menem by approving this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 907) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 908

(Purpose: To protect the religious liberties of inmates in Federal penal institutions, and for other purposes)

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator HELMS and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN], for Mr. HELMS, (for himself and Mr. COHEN), proposes an amendment numbered 908.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end to title II, add the following:

RELIGIOUS ISSUES OVERSIGHT BOARD

(a) Chapter 303 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"4046. Religious Issues Oversight Board.

"(a) There is established within the Department of Justice a board to be known as the 'Religious Issues Oversight Board' (referred to as the 'Board').

"(b) Any Federal inmate who has a grievance regarding his or her legitimate religious needs which has not been satisfactorily addressed may bring such grievance to the Board, which shall have the power to order the religious need of the inmate met.

"(c) Any decision by the Board may be overturned by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons; provided that the Board may appeal any decision by the Bureau of Prisons to the Attorney General by a vote of more than two-thirds of its membership.

"(d) The Board shall consist of no more than 5 members, each of whom may represent a different major religion of the United States and appointed by the President, after seeking the recommendations of the Majority and Minority leaders of the Senate and the Speaker and Minority leader of the House of Representatives;

"(e) The decisions of the Board shall be made by majority vote. When making decisions, the members of the Board shall take into account the overall security and safety of the inmates, and the financial cost to the taxpayers. The Board shall not have the authority to issue a decision which would result in either the temporary or permanent release of inmates from prison.

"(f) The Board shall meet as often as it deems necessary but not less than once every month, and shall submit an annual report of its activities to the Majority and Minority leaders of the Senate and the Speaker and Minority leader of the House of Representatives.

"(g) Members of the Board shall serve without compensation and for a term of six years; provided, however, that per diem and expenses shall be made available to the Members of the Board to defray Members cost of attending meetings; provided further that any per diem and expenses made available under this section shall come from funds appropriated to the Bureau of Prisons.

"(h) Members of the Board shall be immune from personal tort liability for decisions made by the Board.

"(i) The Director of the Bureau of Prisons shall provide the Board with such office space, staff and support as he deems necessary for the Board to carry out its functions under this section.

"(j) The section analysis for chapter 303 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "4046. Religious Issues Oversight Board."

"(b) Not to exceed $100,000 shall be available for carrying out this section from Federal Prison System, Salaries and Expenses.".

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, this amendment is entitled "Religious Issues Oversight Board." It has been cleared on both sides. This amendment assures that the freedom of inmates in Federal penal institutions to exercise their religious rights is not unduly infringed upon nor unintentionally discouraged by employees of the Federal penal system. The original legislation had some problems. I believe they have been straightened out. It is cleared on both sides.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this amendment will assure that the freedom of inmates in Federal penal institutions to exercise their religious rights is not unduly infringed upon or unintentionally discouraged by bureaucrats in the Federal penal system.

At the same time, this amendment will help lessen the burden upon the Federal court system created by endless controversies over the religious rights of prisoners.

Specifically, Mr. President, this amendment would establish within the Department of Justice a Religious Issues Oversight Board to hear grievances filed by Federal inmates who contend their legitimate religious needs have not been satisfactorily addressed by prison officials.

The board, after taking into account the overall security and safety of the inmates, will have the authority to require that the religious needs of a prisoner be met. Any decision by the Board may be overturned by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons.

Mr. President, the Supreme Court in Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78 (1987), as well as other cases, has determined that individuals do not lose their first amendment right to practice religion upon entering a penal institution. This is wise, for perhaps the best, if not only course for a prisoner to find rehabilitation is through the Lord.

That is why the freedom to believe in, and practice—to the extent practicable—one's religion is so important to prisoners and to society.

Yet despite this fact, the right of inmates in Federal penitentiaries to exercise their reasonable religious rights is often stomped out by unelected Federal bureaucrats over whom there is no effective and regular oversight. Prisoners denied religious rights often have no recourse but through the expensive and lengthy maze of the Federal court system.

Over the recent past, prisoners have been denied the right to attend religious services, to be ministered to by leaders of their religion, to possess religious literature, to correspond with the heads of their sects or churches, to have diets required by their religions, to possess and wear religious medals, and in some cases even the right to celebrate religious holidays.

There are people in Washington, Mr. President, who believe that religion has no place in anything the Government does. I disagree, and so does the Supreme Court of the United States. Unfortunately, the regulations governing the Federal Bureau of Prisons grants it wide latitude to flout the religious rights of prisoners. And that is what it all too often does.

For example, it has been reported that these regulations allow Federal officials almost total discretion to determine when a prisoner may be denied the right to attend religious services, and that the regulations governing religious diets do not resolve the most prevalent issues.

Nowhere is there any requirement that clergy or religious representatives oversee the process or even be consulted to help determine the validity or importance of the prisoner's claim.

By leaving questions of religious rights of inmates entirely to the whims of Federal bureaucrats, prisoners have often been left with no choice but to pursue their claim in the Federal court system. This, in turn, has created additional and unnecessary work for this already overburdened system. At the same time, the complexity of the process can only have an intimidating effect upon inmates who would like to exercise religious rights.

Mr. President, this amendment poses a clear-cut question: Should we help inmates to follow their religions when practicable, or should we leave this basic constitutional right almost totally to the whims of a bunch of bureaucrats?

If we are to assure that those prisoners who wish to find the Lord are not unnecessarily impeded from doing so, a Board needs to be created to oversee the actions of the Federal Bureau of Prisons. This amendment will create such a Board, and I encourage my colleagues to lend it their support.

DUE PROCESS CALLS FOR RELIGIOUS ISSUES OVERSIGHT BOARD

Mr. President, some time ago, I asked my staff to prepare for me a legal brief outlining the issues involved in restrictions upon the exercise of religion by prisoners.

My staff discovered that the Supreme Court has found time and again that inmates do not lose their religious freedom by virtue of entering a penal institution; and that in fact, these freedoms may be legally infringed upon only if so compelled by security or other vital interests, and only then if the infringement is done in a less restrictive manner.

But despite this relatively clear standard, no mechanism exists—short of entering the courts—for a prisoner to assure his or her religious needs are not unjustifiably restricted.

All of the nonjudicial decisions are made by prison officials or other Federal officers who have a vested interest in protecting the needs of the prison and no interest in preserving the religious liberties of prisoners nor any understanding nor appreciation of the importance or substance of a particular religious practice.

Due process calls for there to be some governmental procedure by which a prisoner may have his religious needs addressed in a fair manner before his rights are restricted and without having to go through the time and expense of the judicial system. This amendment establishes such a procedure.

The legal brief prepared by my staff follows:

PRISONERS RETAIN CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS TO RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

On numerous occasions the U.S. Supreme Court has held that those found guilty of crimes do not lose their religious rights upon entering a penal institution and the provision of religious rights to prisoners does not violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment. (Abington School District v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 [1963]; Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319 [1972]; Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78 [1987])

In Abington, the Court found the employment of prison chaplains as essential to avoid violating the rights of prisoners to practice religion. In addition, it determined that the hiring of such chaplains does not violate the establishment clause. As Justice Brennan wrote:

"[W]here the government has total control over people's lives, as in prisons, a niche has been carved into the establishment clause to require the government to afford opportunities for worship * * *. The government, in its control of prisons, is precluded from denying religious observance to inmates * * *-1A"

In Cruz, a Buddhist prisoner was prohibited from using the prison chapel, restricted from writing to his religious advisor, and punished for proselytizing to other prisoners. In restoring the religious privileges of the prisoner, the Court reaffirmed the constitutional right of prisoners to exercise religion and declared it a duty of the Federal Courts to "enforce the rights of all persons, including prisoners."

COURTS MAY RESTRICT RELIGIOUS RIGHTS FOR SECURITY REASONS, BUT MUST CHOOSE THE LESS RESTRICTIVE METHODS OF SO DOING

It is true that the religious rights of prisoners is not absolute. Rather, prison officials are accorded some latitude in providing for the religious rights of prisoners in those instances where security or practical imperatives justifiably require. But in such instances, officials must meet these imperatives in a fashion least restrictive of the prisoner's rights.

In Sweet v. South Carolina D.O.C., 529 F.2d 854 (4th Cir. 1975), the prisoner in question was segregated from the rest of the prison population because of the threat posed to his safety by other inmates. While the prisoner did not contest his segregated confinement, he did protest his inability to attend religious services.

In refusing to provide for the prisoners rights in this instance, the Court found that the prisoner's safety at common services could not be sufficiently guaranted by prison guards, and that the provision of services to the prisoner alone in his cellblock would be an unjustified strain upon the administration of the prison.

In O'Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342, 1987, prisoners of the Islamic faith brought suit to require prison officials to permit religious services on Friday afternoons. In finding for the prison officials, the court found that "on difficult and sensitive matters of institutional administration" regarding security concerns, the religious liberties of prisons may be overruled.

Prison officials are charged with providing for the security of prisons, and prisoners. But when so doing, such officials must choose means which are less restrictive of the legitimate religious right of prisoners.

In Rodgers v. Clark, 410 F.2d 995 (D.C. Cir. 1969), Muslim prisoners in the District of Columbia sued jail officials to require that they be fed at least one pork-free meal daily so as to permit their adherence to Muslim dietary tenets. In holding for the prisoners, the court found that only gravest situations, endangering paramount interests, can engender permissible limitations upon the free exercise of religion.

In Gallahan v. Hollyfield, 670 F.2d 1345 (4th Cir. 1982), an adherent to a Cherokee religious order desired to exercise his religious beliefs which required him to let his hair grow long in contradiction to a prison regulation requiring that hair not exceed a certain length so as to prevent inmates from shrouding their features or hiding contraband.

In holding for the inmate, the court noted that there were less restrictive alternatives available to prison officials, who could have met their security concerns by simply requiring that the inmate's hair be worn in a pony tail.

DUE PROCESS CALLS FOR A PROCEDURE BY WHICH INMATES MAY PRESS CLAIMS OF RELIGIOUS INFRINGEMENT

Whether or not a prisoner's religious liberty should be infringed upon for the sake of security or other compelling need is no easy question. If often requires a weighing of the alternative methods by which such need may be met against the religious liberty in question.

In Schlesinger v. Carlson, 489 U.S. 612 (1980), a Jewish prisoner pressed for the food and facilities necessary for him to observe the dietary laws of his religion. In holding for the prisoner, the Court affirmed that a restriction on a religious right must be reasonably necessary in support of an important or substantial interest." Thus, the standard by which a religious right may be infringed calls for a number of judgments.

At this point, the only option available to a prisoner seeking to preserve a religious liberty—short of entering the judicial process—it to have these judgments considered by prison officials. However, such officials cannot be expected to appreciate nor properly evaluate the importance or substance of a particular religious practice.

Due process requires that some procedure be available to a prisoner whereby he or she may receive a fair consideration of his or her rights—without having to resort to the courts.

In Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396 (1974), prison inmates challenged prison regulations permitting the censorship of mail. In holding such censorship to be unconstitutional, the Court held that First Amendment rights may only be curtailed if necessary for order or security, and then only if the prisoner to be denied such rights is granted procedural safeguards.

As in Procunier, controversies over the religious rights of prisoners involves First Amendment questions. As such, prisoners should be provided with some procedural safeguards to assure that their religious needs may be addressed in a fair manner before these rights are restricted and without having to go through the time and expense of the judicial system.

Mr. RUDMAN. I understand the Republican leader has a question on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have an interest in the amendment. I think it is a good amendment. I think the goals are admirable. I was trying to determine whether or not the Justice Department had an opportunity to look at it and to give its views on the legislation. I have asked them to do that in response to a request, but I am not certain they have made a report.

Mr. RUDMAN. I give this answer to the Republican leader. The Justice Department did not like this amendment at all. They did not like it for several key reasons. We addressed, I believe, those reasons. They still do not like it.

Mr. DOLE. That is their report?

Mr. RUDMAN. That is their report.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 908.

The amendment (No. 908) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 909

(Purpose: To assist with efforts to rid public housing and schools of drug dealers)

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator GRAMM and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN], for Mr. GRAMM, proposes an amendment numbered 909.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, add the following:

"Provided, That not less than $5,000,000 of the amounts provided for basic field programs of the Legal Services Corporation shall be used directly or indirectly to assist public housing tenants, public housing authorities, tenant associations, tenant management associations and state and local school boards and officials with efforts to expel from public housing or school areas any individual engaged in drug-related criminal activity. For purposes of this paragraph, the term "drug-related criminal activity" means the illegal manufacture, sale, distribution, use, or possession with intent to manufacture, sell, distribute, or use, of a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802))."

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, this is a very interesting amendment. The Senator from Texas came to Senator HOLLINGS and myself a while ago and said he thought with a war on drugs and with all the problems in public housing we might earmark some money from the Legal Services Corporation to allow Legal Services lawyers in high drug-impact communities to go into those housing projects and help bring writs of eviction against drug dealers and drug users living in those public housing projects. It is a very novel idea. We do not know how it will work. We are going to take it to conference and discuss it with the House, but I certainly believe it is worth discussing. That is what this amendment accomplishes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 909.

The amendment (No. 909) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I rise as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee to speak to the passage of this very important funding bill. Important, not only to the Nation at large, but to my State in particular.

I want to extend my special appreciation to Chairman HOLLINGS, for working with me to ensure that the needs of Washington State were met. This bill provides for a vast assortment of funding resources to support programs and local industries vitally important to the social, environmental, and economic welfare of my State.

In particular, I am most proud of the fact that we have provided $1 million over the administration request for the National Marine Sanctuaries Program. The need for this money is critical. Last year I passed legislation creating a National Marine Sanctuary off of the western coast of Washington, and set up a study of a possible sanctuary in the San Juan islands. These additional funds will help ensure that these projects are completed on time.

A special concern of mine has been to secure funding for important research programs that support our State's fishing industry. I am pleased that this bill includes funds for programs like the Pacific Fishery Information Network, Bering Sea and Gulf of Alaska groundfish and crab research, Columbia River Fisheries Development Program, the Pacific Salmon Treaty, Domestic Observer Program, Regional Fisheries Councils and Salmon Interception Program. Without the dollars to support the ongoing Federal research, the fishing industry and Washington State's overall economy would suffer.

I am also particularly pleased that this bill includes $3 million for implementing the recent driftnet agreements between the United States, Korea, Japan, and Taiwan. Without this funding, these agreements would be rendered essentially meaningless, and I deeply appreciate the committee's assistance on this issue.

In addition, I also want to thank the chairman for his support of two very special program funding requests. First, full funding was provided for an observer at the Stampede Pass weather station, located in the Cascade Mountains. With this funding, we will be able to insure the safety of pilots flying over the mountains in inclement weather. Also provided in this bill was funding for a national child welfare program that was initially developed in my State. The Court Appointed Special Advocate Association is a grass roots program in which community volunteers watch over and speak for abused and neglected children in our court systems.

In conclusion Mr. President, this bill also provides for entitlement language starting in 1991 for funding of the Japanese American Reparations Program. This is an item that I have supported for a very long time. A permanent solution has finally been found.

I would like to again thank the chairman of the Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary Appropriations Subcommittee for working with me to ensure that the needs of Washington State are met.

PLACING A CAP ON CONSULTANT SPENDING

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today to thank and commend Senators HOLLINGS and RUDMAN. They have included in the appropriations bill for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State my amendment to cap the amount of money which the Departments can spend on consultant services.

This amendment is identical to the amendment that I successfully offered to previous appropriations bills.

Mr. President, the three Cabinet-level Departments that receive their appropriations through this bill underreported their spending on consultant services in fiscal year 1987 by roughly $50 million. This problem exists throughout Government. I believe we owe it to the taxpayers to force the agencies to keep better track of their consultant spending.

Mr. President, over the past 20 or 30 years, Federal agencies have grown more and more dependent on contractors to perform the most basic work of the Government. This has occurred for a variety of reasons. Some blame congressional actions and some say that it is appropriate to have contractors doing the work. Whatever the reasons, the result has been the creation of a hidden bureaucracy, not subject to the rules and regulations that govern the official bureaucracy.

This hidden bureaucracy writes reports to Congress, implements Government programs, evaluates Government programs, drafts regulations, and comments on GAO reports.

Furthermore, in this time of great concern over ethics, it is essential to realize that contractors and consultants are not covered by the ethical rules that govern the civil service. They are not covered by President Bush's proposed ethics package. They are not covered under the Ethics in Government Act.

Mr. President, while I think that consultants and contractors may have a role to play in making our Government more efficient, this widespread delegation of much of the basic work is unhealthy. It creates a buddy system and oils the revolving door.

What I propose is to use the Department's own figures to cap their spending on consultants. I think this is a reasonable and fair approach. Under current law, section 1114 of title 31, United States Code, each agency is required to include in its budget justification the amount of money which it requests for consulting services, as well as a list of appropriation accounts from which the money is to come and a description of the agency's need for consulting services.

The definition of consultant services will be the same as the definition provided by the Office of Management and Budget's Circular A-120.

To give the agency an accurate idea of what it is actually spending on consultant services, the amendment also requires the Secretary of each Department to submit a quarterly report to Congress and the Comptroller General on the funds obligated and expended by the agency during that quarter. This report will provide the Congress with information on the types of services we are buying. Furthermore, the report will contain the reason the agency felt that no Federal worker could perform these jobs. The Comptroller General is then requested to review the reports submitted by the Secretary and make any recommendations that he sees fit.

Mr. President, let me emphasize that this year I am proposing to use the figures on consulting services the agencies themselves sent up to the Congress. This amendment is another step in my quest to pin down exactly how much the Government spends on consultants and what the consultants do for us. I believe this simple approach will enable us to assure the taxpayers that the Federal Government is carefully monitoring the way we are spending their money.

FUNDING FOR THE WESTERN CORRECTIONAL COMPLEX

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I rise today to offer my support for the funding included in the Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary appropriations bill for the construction of two Federal correctional complexes. These prisons may very well play an important role in the war we are waging on drugs. One component of our Nation's fight must be law enforcement, and in turn, making sure those drug offenders serve time. We have been working in the Senate the last few weeks to determine the most expeditious and effective measures to fight this war. I am proud of the direction we are taking and pleased that we can act now to expand the capacity of the Federal prison system.

If we are going to prosecute more dealers and users, we need to have a place to put them when convicted. The inmate population in the Federal prison system has increased dramatically: 80 percent in the last 8 years. The need for more prison space is obvious.

The two complexes funded in the bill—one in the Northeast and one in the West—will be comprised of a maximum security penitentiary, medium security correctional institution and a minimum security prison camp. Because the sentences of drug-related crimes vary so much, these multipurpose correctional facilities are even more necessary.

Should everything stay on course, Mr. President, the Western complex will be built in Fremont County, CO—with the enthusiastic support of 98 percent of its residents. I was highly impressed by the active participation of the residents to ensure the building of the Federal correctional complex. The people of Fremont County not only welcomed the new Federal prison, but raised $142,000 in less than 3 weeks toward the purchase of the land needed for the complex. In an era of tight budgets and rising crime rates, the Federal Government should applaud a public-private partnership like this.

I commend the members of the Appropriations Committee, and especially those on the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary for their foresight in funding these facilities. We need to move forward with this opportunity to fortify our justice system and keep strong our war on crime.

MAKING MUSIC TOGETHER

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I want to commend the Appropriations Committee and thank Chairman HOLLINGS and Senator RUDMAN for including $1 million in the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill to make the Federal Government a full partner in the upcoming "Making Music Together" festival.

This contribution will make possible the most substantial festival of American music ever to occur in the Soviet Union. This festival financed by the Soviet Union, private donors and now, with the concurrence of the House, the United States Government will permit some of our country's most extraordinary musicians to travel to the Soviet Union to work with and perform with the best in the U.S.S.R.

Let me just list briefly a few of the people and organizations expected to take part. Leonard Bernstein, Mikhail Baryshnikov—returning to perform in the Soviet Union for the first time—the National Theater of the Deaf, the Leningrad Philharmonic, the Kirov and Bolshoi Opera and Ballet, the Conservatories of Moscow and Leningrad and many more. And, let me single out with special pride, Sarah Caldwell and the Opera Co. of Boston whose genius, energy and enthusiasm have made possible this festival, considered by many to be the most important cultural exchange ever between the United States and the Soviet Union. This is the type of citizen to citizen diplomacy that can permanently remove the bricks and barbed wire that have for so long, and at such great expense, locked us into our worst fears and insecurities about each other.

Today democracy and freedom are in the ascendency in many parts of the world, particularly in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. The opportunity to build understanding of share values and dreams for ourselves and our children have never been greater. We must take advantage of this opening to help create the understanding that will progressively reduce the fear and mistrust that has characterized our relationship for much too long and burdened our peoples and our societies in extraordinary ways.

Few options that are open to us can contribute to this healing more than scientific, economic, political, and cultural exchanges. And frankly, nothing can help to build understanding of the common values and humanity that we share with the Russian people more than the type of musical exchange we are helping to make possible by our action today.

I would like to commend Chairman PELL and my colleagues on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for their support of increased funding for these important cultural exchanges.

And again, I would like to thank the chairman and ranking member of the Commerce, Justice, State, Appropriations Subcommittee for their support of this important effort to build a bridge of shared values between the American and Russian people.

U.S. TRAVEL AND TOURISM ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary appropriations bill. This bill includes funding for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration [USTTA]: an agency within the Department of Commerce charged with promoting the United States as an international travel destination.

Mr. President, the Secretary of Commerce has described the USTTA as producing one of the best—if not the best—returns on investment in Government. Last year foreign travelers spent approximately $37.1 billion in the United States. This $37 billion represents export earnings and contributes to reducing our trade deficit.

However, the USTTA—charged with promoting this export industry—had a budget of only $13.8 million. This is less than 5 cents per U.S. citizen—ranking the United States 45th in per capita spending and 19th in total spending by National Government tourism organizations. We spend less on promoting this important industry than countries such as Colombia, Peru, Kenya, and Hungary.

This year's appropriation bill includes $14.3 million for USTTA—not a significant increase, but a step in the right direction.

Mr. President, America simply has not aggressively marketed herself as an international travel destination. While in most industries, competition is between companies, in the travel and tourism industry, it is also between countries. Globally, more than 170 national tourism administrations are vying for the business of 20 principal tourism-generating countries. The United States must expand its national promotional efforts.

I would match the ingenuity of American business and the American tourism industry against any in the world. However, we must recognize that these businesses are often competing against entire countries. We must work with our travel and tourism industry to promote the United States as an international destination and to reduce or eliminate barriers for visitors wanting to visit our country.

Earlier this week, our colleague from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] chaired a hearing on the state of the tourism industry. The witnesses had a variety of suggestions to help promote U.S. tourism export earnings. But on one point they were unanimous: the need to increase the marketing effort by the Federal Government and to increase funding for USTTA.

I believe that this industry—properly promoted—can help reduce our trade deficit. One example is increasing tourism from Japan. The Government of Japan is officially encouraging its citizens—as many as 10 million—to travel abroad as a means of addressing its trade surplus. Last year, 2.6 million Japanese came to the United States and an estimated 3.2 million will visit the United States in 1989. In 1988, we had a $3.1 billion surplus with Japan in travel and tourism.

But we can do more. In my visits as Governor to the Far East, I found that they were eager to visit the United States. By far, the United States was the most desirable foreign destination. However, we are losing many of these potential visitors to other countries which more effectively promote themselves as a tourist destination.

Mr. President, I applaud the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], the chairman of the Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary Appropriations Subcommittee, for his support of the tourism industry and for including funding for USTTA in this bill. I know he will champion the effort in a conference with the House—which has not provided any funding for the USTTA—and I pledge my support in this effort.

JUDICIAL PAY RAISES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, earlier this year I introduced S. 696, the Federal Judges Pay Act. The purpose of that bill is threefold. First, the bill would provide all Federal judges a 30-percent pay raise. Second, it would remove the Federal judiciary from the current pay raise procedures of the Federal Salary Act which involves the Quadrennial Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries. And third, it would provide that future adjustments to judicial salaries would be made based on the percentage increase given to Federal employees under the General Schedule.

As we prepared to bring up the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill I once again reflected on the judicial crisis that I believe has already begun. While I believe that S. 696, the Federal Judge Pay Act is an equitable method for maintaining the independence of this important branch of the Government, and as such deserves careful consideration by the Governmental Affairs Committee, I want to let my colleagues know that I have been giving serious consideration to offering an amendment today to provide a 30-percent pay raise for all Federal judges as my bill would provide, or a 25-percent pay raise, as the President has recommended.

To provide the funding necessary to pay for this increase, my amendment would make an across-the-board reduction in all other appropriations in this bill, except for the appropriations for judicial salaries. Such a reduction would amount to less than three-tenths of 1 percent of each appropriation. This amendment would provide pay raises to the Supreme Court Justices, the courts of appeals judges, the district court judges, the U.S. claims court judges, the international trade court judges, the bankruptcy judges, and all full-time magistrates.

Mr. President, while I believe that this appropriations bill would be an appropriate piece of legislation to propose such a pay raise, I also understand that an increase in judicial salaries will be a primary component of the ethics legislation that we will be considering later this year. It is my sincere belief that we must adjust Federal judicial pay levels if we are to maintain the quality in the judiciary to which we have become accustomed. I have therefore decided not to offer my amendment at this time. I do wish to make it known to my colleagues, however, that if we fail to deal with judicial salaries during our consideration of the ethics bill, I do intend to bring the issue directly to the floor.

Mr. President, on March 15, Chief Justice Rehnquist held a highly unusual press conference during which he called for an increase in Federal judicial salaries. Citing the cost of inflation over the last 20 years, the difficulty in recruiting and retaining highly qualified people on the Federal bench, the threat to the concept of lifetime service, and the disparity between the salaries of the judges and attorneys in private practice, the Chief Justice, on behalf of the Judicial Conference, recommended that the members of the Federal judiciary receive a 30-percent pay raise.

Not long after that press conference, another interesting item appeared in the media. In an op-ed piece, David S. Broder related the interesting situation of George Kazen, a Federal district court judge in Laredo, TX. I would like to read a few excerpts from that article.

> Kazen is 49. He grew up in Laredo and was first in his class when he graduated, at age 21, from the University of Texas law school. Married and the father of four, he was making about $120,000 a year in private practice when President Carter appointed him to the bench ten years ago. Today, he's making $89,500 in inflation-shrunk dollars, * * *
> On behalf of the public, Judge Kazen administers justice in a vast expanse of south Texas. By all reports, he does it very well. In the last two years, as efforts to halt the flow of narcotics have intensified, his felony calendar has increased 48 percent and may be the longest of any federal judge.

In a telephone interview with the author of the editorial, Judge Kazen had this to say:

> I was in pretty good financial shape when I started here. But I have put three children through college; my son is still in law school. Another son will graduate from high school this year and wants to go to Trinity in San Antonio, where tuition, room and board is $13,000 a year, without a nickel for books or clothes or anything else.
> I have liquidated every bit of stock I owned and every investment except two pieces of real estate that are dead ducks and can't be sold. My debt has probably doubled. This year, I promised my wife, my family, my banker and myself that this would either be the year I finally got a handle on my finances, or I was going to get out. The pay raise (to $135,000, recommended late last year by President Reagan and a bipartisan commission but killed by Congress) was all going to go to reducing the debt. With it, I could see how I would be out of debt by the time I was 60. But without it, I just can't go on.
> I feel a tremendous amount of loyalty to my colleagues, to the court personnel, but there's only so much I can do for my country. I honestly feel that serving my country for 10 years has cost my family $1 million. And what really hurts is when you're told [by critics of the pay raise], "You're in a fat, cushy job. * * * You're a dime a dozen. * * * If you leave, there's a dozen others could fill your job."
> Well, I haven't looked on it as just a job. I work [hard] on this endless narcotic docket because I think it's important. But the minute I said to a reporter for a Texas legal magazine I might have to leave the bench, I started getting feelers for jobs starting around $200,000. * * * I tell you, we're the lost battalion out here, and I'll admit it, I'm very frustrated, very bitter.

Mr. President, this situation, and several others like it, are very troubling to me. When our Founding Fathers created the Federal courts, they envisioned an independent judiciary whose members would serve under lifetime appointments. Under article III, section 1 of the Constitution, "The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behavior, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office." The 1989 Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries, chaired by Lloyd N. Cutler, noted in its report that, "[t]he concept of lifetime service with undiminished compensation was designed to protect the independence of judges by removing any concern that the President or Congress would curtail their time in office or reduce their salaries."

This concept is also largely responsible for the high quality of justice found in our judicial system. To be sure, the system may have some problems, but the caliber of people who serve as justices and judges has always been at a level that engenders the trust of the American people. As the Chief Justice stated during his press conference:

> The federal judiciary has not been thought of as a stepping stone to something else. It's kind of the place where you end, not an interim step that you take in pursuing a career in public office. And I think those who were acquainted with both the state judiciary * * * and the federal judiciary realize that it does make a difference. If you have judges who are there for a lifetime career, it gives you a different kind of judge, someone who is simply devoted to judging rather than always looking out of one corner of his eye for the next political opportunity that comes along.

But, Mr. President, I fear that given the current situation involving judicial salaries, we are, in fact, encouraging many of our judges to look with more than just the corners of their eyes. The Los Angeles Times recently reported about the case of another Federal judge, Jim R. Carrigan, who confided that he would be stepping down from the bench because of the defeat of the proposed judiciary pay raise. Like Judge Kazen, Judge Carrigan has just about exhausted all of the funds and assets he had accumulated before sitting on the Federal bench in order to pay college tuition for his six children. According to the Times, although Judge Carrigan expressed a strong desire for public service, "the intangible rewards of sitting on the Federal bench were no longer enough to compensate for the prospect of going at least another 4 years without an increase in his $89,500-a-year salary."

Judge Carrigan suggests, and I would have to agree, that we may now be experiencing the beginning of an exodus from the Federal bench. According to the Judicial Conference of the United States, there appears to be a correlation between the sharp rise in early resignations from the bench and inadequate salary increases. According to their statement:

[The] figures reflect an increasing rate of departures that has grown in tandem with the decreasing real salary levels of the last two decades. During this same period the number of judges has also risen, * * * Yet the rate of increase in judicial departures clearly surpasses these rates. On the average, fewer than one judge a year resigned in the early 1970's compared to an average of five to six each year in the late 1980's. It is certainly plausible to conclude that declining real judicial salaries have contributed to a higher incidence of judicial departures in recent years.

The Judicial Conference also reviewed exit statements made by 26 departing judges to determine if salary levels were playing a role in resignations. They found that these statements did confirm that such is the case. The conference noted:

The information obtained * * * paints a sobering picture. Almost all of the judges indicated that financial considerations were a factor in their decision to leave the bench. For many, financial pressures played a decisive role. Several judges commented to the effect that "if money had not been a problem, I would still be there."

Mr. PRESIDENT, typical of these Judicial Conference findings is the statement provided by Judge Robert M. Duncan at a hearing before the 1989 Quadrennial Commission on November 11, 1988:

After [eleven and half] years of 60-65 hour work weeks, in one of the busiest districts in the United States, my life had been threatened on two occasions, my 9 year old daughter's life had been threatened, my wife was still working, we had not traveled outside the country, and I was unable to foresee how I could afford to send my youngest daughter to the university of our choice, I came to believe that my employer had not treated me fairly in an economic sense.

The decision to leave the bench was agonizing. However, for years I had been intrigued with the challenge of practicing with talented lawyers in a large, prestigious and active law firm. I took advantage of an excellent opportunity to pursue such a challenge. It is clear in my mind that the quantum increase in compensation was a strong inducement for me to leave the bench. In 1985, at age 57, I had limited productive years ahead, and I also knew that if I entered private practice I could afford to educate our youngest daughter, repair our house, my wife could retire and, finally, my earnings are somewhat comparable to the income earned by a number of law school classmates and many of the lawyers I have trained.

On the other hand, being a United States District Judge, in my view, is being at the tip-top of the legal profession. I miss the honor and privilege of doing my best to provide extremely valuable public service to our country. I miss the Court.

In a related survey the American Bar Foundation found that 95 percent of the responding active judges felt that their compensation is inappropriate and that in the absence of a significant salary increase, 30 percent plan to leave the Federal bench before retirement. Perhaps evern more significant, because of the large number of judges who responded, are the findings of the Judicial Conference. The conference reports:

[J]udges were asked how seriously they had considered cutting short their active judicial service for reasons primarily related to salary. The options listed as possibilities included resigning before reaching the minimum retirement age of 65; electing senior status sooner than the judge otherwise would have; and retiring from office . . . to return to the practice of law rather electing senior status and continuing to serve as a judge. More than one-half of the responding judges indicated that they had given at least some minimal thought to these possibilities. Many of these judges—up to 31 percent of those who responded—said they had "very seriously" considered taking at least one of these steps.

Of even more concern than the fact that many judges are giving serious consideration to shortened service is the fact that some have taken affirmative steps in that direction. A total of 66 judges indicated that they have taken specific actions related to early resignation or retirement. The actions range from looking for alternative employment to receiving and considering concrete job offers.

This survey also found that life tenure is not an acceptable tradeoff for lower pay to many judges and that more judges would be very likely to stay in office if their salaries were adequately protected from inflation.

In addition to the financial burden placed on current judges, the failure to keep judicial salaries somewhat apace of inflation has created additional problems. One such problem is the cost of training new judges and support staff, and probably more important is the loss of efficiency in handling large case loads. Retired Chief Justice Burger has estimated that "it takes 5 years for a qualified attorney to reach peak efficiency as a Federal judge."

Another problem involves the recruitment of future judges. Former Deputy Attorney General Edward G. Schmults had this to say regarding judicial recruitment:

For three years, beginning in 1981, I played an active role in the judicial selection process. Time and time again, I and others at the Department of Justice were told by highly qualified lawyers that they simply could not afford to leave the practice of law for a federal judicial post. Beyond those lawyers who were contacted by the Department, we were keenly aware of many more outstanding candidates who would not even let their names be put forward for consideration.

In addition, the Judicial Conference survey found these results:

[W]hen asked what they would advise a friend or colleague considering seeking a nomination, 20 percent of judges indicated they would advise against it, primarily for salary reasons. More than half of the judges mentioned compensation in their responses, mostly to the effect that prospective nominees should be fully aware of the inadequate compensation before making a lifetime commitment to the office. One judge stated that he would advise a friend to seek a judgeship "if he had no children he had to educate, was willing to live very frugally, and had some private resources. In other words, this excludes most normal, successful lawyers."

I would like to conclude by reading from the report of the Quadrennial Salary Commission:

The constant dollar value of federal judges' salaries has been eroded to less than 70% of what it was in 1969. At the same time, the workload of judges has increased dramatically. Despite increases in the number of authorized judgeships in the last twenty years, caseloads per judge have increased sharply. Since 1969, average District Court caseloads have increased 53%, from 339 to 520 cases per judge per year. The appellate courts have experienced more than a 100% increase, with average caseloads rising from 123 cases per judge in 1969 to 249 in 1988. This combination of less pay for more work has caused many judges to leave the bench for private practice at much higher levels of compensation.

Unfortunately, when we voted against the recommended congressional pay increase earlier this year, we were unable to consider separately the recommendations for the judicial branch. It surely must be demoralizing for a Federal judge to realize that his or her new law clerk, fresh out of law school, will be earning much more than the judge almost as soon as the clerk leaves the court. I firmly believe that the country will suffer greatly because of the evident increasing low morale within the judiciary.

Mr. President, I believe that we must act soon on this pay increase if we are to avoid a judicial crisis. I ask my colleagues to give serious thought to this issue.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I completely agree with Senator HATCH about the need to increase Federal judges' salaries.

Historically, Federal judges' salaries have been linked to congressional salaries. In terms of the responsibilities and importance of both jobs, I think the linkage has been appropriate. However, because of the lack of political will to adjust our own salaries, the value of salaries for judges has decreased to the point that the quality of justice is truly beginning to be strained.

Mr. President, most lawyers have always aspired to be Federal judges. That is as it should be because the judiciary should consist of our finest legal minds. Whether the matter at issue is interpretation of our Federal statutes, resolution of important property or injury claims among our citizens, or protection of the Constitution, clearly we are well served only when our judges are the best our legal profession has to offer.

Unfortunately, today's salaries are threatening the continued quality of our judiciary. More and more judges are quitting for understandable reasons—such as to earn enough to send their children to college. How much longer can we continue to pay our Federal judges little more than our Nation's top law firms pay first year associates? Surely, to continue down this path is to court disaster.

Moreover, I think it is important to keep in mind that judges' salaries are only one part of the problem, a problem that encompasses the value we place on public service. For just as surely as most of the best lawyers will abandon, or not seek appointment to, the judiciary if salaries are not higher relative to private sector salaries, so will our best minds abandon public service. This will be true whether it is our top researchers at NIH or Assistant Cabinet Secretaries who are paid less than $85,000 a year to manage billions of dollars and thousands of people.

Mr. President, it is easy to rail against increased salaries for Federal bureaucrats or judges, but we are beginning to see the effects of our actions, and they are distressing indeed. Just yesterday, we discovered that the Federal Housing Administration, the agency that helps millions of Americans buy homes, has current and anticipated losses of $6.9 billion. Why? The answer is telling and frightening—because of poor management practices, high turnover and inadequate staffing at HUD during the Reagan years. That is a very real price that all of us will pay for placing too low a price on public service.

Unfortunately, the FHA mess is not an isolated example. The FSLIC debacle, which will cost American taxpayers about $160 billion over the next decade, occurred in part because the OMB refused to give the Federal Home Loan Bank Board the number of personnel the Board was requesting to supervise the thrifts with their newly-granted broader powers. Moreover, it wasn't until 1985 that the regulators were able to devise a way to pay competitive salaries in order to attract the best supervisory personnel. Unfortunately, by then the horse thieves were long gone from the barn.

Mr. President, on June 12 I introduced S. 1116, a bill which would provide for a gradual increase in the rate of pay for senior executive branch officials and for judges, and S. 1117, a bill to provide for a gradual and concurrent increase in the rate of pay and decrease in honoraria for Members of Congress. Adoption of these bills would put an end to the kind of problems I have been talking about. I am prepared to wait to see if the ethics legislation addresses these problems, but if it does not, I will be back here because this is a fight for good government. We can—and should—debate the appropriate size and functions of government, but once we decide what government should be involved in, we must assure that the people who carry out those functions are the best people we can find.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to express my appreciation to the members of the Commerce Appropriations Subcommittee for providing all-important funding for the operations and activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Right now, the health of our environment is a matter of national—actually, international—concern. And I'd say with good cause. Global warming, clean air and water, and deforestation are some of the major issues directly related to the well-being of our population and our Earth. In this context, NOAA plays a vital role. We need to make sure that NOAA has the wherewithal to help us monitor and solve the environmental problems we face.

In my home State of Rhode Island, at the University of Rhode Island Graduate School of Oceanography, we have one of the best marine research programs in the country. In fact, U.R.I. was designated as a NOAA "Center of Excellence in Coastal Marine Studies." It is my hope that the excellent work being done at U.R.I. will continue as an integral part of NOAA research efforts, and benefit from the funding in the measure we have approved today.

COUNTERTERRORISM FUNDS

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, the crash of UTA flight 772 last week, apparently caused by a terrorist bomb, is another grim reminder of the dangers terrorists pose to the civilized world. That crash in Africa killed 171 persons, including 7 Americans. Meanwhile, in Colombia, there has been an outbreak of terrorism prompted by drug traffickers, and investigators are still trying to solve the terrible bombing of Pan Am 103, which was destroyed in Scotland last year and claimed 270 lives, including 189 Americans.

Congress has the authority to promulgate legislation designed to counter terrorism, including laws which pressure other nations which support terrorism. Terrorism, however, is not a subject that can be easily addressed by legislation, sanctions, and resolutions. We must take steps to detect and counter the increasingly sophisticated weapons and explosives used by terrorists.

Such steps can be taken through the Commerce, State, and Justice Department appropriations bill which is now before us. This bill contains a relatively small amount of funding for the interagency Counterterrorist Research and Development Program as part of the State Department's diplomatic security salaries and expenses account. The program provides seed money to develop more effective methods of detecting explosives and chemical and biological agents, as well as improving our ability to respond to terrorist incidents.

The program, which is coordinated by the State Department, provides startup money for research on priority projects which a group of interagency scientists and experts concluded deserved priority but have not yet been funded by individual agencies.

The program has also funded R&D to create new advanced systems to detect plastic and sheet explosives of the type used to blow up airliners. The projects started by this program could provide second-generation sensing components to supplement or replace some of the equipment in the first generation equipment such as the thermal nuclear analyzers which have been the subject of some recent controversy.

The interagency program also is used by the State Department to coordinate the growing effort to generate cooperation on R&D with allied countries. The United States currently is working with other countries to develop a chemical taggant for preblast detection of plastic explosives of the type used to blow up Pan Am 103.

Mr. President, this program is a good one, but it has been underfunded. The administration requested $6 million for fiscal year 1990, the same requested for fiscal year 1989. Congress, however, only appropriated $3 million last year, and the result was that some important projects were reduced or shelved entirely.

The bill before us today straightlines last year's $3 million figure and thus represents a 50-percent cut in the administration's request for the second consecutive year. This is not the time to fail to do what we can to prevent additional aircraft bombings or other terrorist acts.

I recognize the competition for scarce budget resources, but we must find some way to provide more funding for this very important counterterrorism effort. I hope that in conference, the conferees can make adjustments and fund the administration's request. The program is a good investment in the continuing battle against terrorism.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, with the end of the current fiscal year, the Department of Justice is technically free to move forward with the reorganization that Attorney General Thornburgh has proposed for the Organized Crime Strike Forces. The reorganization is controversial in Congress. Many of us have serious reservations about the Attorney General's proposal. We feel that the strike forces have worked well, and that reorganizing them out of existence would be an unfortunate and unwise step backward in the war on crime and drugs.

We considered the possibility of extending the current statutory prohibition on such reorganizations as part of the pending Department of Justice appropriations measure. However, we still hope that it may be possible to reach a compromise with the Attorney General on the issue that will avoid further controversy. Under a unanimous consent agreement reached earlier this week, the Senate will shortly take up a measure dealing with the death penalty, habeas corpus reform, the exclusionary rule, Justice Department reorganization, international money laundering, and the availability of firearms for purchase. We intend to pursue the possibilities for compromise on the organized crime strike forces as part of that legislation. I know that Attorney General Thornburgh is as interested as we are in resolving these organization issues as expeditiously as possible, and I look forward to working with him and with other Senators to achieve that goal.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President. I would like to acknowledge Senator HOLLINGS, chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for proceeding with the fiscal year 1990 Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary appropriations bill so expeditiously and congratulate him for setting such a fine example of hard work and devotion to his job.

I want to thank him for his help in funding Maryland projects. I would also like to thank his fine staff, Warren Kane, Dorothy Seder, and Liz Blevens. Furthermore, I recognize the ranking minority member Senator RUDMAN as well as his staff, John Shank and Judee Klepec for their help throughout the process. Their in-depth knowledge of the subject matter, candor with others, hard work, long hours, and courtesy were instrumental in getting this important bill prepared in such a timely and efficient manner.

I would like to briefly mention a few of the important items contained in this bill.

This bill contains funding for the consolidation of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in Silver Spring, MD. This consolidation, bringing NOAA to 1 site from 17, will dramatically reduce the agency's administrative costs and improve its program coordination.

I request that full funding in the amount of $19 million be approved for continued operation of Landsat 4 and 5. Although this bill only contains $9.5 million, half of the requested amount, I feel strongly that the Landsat system is an invaluable national resource we can ill afford to neglect in the face of increasing international competition. I understand that these funds will be available for the first 6 months of operation and that NOAA is expected to make suitable financial contributions if the satellites continue to operate. The United States has invested a tremendous amount of capital, time and effort into making the Landsat Program the world's foremost civilian remote sensing system. Data from Landsat are used for projecting crop yields, monitoring pollution, land use planning, and mineral exploration. Furthermore, a $34.7 million appropriation for Landsat 6 is essential in order to meet the projected June 1991 launch date.

In addition, I support the $22.9 million, a $1.9 million increase in funding for the National Institute of Justice to aid them in the war on drugs. I believe that the institute has served as an invaluable resource for the Nation's police chiefs as well reducing domestic violence and implementing effective drug interdiction strategies. The drug situation in the D.C. region, a high priority area to William Bennett, is of great concern to me. We must work together to rid this Nation of this terrible problem, we cannot allow the District's problems to simply spread into the suburbs of Maryland and Virginia.

Finally, I mention my support included in this bill for the programs of the National Institute of Standards and Technology. Headquartered in Gaithersburg, MD, the institute plays a vital role in promoting improved U.S. industrial competitiveness. NIST serves as the Nation's premier science and engineering measurement laboratory and provides the basic foundation of our country's scientific and industrial strength. Increases in the budget are necessary for computer security, chemical measurements and standards, lightwave measurement technology, bioprocess engineering, high-performance composites, high-temperature superconductors and an upgrade of NIST scientific computers.

Once again Mr. President, I would like to acknowledge the job Chairman HOLLINGS and Senator RUDMAN as well as their staffs have done. They must handle many requests for funds and choose from the many deserving projects. Their efforts are truly commendable. However, there was one amendment I was prepared to offer regarding possible plans for a detention facility in Maryland. I did not offer this amendment but will pursue this matter in the conference committee to achieve a satisfactory result.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I thank Senator GRAMM of Texas. He worked tirelessly with members of the subcommittee and the staff on behalf of the DEA and the FBI in getting this budget together. Being from Texas and with the concerns they have there, his work was very valuable to us. I commend him for his help in the recent drug negotiations, in helping reach the compromise that added $900 million. I wanted to express a personal thanks to Senator GRAMM for that.

I also, of course, thank Senator HOLLINGS, who spent the day here wanting to be in South Carolina where his constituents have such problems. He left here just a short while ago to fly down there.

I thank my dear friend from Hawaii, Senator INOUYE, who I think we will call the iron man. He was here from early morning yesterday, early morning today, and graciously came forward and helped manage this bill for Senator HOLLINGS. I thank the Senator from Hawaii for his work. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I thank the managers on this legislation.

I express my support for this bill and thanks for all the work that went into it. I know that it was a grueling type of situation. Senator RUDMAN and Senator HOLLINGS and their staffs put in so much time trying to find a compromise to fund the drug bill. It sure was not an easy task and I commend them for a job well done.

I am particularly pleased with the formula change that the committee made for State and local law enforcement agencies and those grants. Under the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, the Federal-State match for grants was slated to go from 3-to-1 to a 1-to-1 match, and the 1 to 1 match was also assumed in the President's national drug control strategy.

What the committee did was to delay that for 2 years.

That is all very technical but practically speaking I can say that this brings great relief to State and local government and law enforcement people. The administrator of the Montana Board of Crime Control and one of our drug task force project directors contacted me and said increasing the local match from 25 to 50 percent this fiscal year would put the fully operational task forces at risk. I am sure that is true in many States, not only my own of Montana.

Local communities just cannot budget for that type of 1-year increase and would consider dropping the task forces altogether. I do not think it is the feeling of this Senate or this government at this time that this is a good time to be killing these types of programs.

The intent of the previous law and of the President's strategy is to get all levels of Government involved in this issue, and we are. I support that goal. However we must be reasonable and give local communities time to adjust. I am pleased that the committee has taken this step to do this.

So I appreciate the work of Senator RUDMAN, and all those conferees who understood what local government goes through in the budget process, and this increase would have been devastating. I think it would have taken some of our local law enforcement and task force out of the program entirely.

We who live in principally rural areas are not exempt from this terrible problem called drugs and we want to be a part of the solution as soon as possible. So I commend them for that and their work on this bill in making those adjustments, and salute them for it.

Mr. President, I thank you. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, first let me thank my friend from Montana. He is quite right. We are putting enormous amounts of money into local law-enforcement grants. The present occupant of the chair was a very distinguished Governor from the Commonwealth of Virginia, and I am sure recognized as we all do that if you suddenly give communities a great deal more money in the middle of the year and they have to match it one to one, they might not be able to raise the money to match it.

That is precisely the issue the Senator from Montana raised. We have deferred the match increase for 2 years in putting enormous amounts of money into the war on drugs at all levels. There will be some match but the 50 percent match will not come for at least a 2-year period.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

So the bill (H.R. 2991), as amended, was passed.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes thereon, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer [Mr. ROBB] appointed Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. SASSER, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. BYRD, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. GRAMM, and Mr. MCCLURE conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I want to congratulate the committee and congratulate the Senate for the final passage of the State, Justice, Commerce appropriations bill because contained within that bill is strong language to prohibit the importation of foreign shrimp where those foreign countries do not adhere to the same standards to protect the turtles as does the State of Louisiana and other shrimp producers in this country.

Mr. President, last year foreign countries claimed 70 percent of the U.S. market for shrimp and shrimp products. One hundred and four million pounds were imported from Equador, 63 million pounds from Mexico. Mr. President, these countries do not use the so-called turtle-excluder devices. These countries are probably the biggest offenders in terms of endangering the sea turtles as are domestic American producers.

So, Mr. President, it would be an outrage if this country imported shrimp from countries like Mexico who do not utilize these turtle-excluder devices while our shrimpers are being penalized.

So, Mr. President, what we did in the Appropriations Committee—when I say "we," my distinguished colleague, Senator BREAUX, had previously proposed this language and had it adopted on another bill, but that bill, the Armed Services bill, was not going to pass. So I added this on behalf of Senator BREAUX and myself in the Appropriations Committee.

This language provides for negotiation with these foreign countries. If they fail to take the same kind of action that we in Louisiana are required to take under the Federal law, than after 1991 we may no longer import these shrimp from these foreign countries.

If they undertake all of the same kinds of things that we do in this country then those importations may proceed. But if they fail to take turtle-excluder devices and the other provisions called for under American law then we will not be able to import the shrimp from those countries, which will mean, Mr. President, that the 70 percent supplied by foreigners who do not undertake those same kind of actions cannot be imported.

What it will mean in practical terms, we think, if those countries do not take that action the price of shrimp obviously will go up because the supply will be down, so that Louisiana shrimpers, Texas shrimpers, Florida shrimpers will in effect have some form of compensation in the form of higher prices for their shrimp should these countries fail to take that action.

If they take the action and do those things which are necessary to protect the sea turtles, then the purpose will have been well achieved.

Mr. President, Senator BREAUX and I have in this amendment I think an effective protection first for sea turtles, and alternatively help for the price of shrimp for our shrimpers in Louisiana.

Mr. President, the turtle-excluder device should not, in my judgment, have been made a requirement because there is an ongoing study which has not been completed as to the effectiveness of those devices. We have fought long and hard not only in the Senate but with our colleagues in the House to try to prevent this rule from coming into operation.

Mr. President, it was over our protests that this amendment came into operation. But since it did come into operation this is the next best thing we can do. I think the amendment as proposed in this legislation and fought for by Senator BREAUX, my colleague, and by me in the Appropriations Committee is going to be a great step forward.

Mr. President, I see my colleague from Louisiana on the floor. It is a pleasure, of course, to work with him on this amendment.

I yield the floor to him.

Mr. BREAUX addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX].

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I want to commend our senior Senator from Louisiana for his work in crafting this provision and putting it into the State, Justice, and Commerce appropriation. As has been outlined previously, I will be very brief. We have a heck of a problem here in the Gulf of Mexico with regard to literally thousands and thousands of people who shrimp for a living. The United States most valuable fishery is the shrimp industry, and it is in danger of being eliminated and threatened by Federal rulings and regulations, as any species that has ever been listed by the Endangered Species Act.

This results because of regulations that have been imposed by the Department of Commerce, which would require the use of turtle-excluder devices as these shrimpers go about this business of harvesting. These regulations are simply not working. In addition to that, they are shown to be not effective in doing what they are designed to do. The problem is even made worse by the fact that other nations which export their shrimp products into this country have little, if any, concern about the endangered species, the ridley sea turtle.

What our amendment does is require our Department of Commerce and the State Department to survey those countries that have an impact on the ridley sea turtle, and to ascertain whether they in fact are taking measures to protect those endangered species, like our shrimpers are being required to do. If they are not—and I tell you I know for a fact they are not—and that determination is made, we will ban the importation of those products into our country.

It is patently unfair on its face to say to the U.S. industry that you must abide by these sets of rules and regulations, but other countries do not have to do anything, and, yet, we will then give them our market. That is exactly what is happening.

I think the amendment that Senator JOHNSTON and I worked on together is a good amendment. It will require other countries to do exactly what we are being required to do, and if in fact they do not, they will lose the U.S. market. It is absolutely unfair and bad policy to do anything else.

So this amendment, I think, will go a long way to establishing a level playing field, while we work together to try to get new rules and regulations which make sense.

Mr. President, I am very pleased that this administration is now a part of the Senate package, and I hope that it would reach the President and that he will sign it with great enthusiasm.

I yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I want to congratulate my colleague, who originally came up with this idea and attached this amendment on, I believe, the armed services authorization bill. The Senate acted on it and put it on that bill, but that bill may or may not get out of conference.

This appropriation bill will be passed, because we must pass the legislation. I think this is going to be very effective. If we must use TED's then everybody else ought to have to use TED's as well. If they do not use the TED's if they are not required to do that which we are required, then we should not be required to import their shrimp.

I think if they do not measure up to the rules, then I think our people in Louisiana and Florida and elsewhere will be compensated by a higher price of shrimp.

Mr. BREAUX. I say to my colleague, he is absolutely correct. Just one country, Mexico, exported into the United States approximately over 63 million pounds of shrimp just last year, and that has a value of over $300 million. Yet, they do not have to follow the same rules and regulations. We are giving them our market, while we do not require them to do anything in return. Yet, our actions are putting our own citizens in severe jeopardy. That is patently unfair.

This legislation that we now have has a great deal of precedence. We have done the same thing with regard to other species like, for instance, the marine mammals on which we require other countries to have programs, and if they do not, they are going to lose access to our market. That is exactly what this legislation in fact does. I think it is a major step in the right direction.

It is important that we start giving the same amount of care and concern to humans in this country, as we do to some of our endangered species. Humans are certainly no less valuable; in fact, they are much more valuable, just the opposite.

I think this legislation will bring back the proper balance that Senator JOHNSTON and I are together seeking by this legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. BREAUX. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF EASTERN AIRLINES DISPUTE

MOTION TO PROCEED

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, under the agreement previously reached on the drug legislation, the Senate was to proceed to the immediate consideration of a bill that incorporates certain of the remaining legislative initiatives of the President's drug strategy. I have spoken with Senator DOLE and understand that final details of this bill are being worked out. I would like to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 33, H.R. 1231, an act to direct the President to establish an emergency board to investigate and report respecting the dispute between Eastern Airlines and its collective bargaining units; file cloture against the motion; and then withdraw the motion. This would mean that a vote on cloture would occur next Tuesday, and the Senate could consider the nomination of Joseph Zappala to be Ambassador to Spain on Monday.

To protect the position of the drug bill, I now ask unanimous consent that the majority leader, after consultation with the Republican leader, may proceed to the consideration of the drug bill, referenced in the previously obtained consent agreement, at any time, regardless of the pendency of any other legislation, and notwithstanding the provisions of rule XXII.

I further ask unanimous consent that when the Senate recesses today, it stand in recess until 2 p.m. on Monday, October 2; and that following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond 2:30. I further ask unanimous consent that at 2:30 the Senate proceed in executive session to the consideration of the nomination of Joseph Zappala to be the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Spain.

I further ask unanimous consent that the vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to the consideration of H.R. 1231 occur at 12:15 p.m. on Tuesday, October 3; that at the conclusion of that vote, the Senate stand in recess for the two party conferences; and that at 2:15, regardless of the outcome of the earlier cloture vote, the Senate resume consideration of the Zappala nomination in executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I want to make certain I understand the position of the drug bill. It is my understanding that after the vote on cloture, if cloture is not obtained, then the drug bill would have priority. I assume if cloture was obtained, then would that displace the drug bill until final disposition of the Eastern Airlines matter?

Mr. MITCHELL. Is the question directed at me or to the Chair?

My understanding is that this provides me with the authority, after consultation with the distinguished Republican leader, to proceed to consideration of the drug bill at any time regardless of the pendency of any other legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The interpretation by the majority leader is correct.

Is there objection to the request by the majority leader for unanimous consent?

Mr. MITCHELL. As stated in the request, it is my understanding that what this would do if agreed to would be to provide the majority leader, after consultation with the Republican leader, with the authority to proceed to the consideration of the drug bill at any time, notwithstanding the pendency of any other legislation, so it would be in position to be called up at any time that we agree.

Mr. DOLE. In fact, as I understand the order on the drug bill, it almost mandates us to take up the drug bill, and I do not remember what the majority leader said about final disposition. In other words, after this is done, and if there is something else, we would have to, in effect, set aside the drug bill again. Is that how we are going to work it? I do not have any problem with that. I just want to be certain of it.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is my understanding, that it would be awaiting a decision to proceed to it.

As the distinguished Republican leader knows, I intended to proceed to it immediately upon completion of the State, Commerce, Justice appropriations bill and barring some reason, which I am now completely unaware of, I plan to do so as soon as the bill is ready and we reach agreement in terms of doing it in terms of the schedule.

Mr. DOLE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request by the majority leader is the order of the Senate.

ORDER FOR WAIVER OF LIVE QUORUM

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that the live quorum preceding a vote on the cloture vote be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF EASTERN AIRLINES DISPUTE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 33, H.R. 1231.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 33, H.R. 1231.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to H.R. 1231, to direct the President to establish an emergency board to investigate and report respecting the dispute between Eastern Airlines and its collective bargaining units.

Alan Cranston, Wendell Ford, Jay Rockefeller, Bob Graham, George Mitchell, Timothy E. Wirth, Edward M. Kennedy, Kent Conrad, Paul Simon, Brock Adams, Robert C. Byrd, Alan J. Dixon, Daniel K. Inouye, Christopher J. Dodd, Patrick Leahy, and Howard M. Metzenbaum.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I withdraw my motion to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ISSUES ARISING OUT OF THE EASTERN AIRLINES STRIKE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as the Senate has worked over the past 6 months, we have been facing an item of unfinished business.

On March 2, 1989, a strike began at Eastern Airlines between the International Association of Machinists and management, with members of the Airline Pilots Association and the Transport Workers Union honoring machinist picket lines. The President declined to exercise statutory authority under the Federal Railway Labor Act to order an emergency board to investigate the dispute and to impose a 60-day cooling off period.

The President's decision ignored the recommendation of the National Mediation Board [NMB]—and the fact that in over 30 cases involving the airline industry, whenever the NMB recommended an emergency board order, and emergency board had always been created.

Eastern Airlines then filed for bankruptcy. On March 15, the House of Representatives voted 252 to 167 to approve H.R. 1231 to require the President to appoint an emergency board. The House committee report on the bill predicted that "Unless the labor disputes can be resolved promptly, Eastern is unlikely to be able to reorganize and resume operations as a major airline."

On March 16, the Senate began consideration of H.R. 1231. A cloture petition was filed to overcome a filibuster in opposition to the bill.

Following the March recess, H.R. 1231 was withdrawn from Senate consideration. On March 23, the bankruptcy judge had held a hearing on the appointment of an examiner to review the Eastern case, and subsequently had decided to grant the examiner extraordinary powers, including the responsibility to mediate between Eastern and its unions to achieve a settlement that would be both economically sound and fair to striking employees.

At the same time, negotiations were underway between Texas Air chairman, Frank Lorenzo and several prospective buyers of Eastern Airlines. There was reason at the time to be guardedly optimistic that an agreement would be reached that would include a settlement with all employee groups and lead to a resumption of Eastern's operations.

Unfortunately, none of the hopes and expectations of April have bloomed into reality. The bankruptcy proceedings have led only to a fragmentation of Eastern assets. There has not been any progress in resolving the original dispute between labor and management.

In withdrawing H.R. 1231 from Senate consideration on April 4 and returning it to the Senate calendar I clearly stated the understanding that "depending on the course of events, the leadership and principal sponsors of the legislation will proceed to take up the bill again if events warrant that action."

Such action is warranted today.

In bringing H.R. 1231 to the Senate floor again, it is my intention to offer a substitute amendment cosponsored by Senators KENNEDY, GRAHAM, FORD, BYRD, DIXON, ADAMS, and LIEBERMAN.

The Eastern Airline strike, bankruptcy, and fragmentation pose serious consequences for our national air transportation system. Before the strike began, Eastern was the Nation's sixth largest airline, with 30,000 employees. In 1988, it carried 35.6 million passengers, representing 7.5 percent of domestic air traffic.

Eastern used to be the dominant carrier on major routes in the Eastern United States. In the first three-quarters of 1988, the airline carried 67 percent of the New York-Miami market; 57 percent the LaGuardia-Boston and New York-Washington markets; and 52 percent of the Miami-Atlanta markets.

Today, Eastern Airlines is less than a shadow of its former self. The strike and bankruptcy have led to bitter hardships for Eastern employees and their families, no matter what side of the picket line they may be on. The short-term effects are also nothing compared to the potential long-term, structural implications for the airline industry.

In the last few years, there have been 10 mergers of major airlines. Of the 22 new airlines that entered the domestic market since deregulation, only 5 are still operating as separate entities.

From 1983 to 1987, the market share of the top eight airlines increased from 74 percent to 91 percent. The fragmentation of Eastern Airlines only contributes to this concentration of power within the industry.

The stakes are bigger than just Eastern, or just the dispute between Eastern and its unions. The impact is broader than any inconveniences already suffered by Eastern creditors, employees, ticketholders, and communities the airline once served.

The critical, pervasive importance of transportation to our economy makes the transportation industry different from all other industries. That is why the Federal Railway Labor Act which governs railroads and airlines is different from the National Labor Relations Act—and allows for such intervention as a Presidential emergency board.

It is with these broader concerns in mind, that I believe it essential to call up H.R. 1231—and offer a substitute amendment.

Because of intervening events, Eastern is no longer the airline that it used to be. For the same reason, H.R. 1231 is no longer best-suited to deal with the immediate situation. I therefore will propose a substitute amendment to create a commission to investigate the Eastern Airline dispute, but which will be different from an emergency board.

There will be no force of law directly brought to bear on the parties involved in the dispute. The substitute amendment will have no requirement that the parties return to the prestrike conditions out of which the dispute arose. Eastern Airlines today is a different airline. The conflict between labor and management has run its worst. Prestrike conditions no longer exist. There no longer is any point to a cooling-off period.

The substitute amendment also will not interfere with the ongoing bankruptcy proceedings involving Eastern. The Commission's recommendations are to be directed to Congress and the Secretary of Transportation. To the degree that the Commission's work may be helpful to the bankruptcy court's deliberations, the bankruptcy judge, of course, can take judicial notice of its report. But there is no interference in the normal bankruptcy process.

The substitute amendment to H.R. 1231 will direct the Commission to investigate and make findings of fact and recommendations regarding the "prompt and equitable settlement" of the Eastern strike. Understanding the reasons for the original dispute is essential—if there is to be any hope at all for Eastern workers ever returning to their jobs; and if there is to be any hope at all for both labor and management to work together to avoid such conflicts.

The substitute amendment also will direct the Commission to consider other issues arising out of the Eastern Airlines dispute—but which involve policy considerations that go far beyond any one airline. These issues include:

The powers of the Secretary of Transportation to intervene on behalf of the public interest to main competitiveness during airline acquisitions, mergers, and bankruptcies.

The adequacy of protection of employee collective bargaining rights in bankruptcy proceedings involving air carriers.

The impact of increased concentration and increased foreign ownership of domestic carriers; and

The hiring of replacement workers in international and interstate commerce during labor disputes involving air carriers, and its impact on aviation safety.

These are all important issues. Many of them potentially require legislative action. It will be the responsibility of the proposed Commission to make a comprehensive study, and make focused recommendations that can be considered in the normal course of the legislative process.

I believe this is an appropriate, reasonable, and necessary step in addressing issues arising out of the Eastern Airlines dispute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The Chair recognizes the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

EASTERN AIRLINES COMMISSION LEGISLATION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I urge the Senate to support bringing up this legislation. As the majority leader has indicated, a complete substitute will be offered for a commission to investigate and make recommendations regarding the protracted dispute at Eastern Airlines and the underlying causes of that dispute.

The legislation should not be necessary. If President Bush had followed the unbroken precedent of naming an emergency board—a precedent that even President Reagan honored—we would have had recommendations for the settlement of this dispute 4 months ago.

Instead, President Bush ignored this time-honored procedure for obtaining objective recommendations. In every instance that the National Mediation Board has recommended a neutral emergency board to find facts and make recommendations, every President has agreed to the recommendation—except President Bush.

Secretary of Transportation Skinner has attempted to explain this decision by the administration to abdicate its responsibility. He claims there was no national emergency. This is the same Samuel Skinner who not 8 months previously had called on Congress to intervene in a commuter railroad dispute in Chicago, saying it was Congress' public responsibility.

In the wake of the administration's irresponsible inactivity, the House of Representatives enacted legislation to mandate the creation of an emergency board, and to make the findings of fact and recommendations for the settlement of the dispute. When the Senate atempt to take up that bill, the administration and their allies here were adamantly opposed to this measure of simple fairness. They threatened to filibuster against any such attempt to establish just procedures to end the strike. The House-passed bill has languished in the Senate ever since, while the strike has continued to fester.

Six months later the strike continues, the employees of Eastern and their families have suffered great hardship, and we still have no neutral findings and recommendations for ending the dispute.

What facts are our Republican friends so afraid of that they are willing to engage in a filibuster to prevent them from seeing the light of day?

What recommendations for settlement are they so afraid of, they do not even want them to be proposed. Or are they simply puppets on the end of Frank Lorenzo's string, dancing to whatever turn he calls?

We know enough of the facts to know that this situation smells to the rafters of the Senate.

From the time of his purchase of Eastern in 1986, Frank Lorenzo has systematically plundered Eastern of its valuable assets. He has saddled a once-proud airline with enormous debt. His rape of Eastern triggered an article in the respected publication Financial World which observed "Eastern appears to be the victim of a corporate version of the battered-child syndrome: it is being mugged by its own parent."

Frank Lorenzo bought Eastern Airlines for $640 million, but he put up only $280 million of his own money. Eastern actually put up $108 million of the cash for its own aquisition.

That was only the beginning. From day one, Frank Lorenzo has systematically siphoned cash and assets away from Eastern. The reservation system was sold for a song—to Texas Air, which is also owned by Frank Lorenzo. Eleven gates were sold at Newark for a pittance—to Continental Airlines, which is also owned by Frank Lorenzo.

Eastern was forced to pay $10 million a month to use its former reservation system, and $6 million a year for management fees—which by any measure of truth in language should be called mismanagement fees.

Before the National Mediation Board declared an impasse in the dispute last February, the Board had offered both parties the opportunity to submit the dispute to arbitration. The union readily agreed—but Frank Lorenzo refused to accept a fair and impartial mediation of the dispute by a neutral arbitrator.

Serious issues were raised by events leading up to the strike, and additional serious issues have been raised by events since the strike.

The bankruptcy proceedings have been abused by Frank Lorenzo again. He did it once before with Continental Airlines. Congress closed one loophole after that abuse, but other loopholes are still large enough for this slippery antiworker chief executive to slip through.

Obviously Congress cannot act now to unscramble the eggs that Frank Lorenzo has scrambled since last March. But there is still time to bring a measure of justice to this irresponsible dispute.

The proposal we are making would provide the Department of Transportation and the Congress with an expert assessment of the current state of the facts involved in this dispute, and recommendations for its prompt and equitable settlement.

The blue-ribbon panel to be created would also make recommendation on policy issues raised in this dispute, so that the Congress and the President can take future steps to ensure the traveling public and all airline employees that there will never be another Eastern.

One corporate raider should not be able to sabotage a distinguished airline with 50 years of service, and destroy the hopes and dreams of 30,000 Eastern families.

At every step of the way, the normal process for peaceful settlement of this dispute has been blocked by Frank Lorenzo. In his numerous nefarious antiworker maneuvers, Frank Lorenzo has been aided and abetted every step of the way by the Bush administration. That is wrong, and it is long past time for Congress to act. The traveling public and the workers of America deserve a fair and objective assessment of the issues in this long and endless strike. And the Eastern employees who have suffered so much for so long deserve no less. I urge the Senate to approve the substitute we are proposing.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, by action just taken by the Senate, we have set the stage for a debate on Tuesday relative to the future of American commercial aviation. While this debate is going to be in the context of Eastern Airlines, it raises so many broader questions of the responsibility of Government, specifically the Congress of the United States, to the long-term viability of U.S. commercial aviation.

A decade ago, we decided that we would cast our lot with a deregulated commercial aviation industry. I supported that at the time, and I continue to support the basic concept of allowing the marketplace to be the primary determinant of routes and of fares. But I also recognize, Mr. President, that there have been a series of disturbing incidents as to what has occurred within the industry. The fact that Eastern Airlines, which was at one time one of the largest and strongest airlines in the country, is now in bankruptcy and, at best, will be a much different, smaller, and weaker airline than it was at its height is but one example. I would bring to the attention of the President and my colleagues three events which have been in the paper within the past 10 days:

First, a news item that aviation prices were going to be raised; that on average of 10 to 20 percent increase, particularly in those fares that are most utilized by the discretionary traveler.

Second, a tragic incident that occurred at LaGuardia Airport in New York where an airline which had recently been through a merger had an accident on the field resulting in two deaths. The exact cause of that accident will now be the subject of a major investigation by the appropriate safety agency.

Third, Braniff Airlines, an airline which has already gone through one bankruptcy and considerable dislocation which has recently moved its corporate headquarters to my State in Orlando, FL, has now declared bankruptcy for a second time causing great inconvenience to those communities which are served by them and the thousands of travelers and users of commercial freight who have depended upon Braniff Airlines. Those are three isolated incidents, Mr. President, that raise some disturbing questions about the future of commercial aviation under the current circumstances.

I might point out, Mr. President, and you know this well as a member of the Banking Committee, some of the analogies of what we are seeing in commercial aviation to what we saw in the thrift industry. Our first harbinger of problems in the thrift industry was an institution here that had gotten into trouble, and an institution in another State that had gone into financial distress. It was not until recently, within the last 2 or 3 years, that we began to see these individual instances were part of a larger pattern.

I believe that we need to avoid a repetition of what occurred in the thrift industry by an early and systematic analysis by an appropriate congressionally established commission to study the issues of the economics of commercial aviation. That is what will be proposed as a Senate amendment to H.R. 1231. I look forward to the debate on Tuesday and to affirmative action by this body which will allow us to move forward in a manner that will be very much to the benefit of the American public. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EASTERN AIRLINES LABOR DISPUTE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the motion to proceed offered by the distinguished majority leader, Senator MITCHELL.

I would indicate we at one point thought there might be some way to have another investigation. But after consultation with administration leaders, we determined that was not in the best interests of Eastern, nor its present nor former employees. I will explain that in more detail.

Last week, I was fortunate to have the opportunity to meet with several prominent union leaders to discuss a number of issues of importance to the labor movement. Not surprisingly, at this meeting, we discussed the current situation at Eastern and the possibility of creating a blue ribbon commission.

After discussing the commission with several members of the administration, and after carefully reviewing the situation at Eastern, I have come to the conclusion—regrettably—that creating a blue ribbon commission would be ill-advised at this time. Last March, the Senate weighed in on the merits of the Presidential emergency board. We thought then that the PEB was a bad idea—and in my view, at least—a blue ribbon commission would be no different. It, too, is a bad idea.

GOOD INTENTIONS

Now, I know that the distinguished majority leader, Senator KENNEDY, and the rest of the bill's sponsors are motivated by good intentions. Nobody likes a strike—particularly a strike as prolonged and bitter as the strike at Eastern. Consumers have been inconvenienced. Eastern has been forced into bankruptcy. And many families have been hurt. I know—I have talked to many of the striking workers—and I am genuinely sympathetic to the hardships suffered by them and their families.

So I can certainly understand the motivations of the bill's sponsors. They—like everybody else here in Congress—want to see a final and swift resolution of Eastern's problems.

GETTING IN THE WAY

But you know, last April the bankruptcy court appointed an examiner to look into Eastern's financial situation, including its labor problems. Let me read you a few excerpts from the court order, which describe the examiner's responsibilities:

The examiner must,

Canvas, determine and identify the issues and impediments that must be resolved to facilitate a reorganization.

The examiner must,

Inquire of the principal parties in interest in the chapter 11 case, including but not limited to, the major secured and unsecured creditors of Eastern, * * * and the employee groups and their representatives, concerning their respective positions * * * and test the resolve of the assumptions underlying each part's position.

And the examiner must

Mediate any differences in respect of the positions of the various parties * * * and attempt to achieve a consensus among the parties so that a consensual plan of reorganization may be proposed, confirmed and consummated. * * *

So, you can see, the so-called blue ribbon commission is really unnecessary. It would duplicate the work of the court-appointed examiner. Even worse, it would interfere with—obstruct—the work of the examiner, at a time when the examiner's work is crucial to reviving Eastern and at a time when the examiner's work is almost completed. I understand that the examiner expects to finish up sometime in November or December. So let us not jump the gun. Let us wait for the examiner's report.

AN IMPOSSIBLE TASK

The examiner has been conducting his investigation since last April—and I am sure that Eastern has the legal bills to prove it. The examiner also issued an interim report in May. So the examiner has been working hard for about 6 months now—and his work should be completed shortly.

But this legislation would require the Commission to report to Congress not within 6 months, not within 4 months, but within 45 days. The legislation would also require the Commission to make recommendations not only on the Eastern dispute, but on a whole series of aviation policy matters—matters of great importance to the aviation industry and to the entire economy. These issues include business concentration in the airline industry, the treatment of airline employees in bankruptcy proceedings, foreign ownership of airlines, and the propriety of hiring replacement workers, and the Commission is to make these recommendations within the unbelievably short period of 45 days. Unless the commissioners can somehow forego an entire month's worth of sleep, 45 days is a completely unrealistic deadline.

QUESTIONABLE NEUTRALITY

Let's call a spade a spade. The Commission created by this amendment would not be neutral or impartial. It would be rigged in favor of one of the parties involved in the dispute. I am not an expert in calculus or geometry, but I do know simple arithmetic—and I do know that two is greater than one—that two commissioners can easily overrule the decisions of the single commissioner appointed by the Secretary of Transportation.

THE BROADER ISSUES

Now, I commend Senator MITCHELL for giving me the opportunity to review the legislation prior to this motion to proceed. Perhaps some of my specific concerns about the blue ribbon Commission could have been worked out with the distinguished majority leader.

But the real problems with the Commission are not specific ones. That is not the point. The point is that Congress has no business sticking its big nose in private labor disputes. Our whole system of collective bargaining—a system that has worked with relative success for more than 50 years—is premised on the private resolution of disputes between management and labor.

I suspect that even the distinguished majority leader shares this view. Last year, when discussing a particularly difficult labor situation in Maine—and discussing it well, I might add—he stated on this floor that:

It is my position that political intervention in labor disputes is inappropriate—serving only to undermine the collective bargaining process. Nothing in my statements should be construed in any way as a desire for congressional intervention in any particular dispute. I will not do so. I do not encourage any other Member of Congress to do so.

The distinguished majority leader was right on target last year, and his words still ring true today. Political intervention in labor disputes is inappropriate. Congressional intervention in labor disputes is inappropriate, and the blue ribbon panel that would be created by this legislation is inappropriate.

LETTER FROM SECRETARY SKINNER

Earlier this week, I received a thoughtful letter from Samuel Skinner, Secretary of Transportation. The letter points out that a blue ribbon Commission is totally unnecessary—and that the future of Eastern Airlines is now properly and conclusively in the hands of the bankruptcy court.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, DC, September 25, 1989.

Hon. ROBERT J. DOLE,
The Republican Leader,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. REPUBLICAN LEADER: I understand the Senate may consider a substitute for H.R. 1231, the bill passed by the House of Representatives in March to force the President to empanel an Emergency Board with respect to labor disputes at Eastern Airlines.

Now that Eastern is within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, a recommended settlement originated by a Congressionally mandated commission is entirely inappropriate. Preservation of competitive airlines, including Eastern Airlines, is important for many reasons, and the enactment of this bill can only hinder the work of the bankruptcy court.

The substitute suffers from significant flaws. It would establish a three-member commission to investigate and make recommendations regarding the three pending labor disputes at Eastern Airlines, although the disputes involving the pilots and the flight attendants have not even reached impasse. One member would be appointed by the President Pro Tempore of the Senate, one by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and one by the Transportation Secretary. While the National Mediation Board expended over 500 days of sustained effort in an unsuccessful attempt to resolve the single dispute that had reached impasse, these three new appointees would be charged with recommending settlements for all three in a fraction of the time—45 days. The recommendations could off false hope to workers, complicate any effort to settle the many thorny issues outstanding at Eastern, and doom the examiner's efforts at conciliation.

Though producing three labor settlements alone would appear infeasible, the same three members would also be directed to make recommendations on wide-ranging aviation policy matters of the utmost significance for the industry and the economy as a whole—including airline competitiveness in light of mergers, acquisitions, and bankruptcies; the treatment of airline employees in bankruptcies; foreign ownership of air carriers; and the effects on air safety of hiring replacement workers during a strike.

These issues are being actively addressed by hundreds of experts in these fields, both in and outside government, through hearings and analysis, and the record is as yet far from conclusive on any of these matters. Nevertheless, the Senate substitute provision would charge three individuals with making policy recommendations on these issues of broad policy, again all within 45 days. This statutory mandate is unrealistic at best. It is unlikely that I could locate a responsible individual who would be willing to accept such an unreasonable assignment. Also, the language creating the commission may well pose significant constitutional concerns under the doctrine of separation of powers.

The examiner appointed by the bankruptcy judge has been evaluating every aspect of the labor situation at Eastern. The Federal Aviation Administration is exercising detailed oversight of Eastern's current maintenance and other safety practices. Exhaustive analyses of the issues at Eastern, including that by the National Mediation Board and by the Department of Transportation pursuant to Section 401 of the Federal Aviation Act (Eastern Airlines' continuing fitness—May 1988), have been and are available to all parties.

Much as we would like to offer at this point, as we have consistently in the past, the good offices of the Executive Branch to bring about the best outcome for Eastern and its employees, and as much as Congress might wish to accomplish the same, the future of Eastern Airlines is now properly and conclusively in the hands of the bankruptcy court. The Legislative and Executive Branches of government do not have an appropriate role at this point other than assuring aviation safety at Eastern, ensuring compliance with all applicable laws, and participating in the normal fashion in the legal proceedings. I therefore urge the Senate to take no further action on H.R. 1231 or a substitute, and I would recommend that the President veto such a measure.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection to the transmittal of this report to the Congress, and that enactment of the bill or the substitute would not be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

SAMUEL K. SKINNER,
Secretary of Transportation.

(The remarks of Mr. DOLE pertaining to the introduction of Senate Joint Resolution 212 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions")

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHICAGO TAP WINS "DESIGNER" WATER TASTE TEST

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, New Yorkers, who have over the years earned and maintained a reputation for trend-setting and for their epicurean tastes, have set a new standard of excellence for designer waters. That new standard is good old Chicago tap water!

Yesterday's edition of the Chicago Tribune reports that talk show hostess Joan Rivers, in a show to air Friday night, held a designer water taste test in which a panel comprised entirely of New Yorkers with sensitive palates unanimously proclaimed Chicago tap water to be the best.

Mr. President, this comes as no surprise to me, and now the secret is out. If I could, I would buy stock in the City of Chicago because I now expect to find Chicago tap water being offered at some of the finest dining establishments across the East.

I would like to submit the attached article from the Chicago Tribune for insertion in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WE COULD'VE TOLD 'EM

In a parody of the famous Coke/Pepsi television taste tests, talk-show host Joan Rivers decided Thursday to choose a panel of water connoisseurs from her television audience to decide which of the various "designer" waters is easiest on the palate. The panelists, all of whom said they buy their water because it tastes better, were offered a cheap bottled water from the A & P, and expensive bottle of Evian, which sells for around $2 a bottle, and plain old Chicago tap water, flown into New York to assure its freshness. All three samples were wrapped in brown paper to conceal their identities, and the panel sipped and savored. You guessed it: The A & P water was pronounced "awful," Evian got mixed reviews and the Chicago water unanimously was proclaimed the best. Baffled panelists didn't say if they would continue to buy water . . . or move to Chicago. The segment will be shown on "The Joan Rivers Show" at 10 a.m. Friday on WGN-Ch. 9.

SECTION 89 REPEAL

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today with good news for the Senate and the small businesses of America. Wednesday, the House of Representatives voted overwhelmingly in favor of outright repeal of section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code. The vote was a persuasive 390 to 36.

It is my understanding that our own Senate Finance Committee has added a repeal provision to the Reconciliation Bill.

Mr. President, this is truly a breathtaking development. When I first brought this issue to the attention of my colleagues last April, few among us were optimistic; but here we are today, poised on the brink of a great victory for the small businesses of this Nation.

How did we shape this remarkable consensus? What is so bad about section 89, making its repeal essential to the health of our small business sector?

The bottom line is, section 89 is a bad deal for America. To comply with this provision, businesses would have to spend $4 billion each year—and this $4 billion in expenses would generate only $150 million in revenue. What a senseless waste.

And that is not all; in the long run, we would actually lose money. Increased compliance costs reduce GNP, and a reduced HNP reduces Federal revenues. Section 89 would cause an estimated net loss to the Federal Government of $800 million each year. And that is before you add on the cost of the extra IRS bureaucrats necessary to administer section 89.

Mr. President, every Member of this body wants to enact truly workable non-discrimination rules. But we want other things as well. We want the small businesses of America to be able to continue to expand their health insurance coverage. We want small businesses to be free of heavy-handed regulations, free to do what they are supposed to do—work hard, create jobs, help communities grow, and offer employee benefits. We don't believe the U.S. Government should support the taxation of employee benefits. We want a non-discrimination policy which allows all of these noble goals to be accomplished.

It is these desires, these great goals, that made our push for repeal so successful.

I would like to commend the efforts of all those who fought so hard for repeal. Senator LOTT, who first introduced repeal legislation. Senator SYMMS, who introduced a bill to delay section 89. And Senators BOSCHWITZ, DOMENICI, and DECONCINI, who have each played a key role along the way.

I would also like to commend the National Federation of Independent Business [NFIB], the chamber of commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, and all the other members of the Repeal Coalition.

Finally, I would like to commend the Senate Finance Committee for its open-minded attitude on the issue. Members and staff on the Committee have worked long and hard to try and devise a workable set of non-discrimination rules. But it just cannot be done. Realizing this, the committee, I am told, has decided to embrace outright repeal. This is a wise move, and a decision which will benefit this country for many years to come. I look forward to the swift passage of a budget reconciliation bill which provides for the complete repeal of section 89.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today is the 1,658th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

Once again, I ask that we continue to keep Terry Anderson and all of the hostages in our thoughts, until the day that they are returned to their homes and families.

CHARLES HINTON RUSSELL: A LEGACY FOR NEVADA

Mr. REID. Mr. President, a great public servant who contributed so much to the State of Nevada died earlier this month. Charles Russell left a lasting legacy to the people of Nevada. He began representing their interests in 1934 when he was elected to the State assembly, representing White Pine County. From there, he moved on to the State senate. His political career continued to progress as he was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1947. After serving in the 80th Congress, he returned to Nevada and was elected Governor, serving from 1951 to 1958.

The distinguished record of public service demonstrates a dedication that few can ever measure up to. Charles Russell was indeed an extraordinary man who contributed his creativity, vision, and hard work into making Nevada a better place. He helped pave the way for Nevada to transition from a small rural State with only 200,000 to a sophisticated, ever-growing State with a population that recently passed the 1 million mark.

The accomplishment of this great man, and the tremendously positive impact he had on those whose lives he touched, is perhaps best expressed through the words of my dear friend and former Governor of Nevada, Mike O'Callaghan. It is his feelings that I share with you now, and that so closely reflect my own feelings of admiration and respect for Charles Russell.

We knew and loved Charlie Russell. * * * What great memories he has left for us to relish. Charlie Russell set a great example for us who had the good fortune to know him as a husband, father, grandfather or friend. Yet unknown to thousands of new and young fellow Nevadans, he is the man who brought the Silver State into modern America and provided the leadership which resulted in so many of the good things we now take for granted.

It was Gov. Charles Hinton Russell who took this state from the old patronage system and provided the protection thousands of state and other public employees take for granted today. The Personnel Act provides the foundation that has allowed Nevadans from all levels of society to work and serve their fellow citizens without fear of petty political tyrants who may wish to replace them with cronies.

Because of Governor Russell the taxpayers and the providers of goods and services for state consumption are all given a fair shake. The State Purchasing Act took the buying power of a few and placed it within the control of a system geared to protect both the provider and the buyer.

Governor Russell, a school teacher at one time, didn't forget the children of our state when he came to Carson City. Today more than 100,000 school children in Clark County alone benefit from the actions of this outstanding state leader. He called a special legislative session in 1954 which started the wheels rolling and eventually resulted in the Peabody Report that recommended the consolidation of county school systems to provide education for larger numbers of children. He then had the courage to fight for Nevada's first sales tax earmarked for education.

Charles Hinton Russell was a leader who served both his state and nation in the legislative and executive branches of government. He served with ability, dignity, humility and a fine sense of humor.

We join Nevadans the world over and give a final salute to an uncommon man who never overlooked or forgot the common man or woman who needed his help or, more important, needed a kind word to help make things easier to face the trials of everyday life.

U.S. POLICY TOWARD THE BALTIC STATES

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, the centerpiece of U.S. foreign policy throughout the postwar era has been the victory of democracy over communism. Today, after decades of strident rhetoric, massive military spending and armed conflict ostensibly in pursuit of this goal, our mission is being carried out for us—peacefully and free of charge—by the independence movement in the Baltic republics of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. Yet the administration's support for these freedom fighters, so generous and vocal when it comes to those in other parts of the globe, has been conspicuously vague and passive.

The New York Times offers a rationale for the administration's curious response in a September 10, 1989 editorial.

To face U.S. interests in these nationalist movements squarely, writes the Times, is to be of two minds. One is for independence. * * * The other is for a moderate, reform-minded Soviet Union.

Adherents to this line of reasoning warn that the Baltic push for self-determination will deal a death-blow to Gorbachev's political career and to his reform program, and, in this respect, appear to agree with Gorbachev himself, who has linked the Baltic virus of nationalism with potential anarchy and bloodshed.

The new and improved Communist Party does not object to peaceful demonstrations, Gorbachev insists, but will not tolerate "extremist rallies that provoke inter-ethnic clashes and terrorize and intimidate people of other nationalities." He reserves the right to exercise the "full force of Soviet laws" to quell the independence movement, wherever a "threat has arisen to the safety and lives of the people." The Times warns of the same threat: "Americans have to care deeply about avoiding the bloodshed sure to follow the withdrawal of Soviet military forces from many parts of the polygot Union of Soviet Socialist Republics."

In other words, we are being urged to endorse Moscow's analysis of the situation, and this analysis is a dangerously misleading one. It is based on the false assumption that the Baltic independence movement is sowing the seeds of violence and ethnic strife, and is therefore deterimental to the progress of liberalization. But opposition activists of both Baltic and Russian nationality have pointed out, and American eyewitnesses have confirmed, that there is no genuine ethnic strife in the Baltic Republics.

Many Russians—including those who coexisted harmoniously with Balts and numerous other ethnic groups during the inter-war period of Baltic independence—are staunch supporters of the democratic opposition. And while others may be grumbling about "reverse discrimination," as of yet no precedent has been established to suggest Russian-instigated bloodshed in the future.

The real danger of bloodshed lies not after the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the Baltic, but before it. Gorbachev and his colleagues in Moscow have made it abundantly clear that they do not rule out a violent crackdown to quell the independence movement. And some observers have expressed the fear that the government may fabricate a spurious incident of inter-ethnic violence in order to justify bringing in troops to protect the "safety and lives of the people."

On September 20, 23 of my Senate colleagues joined me in sending a letter to Secretary Baker, urging him to raise this concern with Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze during their meeting last weekend. In that letter, the full text of which I will ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks, we urged the Secretary to make clear to Mr. Shevardnadze that if such an incident were to occur, the U.S. Government, recognizing it as an act of provocation by Moscow, would respond with appropriate measures of condemnation.

It is clear, Mr. President, that the Baltic independence movement is not based on "national enmity," in Gorbachev's words, not on any "anti-Russian nationalism." Rather, it expresses the desire for self-rule on the part of peoples who, after forcible incorporation into the Soviet Union, have been brutally colonized for 50 years, reduced to the status of monorities and second-class citizens in their historic homelands, robbed of their language, their culture and their history, victimized by police brutality and environmental assault. They seek independence from Moscow not because they hate Russians, but because they see it as a prerequisite for physical and cultural survival. As long as Moscow retains ultimate control over the military and industrial facilities that are poisoning the air, soil, and water of the Baltic regions in critical proportions, Baltic residents see self-rule as literally a matter of life and death.

Mr. President, the Baltic peoples are angry, to be sure, but they are not violent. David Remnick, Moscow correspondent for the Washington Post, in a September 2, 1989, report from Latvia, aptly compares the Baltic movement's "use of moral pressure" to the nonviolent tactics of Gandhi and King. He quotes Dainis Ivans, president of the Popular Front of Latvia:

We have had dozens and dozens of demonstrations, some of them including hundreds of thousands, even millions, of people, and not once has there ever been any need for a military man or a soldier to keep order.

Despite Moscow's threats and Washington's silence, the Baltic people will not voluntarily abandon their struggle for self-rule. If Gorbachev's goal is genuine political reform, and not just economic resuscitation, then why shouldn't he begin by respecting the constitution of the U.S.S.R., which grants all member-republics the right to secede? If far-reaching reform is not his goal, however, then why should America defend the internal stability of the last great colonial empire of the twentieth century?

Americans, writes the Times, "have an interest in Mr. Gorbachev and his moderate course around the world," because this course may lead to "withdrawal from Afghanistan, rapprochement with China, military relaxation in Europe, perhaps an end to intervention outside the Soviet Union." These are supremely desirable ends, to be sure, but can we justify sacrificing the nations held captive within Soviet borders for the sake of those outside?

If our Government's real interest is in the spread of democracy, and not just in the opening of new markets, joint-venture opportunities and cheap labor pools for American business, then that interest would be furthered by active support of the democratic opposition, rather than by tacit support of Moscow's disinformation campaign. The real threat to liberalization in the Soviet Union lies not in the nonviolent pursuit of freedom, but in the use of military force to repress it. Today, the choice is not between Baltic independence and moderate reform, but between independence and the iron fist.

If Gorbachev really wants to put his house in order, then he would be wise to let his recalcitrant guests leave. The course of perestroika might run far smoother in a Soviet Russia unencumbered by ethnic adventurists, and invigorated by economic ties with prosperous neighbors in a neutral, demilitarized Baltic zone. With a little prodding from his American friends, Gorbachev might be more willing to consider this option.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter to which I referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, September 20, 1989.

Hon. JAMES A. BAKER III,
Secretary of State,
Department of State, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The unprecedented activism and massive popular support of the democratic opposition movements in Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania in recent months have clearly demonstrated the will of these captive nations to reclaim their usurped independence.

We therefore view the statement of Vice President Quayle on September 9th, expressing U.S. support for the Baltic independence movements, as a most timely and welcome development. His further assertion that a crackdown by Moscow would likely trigger a negative U.S. response, represents an important first step beyond our government's passive policy of non-recognition of Soviet rule in the Baltic states, to a policy of active support of these nations in their struggle for independence.

So that the Soviet leaders are mindful of U.S. policy as they consider their response to the independence movements in the Baltic states, we urge that you use the opportunity presented by your upcoming meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze to reemphasize our government's strong support for the Baltic people in their peaceful efforts to achieve freedom and self-determination.

We further ask that you raise with him a matter of particular concern to us; namely, a fear, expressed both by residents of the Baltic states and by knowledgeable U.S. government officials, of a possible violent quelling of the independence movements.

Recent statements from Moscow, condemning the Baltic opposition for fomenting "nationalist hysteria" and ethnic strife, are considered particularly ominous. According to eyewitness accounts, there is no genuine ethnic conflict in the Baltic states; rather, Moscow is making false accusations to discredit the opposition and create a pretext for military intervention. Observers identify the possibility of ethnic violence between Balts and Russians in order to justify bringing in troops to "restore order." It must be made clear to Mr. Shevardnadze that if such an incident were to occur, the United States government, recognizing it as an act of provocation, would respond with appropriate measures of condemnation.

We believe the Vice President's recent statements to the press in support of the Baltic people's struggle for independence must be reemphasized in face-to-face meetings with Soviet officials. We urge you to do so in your upcoming meeting with Mr. Shevardnadze, and to raise with him the concerns noted above.

Sincerely,

Robert C. Byrd, Alan J. Dixon, Carl Levin, Donald W. Riegle, Jr., Alfonse M. D'Amato, J. James Exon, John W. Warner, Paul Simon, Dennis DeConcini, Quentin N. Burdick, James A. McClure, Dale Bumpers, Joseph I. Lieberman, John Heinz, Frank R. Lautenberg, Larry Pressler, Robert W. Kasten, Jr., Charles E. Grassley, Richard Bryan, Rudy Boschwitz, Daniel K. Inouye, Steve Symms, Christopher J. Dodd, and Gordon J. Humphrey.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS, 1990

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in the early evening of July 26, I rose—as I now do—in opposition to this amendment. I concluded my remarks with the simple statement, "Mr. President, I will vote no." I believe I was the only Senator to do so, and with that in mind I would ask a few moments to say why I did.

I was not trying to be too solemn about the subject of support for the arts, and I cited that grand New York painter, John Sloan, who said, a half century ago in 1939, that "* * * it would be good to have a Ministry of Fine Art. Then we would know where the enemy is." That tension between government and the artist has been here with us as long as there have been governments and artists is not in question. This is nothing new.

Yet how we address it on this occasion will say something about this time—our time—and it is a useful moment to reflect on it.

I have been thinking about the descriptions heard tonight of the crucifix photograph which it happens I have not seen. We are a body with many denominations, and at least two religions. In my church, Roman Catholic, the story of the crucifixion begins with the degradation of Christ. I repeat, the degradation of Christ. His clothes are gambled away. He is given vinegar to drink. He is jeered. On top of the cross, as it states in the Bible, there is that mocking assertion in Latin, Iesus Nazarenus Rex iudaeorum, "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews." Death follows. Then, resurrection.

That is a deeply held tenet of our faith, and I can imagine many ways in which artists might choose to represent it. I do not speak to this particular representation in question, however as I have not seen it.

Tonight I asked for a Bible to confirm this thought. But as it happened I opened to the Revelations of St. John the Divine, Chapter 17; that is exactly where the book fell open. Chapter 17 of Revelations.

And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters:

Verse 2: With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

Verse 3: So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.

Verse 4: And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication.

Verse 5: And upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the Earth.

Mr. President, this too is part of our civilization. How would we respond if we learned that a painting of this scene from the Bible was banned by some Government agency?

But it is not just or primarily this thought which I address but, instead, to the wild, indiscriminate prohibitions offered by the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. The distinguished majority leader went to the heart of the issue.

Clause one speaks of "indecent" materials. What are indecent materials? Is this a society which goes about judging indecency? We do have, in fact, a court decision on obscenity, Miller. There is a definition there, broad enough. But "indecency"—the court would never think of deciding what was decent or indecent.

We go a long way back with this. In those remarks last July 26 I invoked Milton and his great defense against censorship, Areopagitica. He wrote, "As good almost kill a man as kills a good book: who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's image; but he who destroys a good book kills reason itself."

Have we not fought these matters long enough in the West to know we have come to the judgment to let the public taste prevail; let the public sense prevail?

The first great judicial decision of its kind, I believe, came in 1933 when Judge Woolsey in the southern district of New York decided a censorship case under the Smoot-Hawley Tariff. Senator Smoot was a man very opposed to dirty thoughts. I can remember suddenly lines from Ogden Nash's poem of that period, Invocation.

Senator Smooth (Republican, Ut.)
Is planning a ban on smut.
Oh root-ti-toot for Smoot of Ut.
And his reverent occiput.

Under the Smoot-Hawley Tariff, James Joyce's Ulysses was banned from this country. Ulysses is taught in high schools today. If there is a high school in the land which does not teach it they would not wish it known. It is, of course, an extraordinary work. Woolsey said so in 1933, and continued:

The words which are criticized as dirty are old Saxon words known to almost all men and, I venture, to many women, and are such words as would be naturally and habitually used, I believe, by the types of folk whose life, physical and mental, Joyce is seeking to describe. In respect of the current emergence of the theme of sex in the minds of his characters it must always be remembered that his locale was Celtic and his season spring.

Mr. President, as I read the amendment before us, the statement "his locale was Celtic and his season spring" would clearly be in violation of paragraph 3 and so we would have the question whether, if Judge Woolsey were about today would he too be in violation. I do not know. But I would hope the Senate would save itself embarrassment; save itself ridicule; save itself disparagement; and save itself disgrace by voting to table this pathetic amendment.

COLOMBIAN PRESIDENT VIRGILIO BARCO VARGAS MEETS WITH MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, yesterday, many of my colleagues and I had the honor of meeting with a courageous and committed individual—His Excellency Virgilio Barco Vargas, the President of the Republic of Colombia. All Americans commend his dedicated leadership in the war against drugs. We must join with him in pledging to redouble our efforts to ensure victory in this battle.

Immediately following the Senate's passage of the drug bill, President Barco's visit underscores the critical role of the United States in fighting the scourge of drugs. Colombia, Peru, Bolivia, and other nations threatened by the production and trafficking of drugs and a deep responsibility to stem the supply of illegal drugs; but the United States, too, shares a responsibility to stem the demand for those drugs.

Earlier today, President Barco gave an insightful address to the United Nations and I urge my colleagues to study his important recommendations.

The United States can and must do more on many fronts—to stop the demand for these drugs, to stem the supply of chemicals used in processing, to stop arming the traffickers with American made assault weapons, to control money laundering, and to press for the prompt ratification of the Vienna Convention on narcotics trafficking. As President Barco has rightly noted, a new era is upon us. This is a war that we can only win together.

I urge my colleagues to read President Barco's important comments and ask unanimous consent that they may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the comments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY HIS EXCELLENCY VIRGILIO BARCO VARGAS, PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF COLOMBIA BEFORE THE UNITED NATIONS, SEPTEMBER 29, 1989

Mr. President, on behalf of the people and Government of Colombia, please accept my congratulations and good wishes on your election as President of this General Assembly. I am sure that you will preside with distinction over the complex affairs of this body that gathers the nations of the world. Let me also add my thanks to those who have already noted the splended role played by your predecessor, his Excellency Doctor Dante Caputo. In addition, let me also pay tribute to the efforts toward achieving world peace of the Secretary General, Javier Perez de Cuellar.

This will be the last occasion I speak to you as President of Colombia. However, I am here today not just as President of my country, but as a citizen of the world.

A GLOBAL CHALLENGE

The terrible carnage of the world's second great war gave birth to this body, in the hope that nations standing together, united, can prevent such global madness from ever happening again. Since then mankind has continued to follow the destructive path of war in conflicts across our planet. It has only been the unimaginable consequences of nuclear war that has restrained us from falling once again into a worldwide conflagration.

Yet in spite of the uneasy nuclear peace thus engendered, the world has remained at war. Conflicts generated by ideology, poverty, injustice, excessive ambitions, and now increasingly by narcotics, have scarred the peace.

The notion of national sovereignty underlies all our strategic thinking; indeed it is the basis for this United Nations. Yet now we find this newest threat, narcotics, and accompanying terrorism that pays no respect to borders. We, a community of nations, find ourselves under assault from an international criminal enterprise that respects none of our norms of sovereignty, frontiers, or laws.

To meet this new challenge we have to reach back to those core founding values of the United Nations. If we cannot act together in the face of this menace, then we will be abetting the unrestrained growth in the use of drugs and in the violence they generate.

I am certain that Colombia will finally defeat the drug traffickers. But if this effort is not accompanied by a global commitment, then no victory can be achieved.

The recent global outpouring of solidarity and support for Colombia has been a great encouragement to us in these difficult times.

A new era is upon us. A new world war is being waged by an aggressor unrestrained by the traditional rules of engagement or by the responsibilities of national sovereignty. This aggressor is an insidious, global criminal network wth enormous power and resources—a criminal enterprise which feeds on the illegal profits from the trafficking of drugs. As the Secretary General said in his report to you this year:

"Illicit use and traffic of drugs is now recognized as a social plague afflicting both developed and developing countries. Although efforts to combat this scourge have intensified in recent years, estimates suggest that the monetary value of drug trafficking has recently surpassed that of international trade in oil and is second only to the arms trade. It is a chastening observation that humanity is so deeply mired in the commerce of degradation and death."

The members of these criminal cartels were born in many nations and many of its leaders are called Colombian. But while some may have been born in my country, let me be clear—they are not Colombian in any more than name. They are international fugitives on the run. They have no home.

THE STRUGGLE IN COLOMBIA

I am here today to lay out the stark realities of this war against drug trafficking. We are on the front line of this battle. For us this is no war of words. In Colombia the casualties of our struggle have been mounting for some time. A month ago, we suffered the tragic assassination of one of our finest national leaders, Luis Carlos Galan. In many ways, his death has galvanized our nation and focused the attention of the world on this problem. But our war on drugs has been taking its toll for years. We have lost 12 Supreme Court Justices, our Attorney General and Minister of Justice. We have lost Members of Congress and Mayors, scores of journalists, thousands of soldiers and policemen and tens of thousands of Colombian citizens who were committed to the cause of democracy.

Following my announcement last month to enforce drastic measures using executive powers available under a state of siege, the narco-traffickers have continued to engage in a cowardly reign of terror. They have threatened and retaliated against innocent families, they randomly strike at our cities and have bombed institutions like our newspaper El Espectrador which dare to speak out against them. In short, in their aim to protect their illegal and criminal activities, they seek to destroy the will of our people and undermine our most precious institutions. Hear me well—they will fail. Colombia—one of the oldest democracies in Latin America—will prevail.

In these past few weeks, we have had some important victories. We are methodically breaking the back of the cartels, but not just by confiscating and destroying many tons of cocaine. Indeed, Colombian authorities capture almost eighty percent of the cocaine seized globally. But our offensive goes beyond that. The assassins of Luis Carlos Galan have already been captured. Many thousands of suspects have been apprehended and millions of dollars in property—processing plants, bank accounts, communication equipment, aircraft, boats, houses and ranches that provide the backbone and the lifestyle for this criminal operation—have been seized.

All these victories, though, will not be nearly sufficient to win this war. That is why I am here today. Only through concerted international action can we hope to defeat the scourge of narcotics. The criminal drug cartels have declared total war. This declaration of war is against the entire community of nations. Against those whose youth are being poisoned by drugs and against those who, like Colombia, see their democracy and their institutions threatened by the violence and terrorism. There are no boundaries to the narcotics conflict, there are no safehavens from narco-terror. Now, there must be no safehavens for the narco-terrorists. In this war, the time has come for the community of nations to choose sides.

Many of you, by the way, may not accept that this is a global war; you may believe that it is one of this hemisphere alone—that cocaine is a scourge only of the Americas, produced in the nations of South America and consumed by North America. This is not so, because cocaine's tentacles, even as we meet today, are reaching into Europe and the Far East. The aggressive search for new markets is no more respectful of oceans that it was of borders. Where there are customers there will be suppliers. And indeed cocaine is only one ugly manifestation of a much wider narcotics crisis. Make no mistake, this scourge touches us all.

A PLAN OF ACTION

In solidarity, as a community of nations, this should be our plan of action:

First, we simply must stop demand for these illicit narcotics. It is the insatiable demand for drugs that fuels this terrorism and which is one of the greatest threats to democracy in Latin America. Those who consume cocaine are contributing to the assassination of my people by the criminal drug cartels. No doubt somebody a few blocks from this General Assembly Hall, in one of this city's fashionable neighborhoods, taking cocaine in the civilized calm of his living room, would balk at this description. Yet as surely as if he pulled the trigger he is the slayer of those Colombian judges and policemen who have paid with their lives for trying to uphold the law.

Every tactic and every weapon in the war against narcotics pales into insignificance compared to the need to reduce demand. The illegal profits produced by drug consumption are simply too great. I am sure that in Colombia we will defeat drug traffickers. But someone, in some country, somewhere, will supply the drugs as long as the business remains so profitable. This happened in the case with marijuana. When it became too expensive for drug traffickers to operate in Colombia, because of effective law enforcement, they moved to California, Hawaii and other places. The only law the narco-terrorists do not break is the law of supply and demand.

No society, no matter how rich, can afford to have its sons and daughters poisoned by cocaine, heroin or any other deadly drug. In this regard, President Bush's National Drug Control Strategy is a first step in the right direction.

We must insist on the message that illegal drugs are neither fashionable nor harmless, whether consumed at the glittering parties of the wealthy or in the ghetto. Drug users need to understand that in this war, they are in the camp of the enemy, along with those who produce and push drugs. Let me say how much I appreciate the initiative and leadership of the Prime Minister of Great Britain in her call for an international conference for the Reduction of Demand. Mrs. Thatcher has honored me with her invitation, which I have accepted, to address the conference next April.

Second, our efforts to reduce the supply of refined cocaine also depend on international cooperation in stopping the illegal trade in chemicals which are essential to the processing of this drug. Generally, much attention is given to the production and processing of drugs. For example, to countries like Peru and Bolivia where coca leaf is grown. Unfortunatley, in contrast, little attention is given to controlling the supply of chemicals which are used to process cocaine and which come mainly from North America and Europe. None of these are manufactured in Colombia—all of them are smuggled into our country. Tightening controls on the manufacture and sale of these chemicals, as well as strengthening sanctions against their illegal shipment, must be one of our highest priorities. It takes more than coca leaf to produce cocaine. Without the chemicals there would be no narcotic. Let us press on the suppliers of these chemicals as firmly as we do on the poor peasant growers of coca leaf.

Third, the weapons used by the cartels to intimidate, maim and kill my people do not come from Colombia. They are found in international arms market where even the most sophisticated weapons are easily and legally bought. Make no mistake, those who sell arms to the narco-terrorists are even more guilty than the addicts whose demand for drugs fuels violence. Last year Colombia presented a draft resolution calling for restrictions in arms sales, but unfortunately, consensus could not be found at the United Nations. We can no longer wait while this deadly trade continues. It is essential to adopt special measures to reduce and control arms sales to drug traffickers and terrorists. I call on all of the nations of the world to stop this madness and stop it now.

My Government also views with extreme seriousness the activities of foreign mercenaries in training and assisting narco-terrorists in Colombia. The international community must strengthen its condemnation of the murderous association of mercenaries with terrorists and drug traffickers. My Administration has not only condemned the presence of foreign mercenaries in our territory, it has also criminalized their activities and ordered their capture. These developments in Colombia make an urgent and indisputable case for this Assembly to approve the Convention outlawing these activities.

Fourth, international cooperation is an essential element in efforts to halt money-laundering. The drug cartels depend on the international banking system for the transfer of funds. A significant part of the criminal profits are invested in the industrialized nations—in bank accounts and bonds, in properties and in legal businesses. Somehow our sense of justice is warped when a poor farmer who feeds his family by growing coca is seen as the greater villain than the wealthy international banker who illegally transfers millions of dollars of drug money that finances terrorist actions against innocent people. If the international banking system cooperates in cracking down, we can put the cartel out of business.

Fifth, each of us must press for the prompt ratification of the Vienna Convention on narcotics trafficking. Painstakingly negotiated, this Convention includes specific actions on a wide variety of fronts, from penalties for consumption to seizure of ships on the high seas and confiscation of properties. Upon my return to Colombia, I will introduce it to the Colombian Congress for consideration. To be effective, it must be ratified by the community of nations.

In addition, I recommend to this Assembly two other multilateral initiatives: The first is to call a special session of this General Assembly addressed to all aspects of the global drug problem—consumption and production—which would consider urgent actions including those I am suggesting today. The other step, and perhaps the most important way to make concrete progress, is to establish an international working group at ministerial level, which would meet periodically to coordinate and refine specific anti-narcotics actions and to evaluate progress.

Sixth, central to the support for political stability and the maintenance of Colombia's democratic institutions is the strength of its economy. This is why international cooperation to maintain a strong and stable economy is so vital. In spite of the enormous stabilizing power of this international criminal organization, Colombia has been able to remain firm in its will to fight against drug trafficking.

It is critical to note that our economy is not dependent on the income of this illegal drug trade. In Colombia their dirty money is concentrated in speculative real estate activity and in money laundering. Its contribution to the growth of our economy is marginal. Colombia is not a narco-economy.

Three years ago, I addressed this assembly on the urgent need to fight absolute poverty. Since then, my government has embarked on an ambitious program of social change aimed at transforming the living conditions in regions traditionally excluded from development. The result can already be seen.

In spite of the massive resources that the drug war requires, we will not relent in our pursuit of social change and economic progress. To do this, Colombia requires international and financial cooperation. But even more important is the adoption of commercial and trade measures which allow our economy greater access to markets in the industrialized countries and fair prices for our exports.

THE INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT

The prime example is coffee, the traditional and principal source of income for Colombian farmers. The International Coffee Agreement has recently collapsed with the result that Colombia will lose more than $400 million this year in income. Sixty-one developing countries stand to lose a total of $5 billion in income next year.

We need the help of the United States and other countries to get the Coffee Agreement signed again without delay. We cannot afford to talk idealistically of crop substitution while sabotaging Colombian farmers' main cash crop and the country's largest export. It is encouraging to note that President Bush recently expressed his willingness to cooperate in finding solutions to the problems that led to the rupture of the Coffee Agreement. We expect that all other countries involved understand the seriousness of the situation and the need to revive one of the most successful examples of international economic cooperation.

The weakening of the commodities' market only aggravates the debt crisis. Foreign debt is a heavy burden for Latin America and is hindering economic growth. What is even more important, is that it is worsening the conditions of poverty for millions of Latin Americans. We have to work together to find realistic and effective solutions to this problem.

THE "ECODEBT" OF THE INDUSTRIALIZED NATIONS

There is yet another—and related—struggle which has drawn the attention of the world and which must be one of our highest priorities in the decade of the 1990's. It is, of course, the destruction of our natural resources.

As I said recently in Manaos, in the meeting of the member countries of the Amazon Cooperation Treaty, the industrialized countries have an ecological debt to humanity. In less than two centuries, not only have most of the native forests of Europe and North America been razed, but industrial production has brought pollution, acid rain and destruction to the ozone layer. This is an ecological debt to future generations of all the countries of the world who will have to live with the consequences of the mindless way in which the developed countries have handled their natural resources.

The way in which richer nations can pay this debt is by directly contributing to third world alternatives which preserve the environment, especially the rain forests. These issues should be dealt with at the highest level of all governments and of the United Nations. My Administration has already set aside more than 20 million hectares of rain forest and Indian reserves in the Amazon region, an area larger than that of many European countries. Let us pledge to seek sane development policies which recognize the value of the our most precious resources. Let us pledge to retire this debt now for future generations.

A NEW LINK BETWEEN THE PACIFIC AND THE ATLANTIC

If the narcotic problem were not a priority at this moment I would have spoken to you today about another war: the struggle for the developing countries to eliminate poverty and social injustice. We should not lose sight of these fundamental goals. I would also have spoken about the many important development projects we are promoting, the most important of which for Colombia and for the international community is the proposal to build a land bridge to link the Pacific and Atlantic oceans through Colombian territory. The railroads, highways and pipelines to be built will provide vital new links to global shipping.

AN HISTORIC CHALLENGE

Mr. President, this is indeed an historic moment. Again, we are at war and future generations will judge our actions today. In this war on drugs, there have been many heroes, of many nationalities, willing to give their lives. Many are well-known, even more are unknown. Luis Carlos Galan died because he dared to speak out. Guillermo Cano, the editor of El Espectador was gunned down because he would not be silenced. The thousands of soldiers and Colombian citizens who fell, died because of their commitment to this struggle.

These brave men and women have not died in vain. The entire community of nations must build on their sacrifice to defeat the curse of drugs.

The record of human history is strewn with the wreck of failed civilizations. We now face a new and global threat. We must act now before it is too late. If we confront the narcotics menace with boldness and determination we can win. With international commitment and cooperation, we can make this plague of the 20th century obsolete. It is my cherished hope that the school children of the 21st century will know about drugs and about terrorism only from their history books—the great plagues that passed.

We should be under no illusions about the burdens that lie ahead. Victory will take time. Winston Churchill might have been describing the road before us today when he told the House of Commons in 1940: "Death and sorrow will be the companions of our journey; hardships our garment; constancy and valor our only shield. We must be united, we must be undaunted * * *."

Let us declare today that, together, the last decade of this century will be used to bury the international scourge of drugs. Together we can and must succeed.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 63

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby submit to the Congress the Annual Report of the Railroad Retirement Board for Fiscal Year 1988, pursuant to the provisions of section 7(b)(6) of the Railroad Retirement Act, enacted October 16, 1974, and section 12(1) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, enacted June 25, 1938.

Over 900,000 railroad retirees, their families, and 300,000 railroad employees rely on the railroad retirement system for social security equivalent benefits, rail industry pensions, and unemployment, disability, and sickness insurance benefits. These beneficiaries depend on the solvency and financial integrity of the railroad retirement trust funds to receive their benefits.

Recent actuarial projections included in the annual report indicate that, barring any large unanticipated declines in rail employment, the railroad retirement system will not experience short-term cash-flow problems. Board actuaries estimate that, based on Employee Retirement Income Security Act standards, the system has a $32 billion unfunded liability.

The long-term solvency of the railroad retirement system remains highly volatile. Refinancing legislation enacted in 1946, 1951, 1974, 1981, 1983, and 1987 serves as a reminder of this volatility. More recently, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance and Retirement Improvement Act of 1988 was enacted to ensure repayment of the unemployment insurance debt to the rail industry pension fund.

The Congress sought advice and created the Commission on Railroad Retirement Reform to examine issues relating to the long-term financing of the railroad retirement system. The Congress directed the advisory Commission to consider a range of financing alternatives that do not include general fund subsidies. Yet, as part of their fiscal year 1990 reconciliation bill, the Congress is once again considering extending general fund subsidies to the rail industry pension fund. Since 1983, over $1.2 billion in subsidies, in the form of diverted income taxes on rail industry pensions, have been given to the pension fund.

Income tax on all other private pensions goes to the general fund. Under current law, this general fund subsidy provision will expire at the end of fiscal year 1989. Extending general fund subsidies establishes an undesirable precedent. I urge the Commission, in accordance with the congressional directive, not to recommend general fund subsidies in any form. In the long run, railroad retirees and employees will be best served by a financially stable system that relies soley on rail sector funding.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 29, 1989.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BINGAMAN:

S. 1700. A bill to amend the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act, as amended, to authorize appropriations to carry out the provisions of the act for fiscal years 1990 through 1994; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

DEEP SEABED HARD MINERAL RESOURCES ACT AUTHORIZATION

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to reauthorize the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act [DSHMRA]. This bill reauthorizes the DSHMRA for 5 years at $1.525 million per year. The purpose of DSHMRA is to regulate the exploration for and commercial recovery of manganese nodules in international waters by U.S. citizens.

Manganese nodules are fist-sized, potato-shaped concretions containing manganese, nickel, copper, and cobalt. The United States is dependent on foreign sources of supply for these strategic and critical minerals, with the exception of copper. While deep seabed mining of the nodules is not currently economically feasible, it is in the U.S. national interest to encourage development of potential alternative sources of supply for these important minerals in an environmentally sound manner.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] administers this program and is responsible for developing and administering a comprehensive licensing and regulatory regime governing the exploration for and commercial recovery of these minerals. NOAA also is responsible, in cooperation with the Department of State and other Federal agencies, for designating as reciprocating states other nations that recognize U.S. licenses and have compatible regulatory programs. NOAA's continuing seabed mining program includes monitoring activities under existing exploration licenses, including processing license amendments, and supporting studies and conducting consultations to aid in future environmental and other regulatory decisions relating to commercial recovery activities.

In 1984, NOAA issued 10-year exploration licenses to four U.S. deep seabed mining consortia. The licensees are authorized, pursuant to DSHMRA, to conduct exploration activities in their respective areas in an east-west belt in the Pacific Ocean southwest of Hawaii. Due to depressed worldwide mineral prices, the mining consortia are primarily engaged in the refinement of past engineering work and data analysis. No consortia is expected to apply for a commercial recovery permit for at least 5 years.

The legislation authorizes appropriations for 5 additional years at nearly the same level as the previous 5 years. I believe that this is a worthwhile program that deserves reauthorization.

S. 1701. A bill to implement the steel trade liberalization program; to the Committee on Finance.

STEEL TRADE LIBERALIZATION PROGRAM IMPLEMENTATION ACT

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, today I am joined by Senators HEINZ, ROCKEFELLER, DOLE, MOYNIHAN, CHAFEE, and DANFORTH to introduce the Steel Liberalization Program Implementation Act. This legislation implements the President's program, announced July 25, to extend the steel voluntary restraint arrangements [VRA's] an additional 2½ years.

The language of the bill is identical to that which recently passed the House Ways and Means Committee without controversy.

The future of the steel VRA program has been a divisive and contentious issue over the past year. Yet, looking at the list of cosponsors for this bill, one sees the noble result of reason and compromise. Senators with diametrically opposed views on the steel VRA issue have joined to support this measure.

This bill also has support from U.S. steel manufacturers—including the American Institute of Iron and Steel—and U.S. steel consuming industries, including the Coalition of American Steel Using Manufacturers.

The bill enjoys this broad support because it implements a realistic and workable steel policy. The President's decision was a fair compromise. It gives our steel industry more time to adapt, invest, and become more efficient, while encouraging our trading partners to end their trade distorting practices in steel. It also gives our steel consuming industries a welcome light at the end of the tunnel.

The enforcement authority for the current VRA's expires on September 30, 1989. Therefore, the cosponsors, recognizing that time is of the essence, have agreed to oppose all amendments to the legislation.

The list of cosponsors demonstrates that implementation of the President's decision truly is noncontroversial. If the Senators will agree to hold back amendments, this will enable us to put in place as quickly as possible a new and commendable steel policy.●

S. 1702. A bill to amend chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code, regarding penalties involving firearms; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MANDATORY PRISON SENTENCE FOR ARMED DRUG TRAFFICKERS AND VIOLENT CRIMINALS ACT

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Mandatory Prison Sentences for Armed Drug Traffickers Act to assure that drug traffickers and other violent criminals receive appropriately harsh penalties. This legislation will not only remove dangerous criminals from our communities; it will also send out a powerful message: society will not tolerate violent drug crimes.

Americans have identified the violent crime associated with drugs as the No. 1 problem facing our Nation. Every day our headlines tell us yet another story about the violence that the drug trade causes. Our law enforcement agencies report that each day they are on the front line fighting violent drug gangs who are equipped with machine guns, sawed-off shotguns, sawed-off rifles, grenades, firebombs, and other deadly weapons.

Current law provides some enhanced punishment for drug traffickers and violent criminals who use or carry firearms including a 30-year mandatory minimum sentence for those who use a machine gun or silencer in connection with a drug offense. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, however, has indicated to me that legislation which provides even stronger penalties to be used against violent drug gangs with their modern arsenals would be most valuable in fighting the drug war.

The bill that I am introducing today will respond to the needs of law enforcement agencies by extending the enhanced penalties so that they cover not only machine guns and silencers, but also the other deadly weapons being used by violent drug gangs. It imposes a 10-year mandatory prison sentence on those who use sawed-off shotguns or sawed-off rifles in connection with a drug trafficking offense, and a 30-year penalty for those using destructive devices.

Looking at the daily headlines from Colombia, we can see that it is crucial for us to be prepared to prevent violence from following extradited drug kingpins to our country. We must stem the tide of armed drug trafficking. Congress must send a stern message: The kind of lawlessness we see today in Colombia will never be tolerated in this country. When it erupts, the penalties will be swift and severe.

Not only will this bill serve as a powerful tool for Federal law enforcement, but it will also help the States in their struggle against drugs by allowing the Federal Government to reach the worst offenders apprehended by State and local officers. If the underlying violent or drug trafficking crime is one that is prosecutable under Federal law, the offender will face a mandatory prison sentence in the Federal system. State and local prisons are sorely overcrowded. This bill lessens that burden by permitting the use of Federal courts and prisons for some of the worst cases.

Mandatory prison sentences for drug traffickers with machineguns or silencers have proved valuable. While in terms of completed trials this is a relatively new law, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms reports that through August 25 of this year, 326 individuals have been sentenced under this statute and have received a cumulative 1,815 years of mandatory prison time. The Bureau indicates that from two to three times this number of violators are pending trial at this time. Moreover, ATF has found that this statute has helped to crack the criminal codes of silence and fear. Faced with certain prison terms, suspects are willing to cooperate with law enforcement. Police chiefs and sheriffs from across Illinois confirm to me that suspects are willing to exchange valuable information to bring other drug criminals to trial when they face stiff, mandatory sentences like these.

This bill will ensure that stiff prison sentences are imposed not only on drug traffickers who carry machineguns, but are also imposed on those that use any of the drug gangs' other weapons of choice. This bill is an insurance policy for public safety. It says if you are convicted of using these weapons while trafficking in drugs, you're going to pay dearly for it. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort by cosponsoring this important legislation, and ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 924(c)(1) of title 18, United States Code, is amended in the first sentence by—

(1) inserting "and if the firearm is a short-barreled rifle, or a short-barreled shotgun, to imprisonment for 10 years," after "sentenced to imprisonment for 5 years,"; and

(2) inserting "or a destructive device," after "a machinegun,".●

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ:

S. 1703. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to permit Department of Veterans Affairs medical centers to retain a portion of the amounts collected from third parties as reimbursement for the cost of health care and services furnished by such medical centers; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS HEALTH CARE

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, in 1865, President Abraham Lincoln exhorted Congress and the American people "to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan." For many years the U.S. Government has fulfilled that pledge with an array of services to our Nation's veterans.

None of those services are more important than health care. For decades, the vast veteran's health care system has served those who have worn the uniform of the U.S. military. That system is in trouble today. Recently, Veterans Affairs Secretary Derwinski called it a state of emergency.

Today the veteran's health care system is short of money, staff, and equipment. Rising medical costs and Federal budget constraints have tightened the VA's budget and restricted the medical care it can provide to America's veterans.

Each month the health care system turns away thousands of veterans or is compelled to give appointments up to 9 months in advance. Nationally the VA is short 15,000 to 20,000 nurses, therapists, and support staff, not to mention qualified and experienced doctors. The problems in the VA health care system are clear.

I rise today, Mr. President, to introduce legislation that will provide some relief from the budget crisis in the VA health system.

The 403 VA hospitals and outpatient clinics in our Nation often collect payment from third parties, such as private insurance companies, when veterans in these hospitals are covered under their own policies. Presently, the VA medical centers collect from these third parties, and send the entire payment directly to the U.S. Treasury. Not only must these medical centers provide the health care, but they also must provide the staff to collect and process all third parties claims. All of this and the VA doesn't even get to keep any of the revenue it collects.

Given the funding crisis in its health care system, every staff member and resource that the VA devotes to collecting and processing these third-party claims must be taken from direct patient care. Consequently hospitals have little incentive to vigorously pursue collections from these third-party payors.

The legislation I am introducing attempts to give an incentive to these hospitals. I propose to allow the VA medical centers to keep one-third of the money they collect from third-party insurance companies. This money would go to direct patient care for our Nation's veterans. By allowing the medical centers to keep a portion of this revenue, and thereby enhance the services they provide, they will certainly have a much greater incentive to collect it.

I am as aware as anybody of the Federal budget deficit problems that we face. Some might say that this proposal will exacerbate the deficit because only two-thirds of this revenue will be going to the Treasury, rather than 100 percent. I disagree. On the contrary, in fact, the Treasury will collect more revenue if the VA medical centers are allowed to keep one-third.

As evidence of this I submit the following figures, provided to me by the Veterans Hospital in Minneapolis. In this one VA hospital in fiscal year 1989, collections were made in 305 third-party cases. However, there were actually 1,303 additional third-party cases in which no collections were made. Had an incentive like the one proposed in this bill existed, many more of these cases would have been collected.

If 100 percent of these cases were collected, the revenue from other insurers at this one hospital would climb from approximately $1.23 million to approximately $5.27 million. After the extra administrative costs and the one-third that the medical centers would keep, the Treasury would receive approximately $3.07 million for the fiscal year from this one hospital, or nearly 150 percent more than under the current system. Add the revenue from the other 402 VA hospitals and outpatient clinics nationwide, and you have quite a boon to the Treasury. Even at less than a 100-percent collection rate, the revenue coming into the Treasury would be substantially greater than it is now.

Therefore, Mr. President, this proposal makes sense from a fiscal standpoint. But more important than that, it will provide some much needed relief to the financially strapped veterans' hospitals. We must never forget those who proudly wore our Nation's uniform and who fought to defend our national principles. They were there in our country's greatest times of need. Now we must be there in their time of need.

I ask unanimous consent that this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1703

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. RETENTION OF THIRD PARTY REIMBURSEMENTS BY DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 629(g) of title 38, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(g)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, amounts collected or recovered on behalf of the United States under this section shall be deposited into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"(2)(A) The amount equal to one-third of the total amount collected or recovered in a fiscal year as reimbursement for care and services furnished by a medical center shall be credited to the Department appropriation account for medical care and shall be available to such medical center for the provision of direct patient care. The amount so credited to such account shall remain available for obligation for that fiscal year and for two fiscal years following such fiscal year.

"(B) The amount made available to the Department for medical care under this subsection shall be in addition to amounts made available to the Department for such purposes under any other provision of law.".

S. 1706. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide grants for rural substance abuse treatment and education programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

RURAL SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT AND EDUCATION ACT

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today Senator PRYOR and I are introducing two bills which will help rural areas address important components in the war on drugs: treatment and education.

In a recent editorial, the Missoulian stated that "reducing the demand for drugs is the single most effective step the administration can take" in the war on drugs.

This view isn't shared by everyone. Funding for treatment programs tends to take a back seat to interdiction. And even when treatment programs are funded, rural areas take a back seat to their urban counterparts.

As I have said repeatedly, rural areas are not immune to the drug abuse crisis in this country.

Substance abuse, including alcoholism, has taken its toll in Montana, as it has in Arkansas, California, New York, and other places across the country. But access to treatment is not readily available in many rural areas.

Part of this problem stems from the unequal treatment rural hospitals receive from the Federal Government—a point I have stressed repeatedly on this floor and elsewhere. These hospitals are already hard-pressed to make ends meet while providing essential services. Many can't afford to add substance abuse treatment programs.

The Rural Substance Abuse Treatment Act would establish a grant program to encourage rural hospitals, community health centers, and other health organizations in rural areas to develop treatment programs for substance abuse.

At least one hospital or center in each State would receive a grant to develop or improve a substance abuse treatment program.

Access to treatment programs should not be denied just because you live out in the country.

Education is also an important aspect of our war on drugs. The second bill Senator PRYOR and I are introducing would require States to set aside at least 5 percent of the funding they receive from the Drug-Free Schools Program to be used for education in rural areas.

In addition, it would require the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration to establish a clearinghouse of Federal treatment and education programs tailored for rural areas.

Rural schools face special financial constraints because of small tax bases. They should receive adequate Federal resources to implement drug education programs, but too often they don't.

In general, we need to increase the Federal financial commitment to education. And, specifically, we must ensure that schools in rural areas receive adequate Federal resources for substance abuse education.

Mr. President, I thank my friend from Arkansas for working so diligently on this program. His earlier efforts on drug interdiction have proven he is dedicated to winning the war on drugs. I'm glad I've had the opportunity to work with him on this issue and I look forward to working with him again.●

S. 1707. A bill to amend the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 to provide substance abuse education in rural areas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

RURAL SUBSTANCE ABUSE INFORMATION CLEARINGHOUSE AND EDUCATION ACT

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, last week I introduced S. 1634, the Drug-Free Rural America Act, a bill which channels Federal resources to drug interdiction efforts by law enforcement agencies in rural communities. My bill was closely modeled after S. 1353, Senator Baucus' innovative Rural Drug Initiative Act. While local law enforcement is the critical front line in the rural drug war, it is not the only place where we must fight. We must also fight to eliminate the demand for illegal drugs in rural America, and that is why Senator BAUCUS and I are joining together today to introduce the Rural Drug Treatment Act and the Rural Drug Information Clearinghouse and Education Act. We are also pleased that Senator BIDEN, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, is cosponsoring our proposals.

To reduce rural America's demand for drugs, we must expand and improve treatment and prevention programs. Although we have much to learn about rural drug abuse, I believe the following statistics from my home State of Arkansas reflect the dramatically growing need for substance abuse treatment and education services in rural areas:

Admissions at State-funded drug treatment facilities in Arkansas more than tripled between 1981 and 1988.

Cocaine-related admissions at these facilities doubled between 1986 and 1988.

As of August 1989, the average waiting period at Arkansas treatment facilities was approximately 3 weeks.

Admissions to State-funded treatment facilities outside the Little Rock region increased 33 percent between 1985 and 1988.

These alarming statistics illustrate the dire need for increasing substance abuse treatment services and expanding prevention programs in rural America. The proposals that we are introducing today establish a three-point plan of action to address these needs:

First, our proposals create 3-year, $30 million grant program to expand substance abuse treatment services in rural communities. Similar in many respects to the Rural Health Care Transition Grant Program, the treatment grant program gives special consideration to struggling rural hospitals. We encourage financially strapped rural hospitals to take advantage of these grants as part of their ongoing efforts to diversify services. The grant program will fund as many as 100 projects, including at least one in every State.

Second, the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration will establish a special clearinghouse program that will collect information on rural substance abuse treatment issues. This centralized resource center will provide rural communities with access to a vast array of current information on programs that work and those that don't.

Finally, 5 percent of the nonformula grant funds provided to the States under the Drug-free Schools and Communities Act will be set aside for prevention programs in rural schools. This ounce of prevention for today's rural schoolchildren should result in fewer adults selling and using drugs in the future.

Rural America can no longer turn its back on the drug problem. Instead, rural America must face the challenge on all fronts and crush the demand for illegal drugs by educating our kids about the dangers of drugs and by offering treatment to those abusers who seek help. We must all join forces and fight the enemy of illegal drugs. We cannot surrender until we have reached our goal—a drug-free rural America.●

S.J. Res. 212. A joint resolution designating April 24, 1989, as "National Day of Remembrance of the 75th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide of 1915-1923"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL DAY OF REMEMBRANCE OF THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing a joint resolution—to designate April 24, 1990, as a National Day of Remembrance of the 75th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide.

During the August recess, I visited Armenia, primarily to evaluate the status of earthquake relief and reconstruction efforts. The devastation wrought by that quake is appalling in its own right; but it also serves as a vivid reminder that the quake is not the first tragedy which has fallen on the Armenian people.

During the years 1915-23, under the Ottoman Empire, a terrible series of events transpired which resulted in the death of enormous numbers of people. Some historians estimate the Armenian dead at 1.5 million persons. Several hundred thousand Turks also died.

Today, approaching 75 years after the onset of those horrible events, it is appropriate that we mark that period—with the intent that by remembering, we can help insure that such tragedies will never happen again.

It is also appropriate to remember the suffering of the Armenian people, because of the longstanding and close ties between the United States and Armenia.

That special relationship was reflected so positively in the remarkable outpouring of private American support for earthquake relief efforts. I have already spoken in the Senate about the nearly $45 million in private American aid for earthquake relief, and the extraordinary efforts of scores of private Americans working in Armenia.

The relationship was also reflected in the virtually universal expressions of respect and affection for our country and people that I heard, from every Armenian that I met with during my trip.

And finally, of course, our relationship is manifest in the nearly 1 million Americans of Armenian descent, who have made such an important contribution to our Nation and culture.

So—for those Armenian-Americans, and for all Americans—I am proud to introduce this resolution.

In doing so, too, let me stress my sincere hope that this resolution will not be misunderstood by anyone—either in its purpose, or its contents. In my view, Senate action on this resolution should not, and need not, in any way affect our strong security relationship with the Republic of Turkey; nor disrupt the close friendship between the American and Turkish people.

The events of 1915-23 occurred before the founding of the Turkish Republic. The events occurred long before the overwhelming majority of the Turkish population was even born. Today's Turkey—nation or people—bear no responsibility for what happened so many years ago.

I would also underscore my appreciation of the fact that our country also encompasses hundreds of thousands of Turkish-Americans. They may have a different view on the events of 1915-23 than I, or others, do; and they deserve to have their views reflected, and their concerns addressed—just as much as the members of the Armenian-American community, or any other American citizens.

So I hope no American will feel in any way that this resolution is injurious to them, or to their proud heritage. That is not its intent, and I have worked hard to try to insure that it will not be its effect.

The bottom line is: A million Armenian-Americans, and countless other Armenians around the world, still suffer from the events of 1915-23. They deserve to have their grievance noted; and they deserve to have the victims of those events—their ancestors—remembered.

I hope by doing that, by acting on this resolution, the result will be that all Americans can come even closer together—renewed in their determination to insure that such events as occurred during that tragic period will never reoccur.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 212

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 24, 1990, is designated as "National Day of Remembrance of the Seventy-Fifth Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide of 1915-1923", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe this date as a day of remembrance for the 1.5 million people of Armenian ancestry who were victims of the genocide perpetrated by the governments of the Ottoman empire from 1915 to 1923, prior to the establishment of the Republic of Turkey, and in their memory this date is commemorated by all Armenians and their friends throughout the world.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I am pleased and honored to join the Republican leader as the primary cosponsor of this resolution to establish a national day of remembrance for victims of the Armenian genocide.

In addition to affirming our Nation's longstanding tradition of opposing the suppression of people on the basis of their religion or ethnic background, the resolution also commemorates the tragic sacrifice endured by the Armenian community from 1915 to 1923. Historians estimate that during World War I, 1.5 million Armenians living in the Ottoman Empire were slaughtered. Furthermore, I am pleased to inform my colleagues that this effort has the full support of President Bush.

Although such a resolution cannot correct the wrongs of the past, it can send a powerful message that the U.S. Government will stand on the side of those who, like the Armenian community under the Ottoman Empire, might face the terrifying threat of mass murder as a result of their ethnicity or creed. And so this tragedy must continue to live in the memories and writings of humankind so that it does not become clouded or forgotten with the advance of history.

If the Senate adopts the genocide resolution, we would actually deserve a moment of celebration. We would have declared that these martyred millions of yesteryear—these brave men and women who were felled simply because of what they believed or the cultures into which they were born—did not die in vain. With this resolution, we could nobly keep alive the hope that agony suffered by the just may yet bring triumph.

I join Senator DOLE and a growing list of bipartisan cosponsors in encouraging my colleagues to enthusiastically support this resolution.

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator DOLE and more than 50 of our colleagues in introducing a joint resolution designating April 24, 1990, as a National Day of Remembrance for Victims of the Armenian Genocide. This commemoration will mark the 75th anniversary of the onset of these terrible atrocities.

Our resolution honors the more than 1.5 million Armenian victims of the Ottomon Empire's 8-year region of terror against Armenians in the years

1915 to 1923. In 1926, Kemal Ataturk, who was the founder of the modern Turkish state, said, in reference to the slaughter of the Armenians, that the Young Turk Party "should have been made to account for the lives of millions of our Christian subjects who were ruthlessly driven en masse from their homes and massacred."

President Bush had this to say during the 1988 Presidential campaign: "The United States must acknowledge the attempted genocide of the Armenian people in the last years of the Ottomon Empire, based on the testimony of survivors, scholars, and indeed our own representatives at the time, if we are to insure that such horrors are not repeated." He is right.

And let me add here that our resolution is not aimed at Turkey or the Turkish people in any way. The Armenian genocide predated the establishment of the current Republic of Turkey, and our resolution explicitly refers to the Ottomon Empire as the perpetrators of these crimes against humanity. I want to see strong United States-Turkish relations. We should, nevertheless, acknowledge a great historical wrong.

I commend Senator DOLE on his leadership on this resolution, and I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution.●

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, 1990

ADAMS (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 893

Mr. ADAMS (for himself, Mr. GORTON, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. WILSON, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. MURKOWSKI) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 2991) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and the related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, as follows:

At the appropriate place insert:

the marine life inhabiting the world's oceans is one of our planet's most important rsources;

there has been a major increase in the last several years in the use of long plastic driftnets as a fishery technique;

finding that the use of these driftnets is a wasteful, indiscriminate, and destructive fishing technique that results in the entanglement and death of enormous numbers of target and nontarget fish, marine mammals, seabirds, and other living marine resources, Congress passed and the President signed into law the Driftnet Impact Monitoring, Assessment, and Control Act of 1987.

pursuant to that law, the United States has just, after two years of negotiations, entered into bilateral agreements with Japan, Korea, and Taiwan to allow some monitoring and control of driftnet fleets in the North Pacific;

in that same two year period, use of the driftnet fishery technique has spread to the South Pacific Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea;

the continued use of this fishing technique could decimate entire regional fisheries, and also results in the interception of North American salmon in violation of accepted principles of international law;

the continued use of driftnets presents a worldwide ecological crisis of such complexity and magnitude that cannot be met by a continued series of bilateral monitoring agreements;

this worldwide crisis must be addressed through a multinational effort: Now, therefore it is the sense of the Senate that:

The Secretary of State is encouraged to take immediate steps to secure an international multilateral ban on the use of driftnets (as defined in Driftnet Impact Monitoring, Assessment, and Control Act of 1987 (16 U.S.C. 1822 note) on the high seas. In this effort the Secretary is encouraged to bring before the United Nations a resolution calling for a worldwide moratorium on the use of driftnets on the high seas until such time as the adverse impacts of driftnet fishing can be prevented and the conservation of the world's living resources can be ensured.

(6) The National Drug Strategy announced by the President on September 5, 1989, states that "priority consideration should be given to convening at an early date a drug summit;"

Mr. INOUYE (for Mr. DECONCINI, for himself and Mr. MCCAIN) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 2991, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . (a) The Senate finds that—

(1) officials representing eight United States airports recently met with Secretary Skinner to discuss the need for more airport gateways for the United States cities for international service;

(2) these officials believe that the United States Government must place greater emphasis in United States international aviation negotiations on maximizing the new international trade opportunities;

(3) direct nonstop air service to foreign destinations facilitates international business for our country's industries, attracts foreign investment, makes travel abroad more convenient for United States citizens and increases foreign tourism;

(4) direct international air transport is especially important to tourism and the high-tech industries on the cutting edge of our Nation's drive for international competitiveness, both of which tend to be located away from transitional air service gateways;

(5) a single nonstop air service to a previously unserved foreign point can result in economic benefits to the United States community alone of up to a quarter of a billion dollars or more in the first year, with the benefits compounding thereafter; and

(6) the time savings to United States travelers alone from such a service are greater than profits United States airlines would lose, if any, from traffic diversion.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that the United States Senate support the designation of markets previously without nonstop international air international service as new "gateways", and believes that other airlines, United States or foreign, be able to provide "gateway" service when United States airlines already serving the foreign country in question fail to do so.

MURKOWSKI AMENDMENT NO. 906

Mr. MURKOWSKI proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 2991, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

The Senate finds that in 1984, 140 Japanese Construction firms formed an association known as the "United States Military Construction Safety Technical Research Association" which engaged in widespread bidding activity on contracts funded by the United States government at the United States naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan from 1984 through 1987.

The Senate finds that in December 1988, these 140 Japanese construction companies received warnings from the Japan Fair Trade Commission for bidrigging activities at the United States Naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

The Senate finds that 70 of these construction firms were fined by the Japan Fair Trade Commission for serious bidrigging activities at the United States naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

The Senate finds that the United States Department of Defense has proposed for debarment, 8 companies, twenty corporate officials and four subsidiary firms involved in bidrigging activities at the United States Naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

The Senate finds that the aforementioned bidrigging activities have seriously undermined the procurement process at the United States naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

The Senate finds that bidrigging at the United States naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan from 1984 through 1987, contributed to increased construction costs at the facility, and hindered efforts to insure the efficient use of funds appropriated for military construction associated with United States security commitments in the Pacific.

The Senate finds that the United States Department of Justice has formally requested full compensation from the 140 firms involved in bidrigging activities at the United States Naval facility in Yokosuka, Japan.

Therefore, it is the sense of the Senate that

The Senate commends the United States Department of Defense and the United States Department of Justice for their efforts to eliminate bidrigging activities at United States military facilities in Japan.

The Senate urges the United States Department of Defense to seek debarment of all Japanese construction firms involved in bidrigging activities at United States military facilities in Japan.

The Senate urges the United States Department of Justice and the United States Department of State to work with the Japanese government to insure that the United States government receives full compensation for overpayments for construction services and goods at Yokosuka Naval base in Japan that occurred as a result of anti-competitive bidding practices that have been formally documented by the Government of Japan.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE 140TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FREE SONS OF ISRAEL

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the 140th anniversary of the oldest national Jewish fraternal benefit order in the United States is being celebrated next month. For almost a century and a half, this New York-based organization has made significant contributions to American society.

The United States and the American Jewish community has changed beyond what the intrepid new citizens who founded the Free Sons of Israel in 1849 would have imagined. They founded this organization with a remarkable faith in freedom and in their new homeland, a faith that history has vindicated in a most stunning fashion.

For 140 years the Free Sons Foundation Fund has supported senior citizen homes, convalescent centers, and summer camps for needy children. The Free Sons Scholarship Fund has helped enable generations of young Jewish Americans to attend the schools of their choice. More, the Free Sons' charitable involvement has ranged from assisting the American war effort in every major conflict since the Civil War to being among the first to contribute funds to the new Holocaust Memorial Museum in our Nation's Capital.

Mr. President, I am proud to salute this splendid organization on its 140th anniversary and to wish its members many more years of accomplishment and communal service.●

L. WILLIAM SEIDMAN

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I stand today in honor of a close personal friend, Mr. L. William Seidman, upon his receipt of the Business Leadership Award, from the Arizona State University College of Business. Mr. Seidman is the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and a former dean of the ASU College of Business. Before serving at ASU, Mr. Seidman had served as President Ford's assistant for economic affairs, and then as vice chairman of Phelps-Dodge Corporation.

The Business Leadership Award is presented annually in recognition of "broad accomplishments; to someone whose lifetime contribution is recognized as significant to the nation and whose presence presents a model for future business leaders." The recipient is chosen by the college and by the Dean's Council of 100, a group of top business executives who serve as advisors to the business college's dean. Mr. Seidman founded the group during his tenure as dean from 1982 to 1985.

In addition to the Business Leadership Award, Mr. Seidman was also honored with the formal dedication of the Seidman Institute for Business Leadership, which he also founded while dean. The institute is an umbrella organization which covers 10 business research centers located in the college. It is made up of the Arizona Real Estate Center, the Center for Advanced Purchasing Studies, the Center for Business Research, the Center for Financial System Research, COAR: A Management Technology Research Center, the Decision Systems Research Center, the Economic Outlook Center, the First Interstate Center for Services Marketing, the Hahn Center for Entrepreneurship and Innovation, and the Joan and David Lincoln Center for Ethics. This is certainly an auspicious group, except that it is located in the wrong Southwestern State.

And so to Chairman Seidman, I extend my warmest congratulations on behalf of the Senate, for a great honor and for a job well done. May his tireless service and farsighted vision be an example to us all.●

CAMERON UNIVERSITY'S SUCCESS STORY

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, people acrows the country are beginning to focus on our Nation's education and the need for improving the quality of education our children receive so they will be ready for the challenge's of the next century. This week, President Bush and the Nation's Governors are convening in Charlottesville to discuss ways for improvement. Next week, the Secretary of Education is coming to Oklahoma to participate in a forum hosted by the Oklahoma Foundation for Excellence to help local communities improve their public schools.

So there are many innovative approaches ongoing to improve education. There are also many success stories. One of those is a university in my State—Cameron University. Dr. Don Davis and Mr. Joe Carter have accomplished a great deal in improving the university for the benefit of their students and the entire community of Lawton. Joe is now leaving the university to pursue other endeavors and I want to thank him for his efforts.

Mr. President, I ask that an excellent article by my friend, Joe Carter, from the Lawton Constitution be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Lawton Constitution, Sept. 4, 1989]

DR. DON DAVIS HAS MADE CAMERON A GREAT UNIVERSITY

(By Joe Carter)

Four Years Later, Cameron University is a dramatically changed institution. The metamorphis is the brainchild of Dr. Dr Davis, strategic thinker in Southwest Oklahoma's progress. During four years working in public affairs and development, I was privileged to "ride shotgun" on the blazing stage of change.

In a capsule, Davis won: a graduate school for Cameron: coveted Section 13 funding; a new $3.2 million Health, Physical Education and Recreation Building; a $200,000 National Public Radio station; remodeled 200,000 square feet of space to help house Cameron's dramatically growing student body, and launched Cameron's first $500,000 endowed chair with the generoius contributions of the Independent Insurance Agents of Lawton Inc.

More importantly in these four years, white operating with declining budgets and precipitous cuts, Cameron University sent more than 3,000 prime graduates into the Southwest Oklahoma leadership force.

The Cameron University library, totally computerized within the past four years, is widely acclaimed under leadership of Bob Phillips. But, Davis sees that more than 6 percent of the school's budget goes to the library.

Likewise, from limited resources, Cameron somehow has won a national football crown, hosted triumphant Olympic games and fielded respectable teams in basketball, baseball, softball, volleyball and golf.

The school moved gracefully from NAIA competition to NCAA, Division II play and in football is a force on the powerful Lone Star Conference.

From an insider's perspective, watching Davis win the battles for Cameron, Lawton and Southwest Oklahoma has been a moving and unforgettable experience. I consider him a "best friend" and I believe I have been a trusted ally.

First, Don Davis is a very humorous man. In the depths of confrontation, he disarms opposition with timed wit. Davis chuckles and walks away with the prize. The "losers" are even happy.

Flanked by the united Comanche County legislative delegation, Davis' most dramatic victory was breaking an 80-year pattern and getting Cameron included in the Section 13 funding. For two weeks, we drove the daily round trip to the state Capitol as the combat raged in the Legislature and governor's office.

Sens. Roy B. Butch" Hooper and Paul Taliaferro, Speaker Pro Tempore Jim Glover, and Reps. Sid Hudson, Tom Manar and Loyd Benson had been so well briefed by Davis that the entire delegation sang a unified song: "Cameron demands Section 13 funding."

Hudson happened upon Gov. Henry Bellmon in a Capitol hall and, in a five-minute exchange, swayed the governor to the Cameron side of the Section 13 dispute. Six other universities, at that moment, effectively lost their battle. Of course, Cameron and Davis had truth and facts on their side. But those had not previously been convincing enough to change injustice. Nowadays, Cameron gets about $500,000 a year in Section 13 funds for capital improvements.

In four years, despite a lean budget, Davis has managed to find period pay raises for the staff and faculty. Having been chairman of the appropriations committee during a decade in the Oklahoma House of Representatives, Davis knows how to stretch, bend and garnish budgets.

The HPER structure—decades late—now is rising from the ground east of Shepler Center. The legislative team, with Glover in command, had found $2.4 million in state money for the sorely needed facility. In a dramatic move, engineered by Charles Graybill, the McMahon Foundation presented an $800,000 check to seal the deal. Twin ball courts, a pool, indoor track and handball courts finally will be part of the Cameron offering.

Likewise, the McMahon Foundation was ready with $50,000 to assure, construction of KCCU-FM, national public radio, now in its second month of bringing fine music to Southwest Oklahoma,

It was Ina Mae Stapp, a generous retired civil servant, who presented Cameron with carillons—the sound of brass bells chiming hourly and special music echoing across mid-city Lawton. The carillons pealed the new image of Cameron.

The most far-reaching achievement of the past months was addition of the graduate school.

With 664 graduate students admitted, the need for Southwest Oklahoma is dramatized by the utilization. Next spring, the first master's degree will be awarded.

But adding graduate education to Cameron was opposed by forces at Southwestern Oklahoma State University and other regional institutions who feared loss of long-suffering commuter students from Southwest Oklahoma.

I was alongside Davis when he convinced the McCasland Foundation of Duncan to donate $200,000 to help finance the cause.

On one early Sunday morning, Davis and I quietly invaded Regent Ed Ketchum's sprawling ranch near Velma to write letters for the regent to mail to key decision makers at the critical moment. Like other progress, the graduate school came to Southwest Oklahoma because of Davis' long hours of hard—but smart—toil.

Last Sept. 16, Citizens Bank presented Cameron University Foundation Inc. with a $500,000 check. A fund was established for graduate finance students to actually invest with real money. It is rare for students to have actual dollars to play the market.

Another landmark was June 30, when a $500,000 distinguished professorship endowment was started by Lawton's own independent insurance agents using creative giving and state matching funds.

Aulena Scearce Gibson and County Commissioner Duty Rowe have chaired Cameron University Foundation Inc. in these dramatic years.

Together with Carey Johnson, the invaluable "President's Partners" was launched with 53 members giving $1,000 each annually and some becoming lifetime partners with 10-year pledges. This provides Cameron Foundation funds to help the university take advantage of special opportunities and to give scholarships.

In all, some $2.5 million in private resources were acquired on behalf of Cameron University, largely through the auspices of Cameron University Foundation Inc. In addition, traditional and established funding resources were maintained such as the McMahon and McCasland Foundations scholarships and other endowments.

Alum Fank Melka contributed $25,000 in mutual funds that established an endowment for two $1,000 scholarships annually for "needy" students. Working with Attorney Ralph Saenz, the Wolfson Estate gave a $25,000 endowment for scholarships in military science.

Comanche County Retired Teachers started an $800 annual scholarship; an endowment was launched for Allan Zisman and Shamen Wilson scholarships. Mrs. Temple Chronister opened a $1,000 scholarship.

A valuable land gift was received along with a peppering of contributions for Black & Gold and "listerner support" for KCCU-FM.

From these monies, and innovative programs such as federal Title III Strenghening Institutions grants, a research resource has been established.

Professors and scholars at Cameron are churning out papers and books—perhaps as many as two dozen during the past four years—and three Fulbright Scholars now reside on the campus. More than half the faculty holds doctorates.

Special outreach programs have brought degree programs to Altus Air Force Base and classes to Duncan. The obligation to military personnel at Fort Sill has been met with handy classes and special in-state tuition opportunities.

The 13 advanced business seminars for midlevel managers of Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. spotlighted the excellent Cameron business school faculty and welded a stronger partnership between Cameron and industry.

During these four years, the pursuit of excellence in scholarship has remained the centerpiece and purpose of Cameron University. The credo: "Where Quality Education Triumphs!" grows richly on the 390-acre campus as students are inspired, graduates excel and resources grow.●

SANDRA L. TAYLOR

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, as you know, from time to time I bring to the attention of my colleagues a story that illustrates the achievements of my constituents. Today, I would like to insert into the RECORD an article from the Louisville Courier-Journal about a woman, Sandra L. Taylor, who has excelled in the business world.

In 1981 Mrs. Taylor and her partner, Margaret A. Wagenlander decided to open their own business. Capitalizing on the knowledge gained during their previous employment, the two women opened an office product supply company. Today Mrs. Taylor is the president of Lanlor Office Products Inc., in Newport, KY, which is projected to have sales of $2 million in 1989. It furnishes everything from pencils to executive desks to many of the leading industries in northern Kentucky. These industries include Government agencies, Proctor & Gamble, Cincinnati Bell Telephone as well as numerous small businesses. Lanlor is also the only Indian-owned business in northern Kentucky. Mrs. Taylor, who is a Blackfeet Indian, takes special pride in that distinction.

Sandra Taylor's success with Lanlor recently led the U.S. Small Business Administration to name her the Kentucky Minority Small Business Person of the Year. Mrs. Taylor has also won the Southeast regional award for minority small business, which places her in contention for the national honor. Additionally, on September 28, the Kentuckiana Minority Supplier Development Council named Sandra Taylor its Retailer of the Year. Lanlor's financial soundness, use of minority subcontractors and employees, coupled with Mrs. Taylor's community involvement have made her an ideal choice for these awards.

It is no accident that Mrs. Taylor was selected for this honor. She has earned this distinction through hard work and dedication. Mr. President, I am inserting this article into the RECORD because her outstanding achievement should serve as an inspiration to us all.

The article follows:

OFFICE SUPPLY FIRM'S SUCCESS BRINGS AWARDS AND REWARDS

[By Fran Jeffries]

Sandra Taylor admits she wasn't a very good secretary.

But when the Newport, Ky., resident decided to start a business in 1981, she capitalized on one thing secretarial work had taught her about—office products.

Now, nearly eight years later, Taylor, 43, is being showered with awards for the success of her company, Lanlor Office Products Inc.

The U.S. Small Business Administration has named Taylor the Kentucky Minority Small Business Person of the Year. She will be presented that award today at her store in Newport in Campbell County.

Taylor also has won the top Small Business Administration award for minority businesses in the nine-state Southeast region, which places her in contention for the national minority small business award. She picks up the regional honor in Washington on Oct. 4.

And the Kentuckiana Minority Supplier Development Council will name her Retailer of the Year on Thursday.

Lanlor, which furnishes offices everything from pencils to executive desks, will have sales of more than $2 million in 1989, Taylor said.

The company's catalog contains 19,000 items it supplies to such clients as Procter & Gamble; Monsanto; Cincinnati Gas and Electric Co.; Cincinnati Bell Telephone Co.; governmental agencies and a large roster of doctors' offices and mom-and-pop operations, said Taylor. In the past three years, the company has developed a niche in furniture design and office layout.

"It's a long shot from what we started with, Taylor said. "Then we didn't make enough money to pay for our child care."

Taylor, who is a Blackfeet Indian, and whose family still lives on the reservation in Browning, Mont., takes pride in being the only Indian-owned business in the area representing the Blackfeet Indian Writing Co., which supplies pens and pencils, among other items, to many companies nationally.

Taylor and Margaret A. Wagenlander, Lanlor's vice president, said the firm is doing well considering the competition that exists in the office-products field.

"But in the beginning there were long days of waiting for the phone to ring," said Wagenlander, a former tax examiner with the Internal Revenue Service.

About eight years ago the women, who are both married and whose sons played together at the time, set out to buy a business from a client of Taylor's husband, who is a certified public accountant.

That deal fell through, but because the women had done all their homework, including meeting with wholesalers, they decided to rent a small office in Bellevue for their first business venture.

"I don't think we ever really considered the fact that we were women in business. We were individuals starting a business for the same reasons that everybody starts a business," said Taylor. "We wanted a better livelihood, to be able to send our children to college."

But in the beginning the going was sometimes rough.

Without their husbands' financial support, the women weren't able to get a bank loan to buy a building because they didn't have a credit history.

Then after they bought a building to house their fledgling business, the utility company wanted a deposit before it would connect their office because their home utility bills had always been in their husbands' names.

"Marge and I declared war," said Taylor. "By the time it was all said and done, they hooked us up without a deposit."

And, at one point, a male competitor referred to them as "the dumb broads," said Wagenlander. "We've had men ask us why we weren't at home raising our children. Nine years ago that was a big blow. They dare not say that to us now."

Taylor said she thinks the sexist climate in the marketplace has changed somewhat since then. "Men just hide it better now," chimed in Wagenlander.

Rather than letting sexist attitudes hinder them, the women have used them to their advantage, Taylor said.

"Because we're women, people do expect us to be so much more talented with color and fabric choices, and such. We've assured them that they are exactly correct, that we are so much better," said Taylor.

The women say there isn't a job in the store that they haven't done.

"We've done it all, from making deliveries to unloading the trucks," said Taylor.

"When people would ask, 'Can you get it,' before they could get the sentence out, we said yes. There were times when I went to the corner drugstore and bought things for customers," Taylor added.

Sam Harris, the Small Business Administration's assistant district director for business development, met Taylor when she was starting out.

"She has really come a long way," said Harris, who was on the committee that chose Taylor for the business administration's state award. The award is based on Lanlor's financial soundness, Taylor's community involvement and her use of other minorities as subcontractors and employees.

He said this is the first time since the organization began giving the award six years ago that the state winner also has won the district award.

Taylor is an assertive person who enjoys competing, said Harris.

"She has decided she has every right to be successful, and a slim chance of failing."●

RETIREMENT OF MRS. FLORENCE CHAFFIN

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize a women who has unselfishly devoted over 30 years of her life to conscientiously serve this country. It is with regret, however, that the occasion for this commendation means that Mrs. Florence Chaffin is departing the Federal Government by retiring in October of this year.

Mrs. Chaffin has faithfully served the Bureau of Land Management in the State of Arizona for 25 years. She began working in the Division of Lands and Renewable Resources. In February 1987, Florence was promoted to the position of secretary to the Arizona State Director of BLM. To at least partially show what Florence has meant to her supervisors, coworkers, and others, I quote the following accolades which were provided to me in a letter from a member of the Arizona State office:

She is quick to come to the assistance of new staff members to help them get oriented in the Arizona State Office. She offers many suggestions to improve operations, and takes assertive action on any problem that arises. The administrative staff that worked with Mrs. Chaffin reflects the same high caliber as Mrs. Chaffin's own—a tribute to her supervisory ability. Mrs. Chaffin is liked and admired by her fellow workers because of her work ethic, sense of humor, and willingness to help others who may be overloaded with work. Her efficiency and energy have saved the Bureau considerably more than one hundred thousand dollars in salaries over the past three decades.

Mrs. Chaffin has served four Deputy State Directors and six State Directors. Her extraordinary level of performance has resulted in her receiving 11 performance awards, including the Department of Interior's prestigious Meritorious Service Award in 1987, along with numerous letters of commendation and appreciation. Unquestionably, this woman's outstanding career deserves special recognition by the Senate of the United States of America.

On the eve of her retirement, Florence should be extremely proud of her many accomplishments throughout her 30 years of devoted service. She should be equally proud of the fact that while she accomplished so much in her professional life, she also managed to raise two wonderful daughters and support essential programs at her church. I am certain that my colleagues will join me and the Bureau of Land Management in exending our sincerest appreciation to Florence for a job superbly well done, and wish her the very best as she retires with distinction from the Federal Government.●

DRUGS: THE BATTLEGROUND OF VALUES THE CLINTON HERALD DECLARES "WE HAVE HAD ENOUGH"

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise to bring to the Senate's attention a skirmish, begun in my State of Iowa, that may help lead us to victory in the war on drugs.

The idea may be small when compared to the overall steps contemplated by the national drug control strategy. But, I believe it may serve as a model for citizen involvement in the war on drugs. And, as we know, the national strategy contemplates individuals becoming involved in the drug war in their own community.

Polls indicate the American people are ready to roll up their sleeves to rid their neighborhoods of drugs. I think this is the kind of idea that helps give us a realist chance at winning the war on drugs.

The Clinton Herald of Clinton, IA, has invited its residents to fill out a coupon printed in the newspaper. The coupon is to be used by the Clinton Police Department to track down suspected drug traffickers and users, plus the location of suspected drug activity.

The individual filling out the coupon has the option of providing his or her name. No one named in a coupon will be arrested. And, no search warrants will issue unless solid evidence is uncovered.

The Clinton police chief hailed the civic mindedness of the paper for the potential leads that may be provided by the information in the coupons.

I think this is an idea that may work in many areas of the country. It fits into the strategy's plan to engage all of our resources against drugs. It relies on individuals within their own community to take back the streets. It relies on neighbors to act in partnership with cities, States, and the Federal Government to take back their communities.

This is the kind of united effort that may turn the corner against drugs.

I understand there will be those who voice their fears about grudge complaints, rumors, and the like.

The professionalism of our local law enforcement personnel will ferret out good information, from bad.

Finally, I would say that "neighborhood watch" or "crime stoppers" programs operate on a similar principle: Law enforcement cannot possibly succeed without encouraging citizens to work with their local police or county sheriff.

Therefore I commend the Clinton Herald. I hold this up as an example for the rest of the country.

I am also proud that it represents the kind of get-the-job-done spirit that is the heart of the people of Iowa.●

HUMAN VIOLATIONS BY TURKEY IN CYPRUS

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, the world today has been blessed with a number of very positive changes in the international arena. The Soviets have withdrawn almost all of their military forces from Afghanistan. Iran and Iraq have finally agreed to end their bloody border war. The Polish people have elected to their legislature members of the first opposition party of the East bloc. And South Africa has agreed to independence for Namibia.

The United States has applied the encouragement, cajoling, and pressure necessary to bring about many of these changes, and Americans justifiably boast of their country's role in bringing about democratic change in many countries.

It is incomprehensible, then, why the United States does not demand similar change from one of its close allies—Turkey. On July 20, 1974, the Republic of Turkey invaded Cyprus with approximately 40,000 troops, and occupied the land in the northern region of the island. During this invasion and the continuing occupation of Northern Cyprus, Turkey's occupying troops have been guilty of numerous human rights violations against both Greek Cypriots and Greeks. The invasion was accompanied by killings on a substantial scale, rapes, looting, and abuses of prisoners. During the invasion, Turkey illegally captured 1,614 Greek Cypriots—approximately 1,990 soldiers and 624 civilians, including 112 women—and has refused to release these hostages, or give the Cypriot Government any information about their whereabouts of their health. The armed hostilities from the invasion ceased one months after they began, yet the cease-fire has not changed the Turkish position on the missing persons—it continues to hold these people.

During the 1974 invasion, Turkey also abducted five Americans, similarly refusing to release them or any information about them to the United States Government. The United States does not allow such behavior from other countries; surely it should not tolerate such actions taken by an ally.

But there is still more to this story. As a result of the invasion, today, there are 180,000 Greek Cypriot refugees—a full 35 percent of all Greek Cypriots—who were forced out of their homes in the northern-occupied portion of the island and now live as displaced citizens south of the "Attila line" the Turks have created to mark the dividing line between the occupied territory and the rest of Cyprus. These refugees are deprived of their homes and other property and their freedom of movement within their own country. The other Greek Cypriots are deprived of their freedom of movement and right of settlement within their own country.

The Greek Cypriot refugees also had to leave behind their dreams. The northern region of the country was one of the wealthiest regions of the island. The Greek Cypriots from this region who worked, saved, and dreamed of sending their children to college became welfare recipients overnight, and most live in small settlement apartments set up by the Cypriot Government. Now, their dreams of success and a comfortable life have been replaced by shattered lives and hopes that they can find the means to meet their everyday living expenses.

Turkey attempts to justify its actions by asserting that it intervened as a guarantor power under the London-Zurich agreements of 1959-1960 in order to protect the citizenship rights of the Turkish Cypriot minority. This position is simply untenable. Instead, it seems more likely that Turkey intends to exert its own control over Northern Cyprus on a more permanent basis. Thus it wishes to completely separate this region from the rest of Cyprus in order to show that complete independence is necessary and desirable.

In 1983, the forces in the occupied areas unilaterally declared themselves independent, naming the region the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus, and nominating Mr. Rauf Denktash as its President. In reality, however, this region remains highly dependent upon Turkey both militarily and economically; Mr. Denktash is merely a puppet of the Turkish regime.

To make matters worse, Turkey has illegally sent 60,000 Turkish colonists into the areas in order to strengthen its position there, both physically and politically. Turkish colonists are immediately made citizens of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus and are allowed to vote. The Dentash regime is thus propped up substantially by illegal Turkish citizens.

It is not at all clear theat the Turkish Cypriots would choose Dentash as their leader, or that they are as strongly in favor of the policy of physical separation from Southern Cyprus as Turkey claims they are. Their voices and votes have been greatly diluted by the illegal Turkish settlers.

The Greek Cypriots and perhaps also the Turkish Cypriots are willing to live together in one unified nation. Turkey appears to be the only country benefiting from an occupied and segregated Cyrpus.

Turkey's actions in Cyprus are not only inexcusable but also clearly violate a number of international laws to which Turkey is a party.

First, Turkey's intervention in Cyprus is a violation of the United Nations Charter. The preamble to the charter states that the fundamental purpose of the United Nations is to prevent aggression and settle problems peacefully. By its invasion and continued occupation of a large part of Cyprus, Turkey has directly contravened this fundamental purpose. Further, when Cyprus became a member of the United Nations in 1960, all provisions of the London-Zurich Agreements, including the Treaty of Guarantee, which conflicted with the U.N. Charter, became null and void.

Second, Turkey has violated article 1 and the preamble to the NATO Charter in the same way as it violated the U.N. Charter; namely, by acting as an aggressor and not attempting to resolve existing problems peacefully.

Third, many legal experts believe that Turkey's occupation and intervention violate the provisions of the London-Zurich Agreement of 1959-60, in which Turkey is a guarantor power along with Britain and Greece. The Treaty of Guarantee under this agreement, however, requires that any action taken be for the purpose of restoring the status quo ante which the constitution established. With 35,000 illegal Turkish occupation troops and 60,000 illegal Turkish colonists in Northern Cyprus, obviously Turkey has other things in mind than just restoring the status quo ante.

Fourth, others contend that the presence of Turkey's 60,000 colonists violates the provisions of the Geneva Convention of 1949, which prohibits colonization by an occupying power.

Fifth, Turkey has completely ignored a series of United Nations resolutions calling for Turkey's withdrawal of its occupying forces from the area, information about the whereabouts of the missing persons, and a restoration of human rights to all Cypriots. Specifically, the United Nations Security Council in 1974 called for Turkish withdrawal from Cyprus. A year later, the United Nations called upon all member states to recognize the Republic of Cyprus as the only state on the island. Most recently, in 1983, U.N. Security Council Resolution 541 condemned Mr. Denktash's declaration of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus.

Finally, Turkey has also violated United States laws. By arming its occupation forces on Cyprus with weapons purchased with United States foreign aid, Turkey broke its bilateral agreements with the United States as well as the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, and the Foreign Military Sales Act.

It is understandable that the United States wishes to continue to maintain Turkey as a close ally. It is not justifiable, however, to allow our desire to maintain this relationship to cause us to tolerate actions by Turkey that we would not tolerate from other countries. We must also not forget that Greece, too, is a close ally of the United States and its people.

The failure of the United States to pressure Turkey to restore full human rights to the Greek Cypriots and to withdraw its occupation forces and colonists from Cyprus cannot be justified, under international or United States laws. The past 15 years has shown us that Turkey, on its own, will not resolve this issue. The United States should initiate a resolution of these transgressions of international law and U.S. laws; the time to act is now.●

RECENT REPORTS OF TORTURE IN EL SALVADOR

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, last week during consideration of the fiscal 1990 foreign aid appropriations bill, the Senate voted down a provision I sponsored which would have given Congress the option of blocking a portion of military aid to El Salvador next year if that government had not made a serious effort to negotiate an end to the war and stop abuses of human rights.

As I said before the vote, after almost $4 billion in U.S. aid and 70,000 people killed, it is long past time for the Congress to have a role in bringing this sad chapter in the history of that impoverished country to an end.

My proposal was a modest one. It did not automatically cut off aid. It commended both the government and the FMLN for beginning a process of negotiations. It was designed to send a message to both sides in El Salvador that the American people will not support unending war. We want to see progress toward a peace settlement and respect for basic human rights. We are sickened by the reports of arbitrary arrests, torture, and bombings of civilians.

Mr. President, I was disappointed that the Senate voted to increase military aid. I fear that hardliners in the Salvadoran military, who have resisted the negotiations, will interpret the vote as an endorsement of their conduct. That, however, would be a serious misreading of the Senate's actions. Although the Senate rejected any restrictions on the aid, even those who spoke in opposition to my proposal emphasized that they strongly support a negotiated settlement of the war.

During the debate on this issue there was mention of several American citizens who were among the 60 or 70 people arrested by the Salvadoran National Police in connection with a demonstration in San Salvador on September 18, 1989.

Fortunately, the Americans, one of whom is a Vermonter who was filming the demonstration, were released unharmed, although they were threatened, verbally abused, and forced to stand blindfolded for hours. Dozens of Salvadorans were detained for up to 3 days, and I am told that 17 remain in custody.

Since the release of the Americans, and I thank the United States Embassy and consular staff for their assistance in obtaining their release, one of the Americans has sent me detailed accounts of interviews with several of the Salvadorans who were detained. These accounts, excerpts of which I am inserting in the RECORD with the names of the victims omitted, include graphic descriptions of threats of death, brutal and sadistic beatings, multiple rapes, electric shock, and hanging by the thumbs.

Mr. President, the American who wrote these reports heard the screams and saw the bruises. This is only the latest in a long history of similarly outrageous conduct by the Salvadoran security forces, despite the fact that we send $1.5 million in aid to that government every single day. It should be obvious to anyone who follows events there that the police have no fear that if they commit these kinds of acts they will be brought to justice.

I intend to follow up on these reports. It is simply unacceptable that these kinds of abuses are tolerated. I would hope that President Cristiani, the chief of the national police, the Minister of Justice, and the U.S. Embassy would feel the same way.

The excerpts follow:

TESTIMONY FROM PRISONERS IN MARIONA PRISON

(September 24, 1989)

ROBERTO M.

Roberto carried the case for the video camera throughout the march. Jean A. had told the National Police that Roberto was a periodista thinking that this would help him but in the end it made things worse for him. He was interrogated continuously on where the videos go, to what countries they are sent, who is the journalist he works with. He was subjected to electric shocks, kept standing for the entire three days of his detention and put in a type of gas chamber, a small room where tear gas is allowed to enter. They also put some kind of element, powder, on his face that burned.

ALFREDO R.

Alfredo is unable to walk because of the severe beating of his foot and lower leg. The foot and leg are totally purple and swollen. Alfredo was also subjected to the gas chamber. He was taken in a car and pushed out of the car and told to run, presumably so that they could shoot him in the back. He was also forced to take a pill which he said caused a burning sensation to cover his body and then he went unconscious.

CARLOS C.

Carlos was beaten on his back and chest and one hard hit on his nose which caused a great deal of blood to pour out of his nose. He was left lying on the floor in a pool of blood from his nose until the interrogators decided to clean the floor and his face so that there would not be evidence. Hector was given an offer of money and safe exit from the country if he would collaborate. They showed him 100 colon bills and rubbed them over his face telling him all this would be his if he would work with them (the National Police). He did not directly refuse to collaborate, only said that he was part of the base and knew nothing. Eventually they said, "He's nothing," and left him alone.

JUAN L.

Juan was kept standing throughout the 3 day detention period. He was laid under a guilotine and told they they would cut off his head. He was also asked to collaborate and beaten on his chest, back and legs.

ANTONIO R.

Antonio was hit on the sides of his face "until I thought I was going crazy." He was also hit on his back, stomach, lungs. His head was forced into a toilet and held. He was put in a gas chamber for 15 minutes. His whole body was submerged in a water tank and he was put under the guilotine and threatened with having his head cut off. They also threatened to cut off his head with a machete. They threatened to rape his mother and sister and kill his whole family. He was kept standing and blindfolded for three days. They put some drugs in his food that made him weak and made his mind fuzzy. They said they would report that he had collaborated and that the FMLN would put his name on a death list. They also took away his shirt and much of the time, including after having his body submerged in water when he was in air conditioned rooms.

GUILLERMO C.

Guillermo was severely beaten on his head, face, chest and back and was kept standing throughout his detention.

MARIA T.

Maria was raped at least 2 times both vaginally and anally by members of the National Police in between interrogations.

ISABEL A.

Isabel was raped by one of her interrogators and beaten, especially one hard blow on her head.

EVA I.

Eva was raped by members of the National Police.

SARA F.

Sara was raped and assaulted by members of the National Police.

MARTIN M.

"I was captured by riot squads of the National Police on September 18 at 7 p.m. I was tortured physically and psychologically. They blindfolded me and took me to the basements in order to torture me so that I would say that I belonged to the FMLN. They said if I didn't say that they would kill my whole family.

"They tortured me for three days denying me water and food and also not allowing me to sleep even for a minute. They told me that union members don't have the right to anything.

"They told me not to tell anyone what they had done to me and if I did say that here they don't respect human rights they would come and kill me.

"Tortures that they did to me: They put the capucha (plastic or rubber bag or hood) on my head tight with someone's knee in my back, three times for a few seconds; they gave me electric shocks 5 different times; they hit me in my abdomen, they threw cold water on me and the room was air conditioned; they hung me by my thumbs for over one half hour; they stood on my back many many times; they kept me in a room with tear gas during the whole three days even when they were interrogating me."

GUSTAVO A.

"Before the international press I declare that I was tortured cruelly by the ferocious and repressive National Police who accused me of belonging to the FDR (Democratic Revolucionary Front). They tortured me with tear gas, drugs, threats and intents to rape me causing a psychological terror trying to break my spirit, threats to kill my wife and children, I suffered electric shocks in my back three times, hard blows to my head and lower forehead and back which caused a half litre of blood to pour out of my mouth and nose. This made the torturers afraid and they stopped torturing me thinking that I was going to die. They gave me immediate medical attention. I went 3 days without sleeping or eating. They kicked me and hit me with a rifle butt in my knee and now I have difficulty walking."

MERCEDES E.

"We were in a march, a protest. I was carrying a banner that said 'Freedom for Our Compan-AE6eros'. When we reached the Hispanic Bookstore they (the riot squads) came running, shooting their guns. We ran in a group towards a church where we sought refuge. We talked with the people in the church, explained the situation, they said they would leave with us. Then over a megaphone the security forces said we had 15 minutes to come out. But we knew there was no security, that they would capture us when we left. Then they began to break the windows of the church and shoot in tear gas cannisters. We were pouring water over us from a big sink. Then I ran up to the third floor so I could breathe better. I saw that there was a riot squad member below in the patio. We yelled that we were coming down with our hands up. As we left the church one soldier hit me on the head with his billy club and another hit me in my back with his gun. They pushed us up against the wall across the street, then they told us to lie down. They hit me on my bottom with a gun, then another compan-AE6ero was thrown on top of me and he was being hit. Then they dragged me out into the street by my legs, hitting my bottom and legs and feet. They felt all over my body, fondling my breasts and crotch as they searched for papers. Later we got up to get on a bus and I was hit more on my back. They made me sit with my head down and told me not to look up, to keep my eyes closed. I looked up once to see how the others were and they hit me on the head. When we arrived at the National Police compound we were blindfolded and seated in an open air space. We were asked for our documents and to which organization we belonged to. A doctor looked at where we had been hit briefly. They took my picture from all sides, and then a video where I had to say my name. Then they sat me at a round table, one man on either side of me, I was again blindfolded. They began to interrogate me, asking what union I belonged to what my name is, what my psuedonym is, if I belonged to the National Resistance (part of the FMLN). Then I had to stand for a long time while different people asked me the same questions. A man took me down to the basement, I could feel that the air was different, there was a smell of gas. They made me stand with my arms over my head for over an hour in some place like a corridor with a carpet. There was something in the air that made me sneeze. One man took me to a cubiculo with a rug and starting asking questions, unbuttoned my shirt down to the waist and was fondling my breasts as he questioned me. I said that I was a member of STITGASC and had only been coming to FENASTRAS since June, that I was Secretary of Press and Propaganda and that I didn't know about these subversive organizations that he was asking me about. Then a woman came in and said 'Look, Tatiana, your story is too infantile. You don't even believe this story. But here we're going to make you talk.' The woman left and the man was still there. He hit me on the head and said I was lying, took off my blindfold and put on a darker one. I couldn't see anything. He asked more of the same questions. Then he took me out to the corridor and I had to stand there all night, sometimes I could sit but not sleep because someone would always come by and hit me. The next day a man took me to another corridor and interrogated me for a long, long time, I would say it was all day Tuesday. I smelled marijuana and felt a little dizzy. They brought a paper for me to sign, just lifted the blindfold enough so that I could write but not so that I could read what it said. Then the man said: 'You just signed your death sentence!' Then a man took me up to a cubicle and I was alone with him. He asked me to collaborate with them, asked me more of the same questions. Then he asked me if I wanted to make love with him and I said 'What about your wife?', and he said 'I'm asking the questions here.' Then he said that if I made love with him he would let me go. He told me to pull down my pants and panties and then he entered me. I knew that if I resisted him he would only beat me more, I was alone with him. Later I was taken back to where the carpet was and spent another night standing and sitting but unable to sleep. Wednesday morning I was questioned again, same questions. In the afternoon I had to sign another paper. Wednesday night I was taken to bathe but I only washed my head and part of my body. Then the same man that raped me took me into another cubicle and said: 'You've taken a bath, you're fresh now?' He sat me on a chair in front of him. He said he knew that I hadn't collaborated, he asked me who my responsable was, he said that one of the Federation leaders had said that all the union leaders belonged to the National Resistance. I said I didn't know about that, that I was only a union member. Then he asked me if I had ever made love from behind and if I wanted to. I just shrugged. He put me over a chair, took down my pants and panties and entered me, it hurt so much, I said why don't you do it from the front I can't bear this. He just said this is what happens if you don't collaborate. When he was done he cleaned his penis on my shirt and told me not to say that this had happened to anyone. The next morning we were taken outside, our blindfolds finally taken off and our documents returned, more photos and videos and then we were put on a bus and taken to the courts where we were filmed again. In court I denied belonging to any subversive organization. I accepted belonging to FENASTRAS and STITGASC, that I had participated in a march and carried a banner, that I had made 3 banners and some bulletins for my union since June. Then I denied that I had been well-treated, told that I had been raped twice. I saw a doctor that said their were signs I had been violated through my vagina and that there were lacerations in and around my anus. I made a declaration that I was beaten and raped."●

H.R. 3072—FISCAL YEAR 1990 DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS BILL

● Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed H.R. 3072, the Defense appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990. The bill, as adopted, would provide more than $288 billion for defense activities. This amount reflects the so-called budget summit agreement reached between the Congress and the White House concerning how much will be spent on defense and domestic programs.

I believe that the Appropriations Committee has done a good job at attempting to make sure that the taxpayers get the most they can for those dollars. The bill includes a number of thoughtful reductions in R&D, procurement, and manpower accounts and uses that money to restore O&M cuts by Secretary of Defense Cheney. The committee's cuts are generally in the right direction, such as cutting civilian support personnel coincident with reductions in military manpower levels.

One of the more significant cuts is to eliminate a conventional B-52 wing. Another is to make some additional cuts in Trident II procurement because of the testing failures. It provides for the V-22 tilt rotor aircraft development, but not procurement. The bill also does not provide funding for the National Aerospace Plane.

The subcommittee cut the additional SSN-688 attack sub that Cheney cut, but the House restored. The bill also makes a number of cuts in high-tech and black-classified-programs as well as making cuts in both service and civilian manpower levels to save money, but fully funds a 3.6-percent increase for DOD service and civilian personnel. The bill, for instance, cuts the 15,000 military personnel associated with INF deployment from the Pentagon's manpower levels. These savings are used to restore funding for a large number of operation and maintenance [O&M] needs.

I am concerned, however, about the level of funding and priorities for many defense programs in the budget. At a time when we face so many domestic needs in terms of the war on drugs, education, housing, and health care, it is absolutely imperative that we recognize we cannot fund every single defense program. Without investments in our domestic economy, in our children, and in our cities, we simply will not be able to sustain the quality of life of our citizens nor ultimately the economic base needed to sustain our own defense.

On several major defense programs, such as strategic forces, the Appropriations Committee adopted the position taken by the Senate during its deliberations this summer on the Defense authorization bill which is now the subject of a House-Senate conference committee. I commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense, Senator INOUYE, and the ranking member, Senator STEVENS, for their efforts to work with the authorizing committee and the desire of Appropriations Committee to reflect the judgment of the Senate during its adoption of the authorization bill.

The fact remains, however, that we simply cannot afford to deploy every one of strategic systems in this bill: the rail mobile MX, the B-2, the Small ICBM [Midgetman], Trident, and SDI. We must have a more realistic and more focused strategic policy and not continue to fund everything. The Senate has made the situation worse by its action on the floor to increase funding for the strategic defense initiative by $600 million over the committee's recommendation—an increase I opposed.

We must also have a more realistic policy toward our overseas defense obligations. We are running substantial trade deficits with our allies and when the underlying strategic purposes and defense needs that prompted many of our overseas commitments have changed. The time has come to reassess our deployment of troops overseas and our role in the defense of allies in both Europe and the Pacific.

I am in favor of a strong defense. The bill contains funding for several new initiatives, such as $1 billion for new sealift capacity and $1.3 billion for equipment for Reserve and National Guard forces, to provide the basic nuts and bolts of defense which are all too often ignored in favor of gold-plated weapons systems. I believe these are important accomplishments.

Finally, I am pleased that the bill fully funds security support by the Armed Services for Seattle's Goodwill Games at $14.6 million. The committee has also included report language concerning the expansion of the Washington Air National Guard to include a close-air support squadron and a promising new electronic record-keeping system being developed in partnership with a Washington-based company and which is projected to result in substantial cost and manpower savings throughout the military. The bill also earmarks $11 million for the superconducting magnetic energy storage project. Hanford is one of the sites under consideration for this project which would demonstrate the use of superconducting magnets to store large amounts of energy needed for SDI. This technology also has enormous commercial and civilian applications for peak storage and transmission.●

ADMINISTRATION'S LAX RESPONSE TO PUERTO RICO'S DEVASTATION

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Democratic Task Force on Hispanic Affairs, I rise today to express my disappointment in the administration's lax response to the terrible situation that now exists on the hurricane-ravaged island of Puerto Rico. Puerto Rico is seriously lacking in the equipment, funds and emergency relief centers that are desperately needed in the wake of Hurricane Hugo. The United States has a responsibility to aid the territory of Puerto Rico, and the administration failed to live up to that responsibility.

It is my understanding that military ships carrying much-needed fresh water arrived only 2 days ago, more than a week after the disaster. The island's 3.5 million inhabitants were forced to go without water for 9 days. This delay is inexcusable. The extent of the destruction was known almost immediately; network camera crews were on the scene almost instantly. Yet it still took 9 days for the administration to mobilize the necessary resources to provide fresh water, the most essential supply in almost any emergency.

There are but 12 Federal Emergency Management Agency [FEMA] centers on the island to serve 3.5 million people. The capital city of San Juan, with a population of 1.86 million, is graced with but a single center. Surely, the number of centers does not correlate with the amount of persons who need assistance, neither for the city of San Juan nor for the entire island. Particularly when considering the potential danger to the island from hurricanes.

I am appalled that the U.S. Government would be slow to aid one of its territories in a time of great need; especially a territory which lacks the economic resources necessary to adequately deal with this catastrophe. Puerto Ricans in the United States comprise a significant percentage of this Nation's population. Now that their homeland has been leveled by Hugo, we should, at the very least, mobilize a relief effort that will help alleviate some of the most pressing concerns. Such an effort should have begun immediately after the hurricane struck, and should be in place today. However, at this late date, we still have a responsibility to help. Relief efforts are a beginning, but a long-term plan to rebuild the island is essential.

I would hope that the administration acts quickly to fulfill its responsibilities to the territory of Puerto Rico before the consequences of Hurricane Hugo become insurmountable. It is imperative that we come to the aid of the people of Puerto Rico.

Thank you.●

BETTY HUBBARD: A MOTHER FOR MINNESOTA'S DISABLED

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, Betty Hubbard has been a distinguished leader of a parent advocacy movement in Minnesota for over 40 years. In that time, she has helped achieve a comprehensive transformation of the State's care system for mentally handicapped individuals.

For four decades, Betty has been the mentor and emotional support for hundreds of parents of mentally handicapped children. She has served on countless boards, task forces and committees and has held the influential position of Executive Director of the St. Paul ARC—Association for Retarded Citizens—from 1960 to 1966.

Following that term, Betty worked as a consultant for Parent and Community Relations with the St. Paul Schools Special Education Department. Not one to limit her focus to only her home city of St. Paul, Betty was a founding member of the Minnesota Committee for the Handicapped, and has served on the Governor's Planning Council on Developmental Disabilities.

Betty began her mission in the late 1950's in a State where 5 percent of the disabled population lived in squalid State hospitals, and the other 95 percent lived in private homes, receiving few if any services from their communities.

In a paradigm of a successful grassroots campaign, Betty and other leaders struggled to unify parents who were frustrated with the system's lack of responsiveness to their demands. Upon deciding that organizing would be the most effective way to promote their cause, the parent-advocates campaigned. In the beginning, the focus was regional, but was eventually conveyed statewide through the Minnesota coalition on handicap issues. Their goal was to first inform legislators of the great need for increased services to the disabled, and then conduct the followthrough with pressure for legislation. Today, in St. Paul and Washington, lobbyists for the handicapped play a vital role in the legislative process.

By 1971, after years of tireless lobbying, Betty and other determined parents convinced their legislators to pass a law requiring equal educational opportunities for all children—preceding the Federal law by 4 years. While some would consider this a complete victory, Betty has maintained her leadership and determination on this issue since its enactment, to implement and expand this law.

As a mother unwilling to admit that her daughter was disabled, Betty Hubbard was not willing to let her daughter's potential and growth be discounted. Hence, in a time when we were all less knowledgeable and aware of the handicapped and mentally disabled, Betty reluctantly began her crusade.

Her early reservations soon vanished when she realized the tremendous needs that existed in Minnesota. I am sure it's a mission she would gladly begin all over again. Betty Hubbard has earned the distinction of "Mother of the Disabled"—for like all good parents, she is unwilling to admit that these children deserve anything less than the very best.●

DEATH OF IRVING BERLIN

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, a part of our Nation's cultural heritage died when Irving Berlin passed away last week at the age of 101. Perhaps the greatest figure in American popular music, no composer ever wrote more songs more widely known to people in this country.

Even the briefest listing of his songs reveals the singular role Irving Berlin played in developing what is today considered the repertoire of American music. "White Christmas," "This Is The Army, Mr. Jones," "Cheek to Cheek," "God Bless America," "There's No Business Like Show Business"—it is astounding to realize just how many of his songs are familiar to every citizen. His compositions are our favorite patriotic songs, holiday hymns, romantic melodies.

It is especially fitting that the man who defined American music was so quintessentially an American success story. He arrived in New York in 1893, a young child of a penniless immigrant family. He worked as a newspaper boy and as a singing waiter before he found his calling. And from this unexceptional background emerged a composer unique in American music.

Jerome Kern said, "Irving Berlin has no place in American music. He is American music." Fortunately, although Irving Berlin has died, his music will live on forever. Mr. President, the Washington Post ran a stirring tribute to Irving Berlin several days ago. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

AMERICA'S SONGWRITER AND THE MUSIC THAT MADE A CENTURY SING

(By Tom Shales)

I guess the first person I ever heard sing an Irving Berlin song was my mother. She used to wake us kids for breakfast and school by singing, "Oh How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning." I can't remember how old I was when I learned that Mom's song had words and music by Irving Berlin, a Russian-born Jew who became the most American American almost anybody could think of.

All these years later, it began to seem as if Irving Berlin, like the hundreds of songs he wrote, would live forever. Then, on Friday night in New York, he died in his sleep at the age of 101. As Berlin himself wrote decades ago—perhaps knowing it would be quoted at a time like this—"the song is ended, but the melody lingers on."

"Remember"? "Always."

Irving Berlin also wrote complex songs about simple pleasures. His songs became part of our lives, our rituals, our aspirations. They could be sung at birthdays and weddings and anniversaries and bar mitzvahs and by mothers in the morning to their waking children.

At Christmas you sang "White Christmas." At Easter you sang "Easter Parade." On the Fourth of July you sang "God Bless America." Berlin was a recluse for the last 25 years, but until then he had been uncommonly generous at making his private feelings public; he turned them into songs, and the whole world sang them back to him.

"What'll I Do, When You Are Far Away, and "I Am Blue, What'll I Do?"

Irving Berlin did not just have a place in American music, said Jerome Kern, "he is American music." Irving Berlin didn't just dream the American dream, he was the American dream—from his arrival in 1892 through his years of poverty on New York's Lower East Side, his nights as a singing waiter, his struggle for success, his spectacular and enduring achievements, his ascent to a place in folklore.

"Say It With Music" was one of his hits and something of a credo. "A pretty girl," he observed, "is like a melody." On the same topic he also wrote, "If my blues can reach your shoes and start you tapping your feet, I'm happy."

Fred Astaire danced to those songs, Bing Crosby crooned them, Ethel Merman belted them across the footlights. And everybody else sang them too. Eventually Berlin seemed to celebrate every facet of human experience, good times and bad times, turned into poetry. "Cheek to Cheek" is about the elemental act of dancing, but it begins with its head in the clouds: "Heaven, I'm in Heaven, and my heart beats so that I can hardly speak."

Mythically prolific, endlessly inventive, Irving Berlin did what great artists do; he told us things we realized we already knew, evoked feelings and longings and sentiments that had been lying there dormant just below the surface. His songs were communal and universal, and anyone could take them personally. He didn't just express himself. He expressed everybody.

Will science ever know why there are minds from which melodies and verses flow? Probably not. Irving Berlin's gift will always seem mysterious and elusive, just as his songs will forever be natural and down to earth—so basic that people assume some of them have been handed down generation-to-generation without even realizing their composer was our contemporary.

Even fellow composers, no matter how much wittier they may have been, were in awe, and Cole Porter included an accolade in one of his own clever lyrics: "You're the top, you're a Berlin ballad . . ."

They ran out of honors to shower on Irving Berlin. He had them all, and as much success and fame as anyone could stand. A tiny, elfin figure, with a squeaky little voice, he made few public appearances, though he does pop up in the World War II movie "This Is the Army." He sings the very same song my mom, and countless other moms, sang at the start of the day.

Irving Berlin conquered Broadway, Hollywood, countries, continents. Also towns, neighborhoods, homes, living rooms and parlor pianos. He set the century to music and he gave you something to sing to your sweetheart. He had the common touch but there was no one else quite like him. The best thing one could say about a song was likely to be "words and music by Irving Berlin."

Heaven, he's in Heaven. Remember? Always.●

PRESIDENT BUSH'S EDUCATION SUMMIT: WHERE'S D.C.?

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, on September 27, President Bush opened an education summit attended by Governors from 49 States, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands. I commend the President for initiating this precedent-setting meeting. His actions demonstrate a praiseworthy interest in a national education policy. Though education is often a matter handled by State and local governments, recent, disturbing national trends—illiteracy, internationally inferior math and science scores among our students, drug addiction and sales among our young people—make it clear that the United States has a vital national interest in a strong educational system.

Unfortunately, the President marred this important occasion with a serious omission in his invitation list. Though the Governors and the President used the summit to discuss a national education strategy—and though part of the proposed strategy was a program of targeted funds to District of Columbia schools—no representative from the Nation's Capital was asked to attend.

I believe this is an inexcusable omission, and as chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee—the committee with jurisdiction over the District of Columbia—it disturbs me. The D.C. Public Schools serve more than 88,000 students. The school system has had some well-publicized problems and has made some serious efforts to stem those problems—see: "5-Year Plan Unveiled for District Schools," the Washington Post, June 27, 1989 and "Jenkins Stakes Reputation on D.C. Schools' Ambitious Agenda," the Washington Post, September 7, 1989.

Furthermore, the District of Columbia has often been held up as an example of a city marred by the plague of illegal drugs. The President himself used crack confiscated in the District to illustrate his recent declaration of war on drugs.

Yet, crack itself is not the tragedy of D.C.'s drug crisis. The tragedy is the children who are faced daily with the indignity and horror of drug dependency, crime, and violence. For many of these children, the public school system is their best chance to develop into healthy, happy, productive citizens.

This administration should understand that the decision to exclude the District of Columbia from the education summit cannot be interpreted as merely an institutional decision based on the District's Governorless hierarchy. In fact, D.C. is considered a State agency by the U.S. Department of Education. Nor can there be an excuse on the basis of any political feelings that might be harbored against the District's present administration. The President himself stated that, in education matters, "too much is at stake to let partisanship get in the way of progress."

In my opinion, the decision to ignore 88,000 children in the District of Columbia is a serious, serious mistake.●

A SHELL OF A GOVERNMENT

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise to day to draw the Senate's attention to two articles which demonstrate all too well the way in which our Government has rushed to delegate its basic responsibilities to private consultants and contractors to the detriment of our system of government.

A front page headline in the June 28 New York Times announced that the "Energy Chief Says Top Aides Lack Skills to Run U.S. Bomb Complex." Secretary Watkins is faced with the enormous task of bringing under control our Nation's nuclear weapons productions facilities whose disrepair, it has been suggested, may bring us close to unilateral disarmament. The article states:

His efforts had been slowed because of an insufficient number of technically qualified people on the department's staff.

In yesterday's New York Times is an article entitled "NASA's Reliance on Contractors Is Seen as Eroding Its Capabilities." The article discusses a letter from the agency's deputy administrator James R. Thompson, Jr., to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] outlining NASA's concerns regarding the contracting out of the agency. Mr. Thompson is worried that OMB's push "to convert more and more critical functions" to contractors is taxing the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's management and supervision abilities.

Mr. President, I will ask that both articles be included after my statement in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I have been concerned for some time that the Government is relying far too heavily on private consultants and contractors to fulfill their missions. These two articles demonstrate the way agencies can be weakened by this overreliance. Two highly technical agencies, the Department of Energy and NASA, have found that they no longer have the civil service work force capable of managing the very contractors and consultants that the agencies have hired. The civil servants process contracts and hope against hope that this small core of Federal employees can ride herd on the multitudes of contractors performing the basic work of the agency.

In 1980, as part of my early investigation into the use of contractors and consultants, my staff prepared a study of the Department of Energy [DOE]. There may not be much in government that is predictable, but the findings of that study tragically foreshadowed Secretary of Energy Watkins' remarkably candid statements about the Department he inherited. In 1980, the DOE estimated that its contractor work force might be 10 times as large as its civil service work force of about 20,000. My study found that:

The Department's reliance on contractors is so extreme that if the terms of its contracts, the resume-AE1s of its contractors and their employees, and the contractor work the Department adopts as its own are to be believed, it is hard to understand what, if anything, is left for officials to do. Reliance on contractors is not limited to a portion of the Department's activities. . . . It permeates virtually all of the Department's basic activities—regulation, spending and iaternal management—at virtually all levels of the organization chart.

I have continued by examination of this issue. Earlier this year, my Federal Services Subcommittee examined the Environmental Protection Agency's extensive reliance on contractors in the planning and management of its Superfund Program. In June, we reviewed the Department of Defense's essential delegation to private contractors the critical function of monitoring the operational testing of our Nation's weapons systems. In the latter case, the DOD Office of Operational Test and Evaluation obviously agreed at least partially with this criticism, for they have apparently decided to sharply reduce its use of private defense contractors and will turn to the Institute for Defense Analysis, a federally funded research and development center, for support services.

Some have asked why I concern myself with the issue of who is doing the basic work of government. As the Energy Department and NASA situations demonstrate, it should be beyond question that our Government must retain in-house the skills and expertise necessary to comprehend and manage its own activities.

The Naval Sea Systems Command took notice of this issue after the Ill Wind investigation and a Navy inspector general report highlighted the multitude of problems which accompany overreliance on contractors and consultants. As a result, the Naval Sea Systems Command decided to bring expertise back in-house. The Navy had to wrangle with OMB about its decision but eventually prevailed.

It appears, however, that OMB is still dead set on pushing the use of private sector firms. Yesterday's New York Times article describes how NASA went to OMB and requested 2,250 additional Federal employees. OMB decided that NASA could have 1,582 additional employees but had to contract out the remaining 668 jobs. Mr. President, I just cannot understand OMB's insistence in this matter. NASA, knowing its strengths and limitations, decided it needed in-house expertise to prevent possible disasters. How can OMB have the knowledge to contradict that decision? I believe that this type of mindless adherence to a goal, without assessing its effect on the Government, is one of the reasons we have seen so many problems develop across the Government.

Mr. President, I will be continuing my work in this area and I look forward to working with the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of NASA to determine effective solutions to the problems they have identified.

I ask that the material to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

NASA'S RELIANCE ON CONTRACTORS IS SEEN AS ERODING ITS CAPABILITIES

(By Jeff Gerth)

WASHINGTON, September 27.—The space agency, long known for its technical expertise, has become so dependent on private contractors that it may be losing its ability to manage its operations, maintain safety and control costs, senior officials say.

The agency's deputy administrator, James R. Thompson, Jr., and reports by the agency's inspector general said the problems concerning contractors included false certification of components, overpricing of parts and excessive profits.

"I am most deeply concerned over the continued erosion of our civil service capability," Mr. Thompson wrote to Richard G. Darman, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, on July 21. A push by the budget office to "convert more and more critical functions" to contractors is taxing the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's management and supervision abilities, he said.

HALF OF EMPLOYEES ON CONTRACT

Contract employees account for more than half of NASA's workers.

Mr. Thompson's assessment was obtained by the New York Times under the Freedom of Information Act. The space agency at first refused to release the assessment, which was prepared by NASA officials in response to a request by Mr. Darman that each Federal agency provide a critique of its capabilities.

The Times obtained the report by appealing to higher NASA officials, who overruled the first decision and released the document.

The agency's ability to monitor contractors is likely to be discussed on Thursday when the inspector general, Bill D. Colvin, is scheduled to appear before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee. The chairman of the committee is Senator John Glenn, Democrat of Ohio, a former astronaut. The committee is also to hear from the inspectors general of the State, Energy and Defense departments. The latter two have had quality control and cost problems with outside contractors, many of whom work for more than one agency.

SENATOR EXPRESSES CONCERN

In an interview today, Senator Glenn said he had "great concern" over NASA's reliance on contractors.

"The more contracting there is the more difficult it is to monitor," he said, adding that "the auditors and the inspector general are going to be under a great deal more pressure" and are going to need the necessary "tools and resources."

After the space shuttle Challenger exploded in 1986, a Presidential commission concluded that a wide array of management problems in the NASA and at the rocket manufacturer were fundamentally responsible. But officals have said that with beefed-up safety and monitoring capability since then, missions are not imperiled. But Mr. Thompson said in his report that while the agency's management controls are "generally effective," the space agency is suffering an "erosion of our institutional capability."

BOLTS CERTIFIED FALSELY

Noting that crucial missions such as the shuttle are dependent on vendors, Mr. Thompson added, "we've been stretched to the point where it's troubling to me, given the oversight that's required." Mr. Thompson mentioned space vehicles have to rely on bolts falsely certified by contractors as well as substitution of substandard or counterfeit electronic parts, which could have been safety problems if they had not been detected.

James C. Fletcher, NASA's former administrator who stepped down soon after President Bush took office, said in an interview he was not comfortable with the notion that "you take the whole chunk of what NASA normally does and give it to contractors and take it away from civil servants."

Mr. Fletcher said he was concerned about a shortage of civil servants in program management "which is responsible for safety" and a court ruling which forced the agency to keep contract employees at arm's length, limiting the agency's ability to control their activities.

Mr. Colvin and other space agency officials have repeatedly told Congress and the White House of a number of lingering contractor problems. They include the agency's lack of employees in the areas of safety and product reliability, tens of millions of dollars in "excessive profits" by some contractors and false certifications of critical space vehicle parts. The reports do not name specific contractors because of proprietary restrictions, Mr. Colvin said.

NASA SEEKS MORE WORKERS

In spite of the reports, the budget office does not fully support NASA's request for added strength in its ranks of civil servants, even though some space agency officials say that the Bush Administration is less committed to privatization than was its predecessor.

NASA wants 2,250 additional civil servants, while the budget office has responded that it can have 1,582 and contract the remaining 668 jobs, Mr. Thompson said. Frank Hodsoll, the executive associate director of the budget office, said that the agency's request was still under review and added that "we're not going to do anything in the privatization area that jeopardizes NASA's Governmental functions."

The insistence on further contracting comes at a time when the percentage of private contract employees at NASA sites is approaching 60 percent with the remaining 40 percent composed of civil servants, according to Paul Anderson, director of institutional resources and analysis.

NASA has traditionally attracted a top-flight scientific and technical workforce. But officials said that it was becoming more difficult to attract and retain skilled workers, partly because private industry pays more.

MORE COMMERCIAL INVOLVEMENT

NASA's reliance on contractors is shown both by the composition of its workforce and by the portion of its budget going to procurement, officials said. The percentage of NASA's $11 billion budget devoted to procurement has increased to 88 percent, according to Mr. Colvin and the Administration intends to expand commercial involvement in the space program.

Many of the problems raised in Mr. Thompson's report have been raised before, both in agency reports as well as reports to Congress by the inspector general. For example, Mr. Colvin's report to Congress last spring focused on the need for "increased NASA management oversight and control of contractor activities, including prime contractors' procurement and subcontract administration." Audits by his office found that overpricing by unnamed subcontractors produced $16 million in "excessive profits," with the possibility that the same subcontractors may have overpriced by another $11 million to $17 million on other contracts. Profit rates were as high as 288 percent, the report said with naming companies.

Another area of concern in the report was false certifications on bolts used in flight vehicles. Mr. Colvin noted that two top officials of Lee Aerospace, a California company which sold substandard bolts to NASA for use in space shuttles, were found guilty last week by a Federal jury in Orlando, Fla., of misrepresenting safety tests to the government. NASA has had to pay for additional testing to insure bolts are up to standard, agency officials said.

In an interview, Mr. Colvin said he worried that for contractors, "financial gain is a strong motivation" to falsify test results. A request by Mr. Colvin for 25 additional auditors has not yet been approved by Congress or the Administration. But Mr. Thompson said he was confident there would be resources for the extra auditors.

ENERGY CHIEF SAYS TOP AIDES LACK SKILLS TO RUN U.S. BOMB COMPLEX

(By Matthew L. Wald)

Energy Secretary James D. Watkins said today that managers and supervisors in his department lacked technical skills needed to run the bomb production system and were presenting him with unreliable information on problems at the plants. Some, he said, lacked the discipline needed for safe operation of nuclear reactors.

Announcing a 10-point plan to improve operations in the department, Mr. Watkins said what he called "tiger teams" of auditors would look at two other bomb production plants for violations of environmental laws like those said to have occurred at the Rocky Flats plant near Denver. Scores of Federal agents are investigating whether the workers in Colorado secretly dumped and burned radioactive and chemical wastes.

He also said that awards to the contractors who run the plants would be based primarily on environmental performance, not production quotas. The plan includes a public hot line for people to alert the department of problems.

UNUSUALLY BLUNT LANGUAGE

In his most comprehensive comments yet on the nation's nuclear weapons industry, Mr. Watkins acknowledged, as his predecessor had, that the plants were in disrepair. But he dwelled heavily on the disarray within his department in language that was unusually blunt for a Cabinet secretary.

Alternating frustration with contrition, Mr. Watkins said, "I am certainly not proud or pleased with what I have seen over my first few months in office." Referring to a production system whose major parts are at least 25 years old, some dating from the development of the atomic bomb, Mr. Watkins said, "The chickens have finally come home to roost, and years of inattention to changing standards and demands regarding to the environment, safety and health are vividly exposed to public examination, in fact, almost daily."

Mr. Watkins, a retired admiral, said he would like to bring credibility to the department so that when it sought to open a new plant or operate an old one, the public would not feel the department was "jamming something down somebody's throat out there."

But he said his efforts had been slowed because of an insufficient number of technically qualified people on the department's staff. And he said he was involving himself in every major decision because of unreliably optimistic information he was receiving.

"When I get the briefing, I only get one side, so I have to dig in myself," Mr. Watkins said. "I don't have the data base coming to me that I need. I have omissions in the data base. So I am making decisions today on a crisis basis, and I don't like that. That's not my way of doing business."

As he spoke, an influential environmental group, the Natural Resources Defense Council, released a study showing an even grimmer picture of environmental problems in the bomb plants, with 14 of the 17 major plants found to be in violation of hazardous waste laws.

The council and 20 other environmental groups filed suit today against the Department of Energy, seeking to foster a public debate about the cleanup and rebuilding of the bomb production system, by compelling the Government to prepare an environmental impact statement.

WE ARE NOT IN COMPLIANCE

A spokesman for the department, Christina Sankey, said she could not confirm the number of plants with serious pollution problems but agreed, saying "We are not in compliance."

Mr. Watkins said he was ordering a review to see whether the department was complying with the National Environmental Policy Act, the law that calls for environmental impact statements, and that he was personally reviewing each decision on whether to order such a statement, which can entail substantial delay in a project.

But he refused to say whether he would order an environmental statement for the overhaul of the whole system of bomb production, a project that would take decades and may cost more than $100 billion.

RISE IN CLEANUP BUDGET

He also said his department would get an additional $300 million in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1 for cleanup. The Reagan Administration's budget called for $1.8 billion, which was increased by President Bush to $2.1 billion, and now to $2.4 billion.

Mr. Watkins said he was surprised to learn last week that his department had ignored recommendations made by the National Academy of Sciences from 1983 to 1987 on the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant near Carlsbad, N.M. The opening of the plant, which is meant for disposal of plutonium-contaminated wastes, has been delayed for months because of questions about its quality. Now, he said, the department will ask the academy for its endorsement of a plan to open the repository. "They're going to tell us, I'm sure, 'You didn't listen to us from '83 to '87.'-1A" Mr. Watkins said.

He said the plant would not open until next year, a delay that creates a crisis as wastes continue to pile up at temporary storage sites in Rocky Flats.

A NIGHTMARE FOR ME

Mr. Watkins said another waste disposal project, the plan to store highly radioactive wastes from military reactors and civilian ones at Yucca Mountain near Las Vegas, Nev., had been hamstrung by shortcomings of the Energy Department staff. "It has been a nightmare for me to try to unravel the background sufficient to make some decision," Mr. Watkins said. "It's been very confusing, and each day has revealed some new technical data."

He said he had found "serious flaws" in the procedures needed to assure that the department's reactors were safe to operate.

The department will have "an entirely new management team," he said, under Victor Stello Jr., now executive director for operations at the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

"Mr. Stello will assure that conformance to environmental laws and attention to these requirements are developed through a safety-conscious culture that will assure production objectives are met without violation of environmental, safety or health standards," he said.

The White House has announced that it plans to nominate Mr. Stello as Assistant Secretary for defense programs, but opposition is expected in the Senate because of unorthodox procedures he used at the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in approving cash payments to obtain information. The money was paid to a former utility employee who said he had information implicating a commission official in connection with allegations that have not been disclosed.

Mr. Watkins also said he had asked the academy to establish a committee on epidemiologic research to advise the department on ways to study worker health issues. The department plans to create a data base on the health histories of its workers who have been exposed to radiation for use by outside researchers.●

CAPITAL GAINS

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, the recent debate on capital gains is nothing new. The last extensive debate on capital gains took place several years ago, just prior to enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986. That overhaul of the Tax Code dramatically reduced ordinary income tax rates in exchange for treating capital gains as ordinary income.

As we revisit the capital gains issue today, we must ask ourselves what has changed since 1986 that would necessitate a reduction in the capital gains rate. Who benefits from the prospective changes? And how are tax revenues affected in the short and long term?

One group that would benefit from a capital gains tax reduction appears to be taxpayers with incomes of $100,000 or more. According to a study by the Joint Committee on Taxation, this group, which represents 3.2 percent of all taxpayers, would receive 80 percent of the dollar benefit from a capital gains income tax preference. Even more significant, those who earn $200,000 or more—a mere 0.8 percent of taxpayers—would receive 60 percent of the tax savings from a reduction in the capital gains rate. On the other hand, a group that apparently does not benefit substantially from a capital gains rate reduction is the 82 percent of all taxpayers with incomes of less than $50,000. They would receive only 9.2 percent of the benefits from a capital gains rate reduction. It was relationships such as these that were among the factors that led to the capital gains compromise in the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

Just the other day, the Joint Committee on Taxation released a memorandum on capital gains that some have pointed out to as evidence that a capital gains rate reduction would directly benefit taxpayers across the economic spectrum. This joint committee memorandum states that 74 percent who show capital gains on their tax returns have other income of less than $50,000. This statistic is misleading and appears, at first glance, to fly in the face of the joint committee's earlier statement that 80 percent of the benefit of a capital gains rate reduction goes to individuals who make $100,000 or more.

What's going on here?

I am told by the joint committee that there are two primary differences between these studies, and I hope they will forgive me if my explanation oversimplifies or does not use the most appropriate technical language. The first and most important difference is that one study measures the dollar value of the gain, while the other study merely counts the number of taxpayers in each income group who receive any capital gain income at all. Thus, the majority of the 74 percent of capital gains earners who make less than $50,000 in other income receive very little capital gain income in terms of dollar amounts. As the first study shows, the bulk of the dollar benefit goes to taxpayers with very high incomes.

A second difference between the two studies is that they use different definitions of income. According to the joint committee, the study that counts the number of taxpayers who receive any capital gains at all is based upon income groups that may understate the income of taxpayers. This is because the income calculation for that study does not account for income earned through tax shelters. Thus, some of the 74 percent of taxpayers who are counted in the "less-than-$50,000" category may actually have more income than $50,000. Sheltered income wasn't included in the definition of income for purposes of that study.

What about the cost to the Treasury of reducing the rate of tax on capital gains? Virtually all estimates indicate that a reduction in the capital gains rate will result in an initial surge in revenues to the Treasury, followed by reduced revenue receipts in succeeding years as capital asset sales stabilize. A number of creative proposals have been advanced to reduce the revenue loss from a straight reduction in the capital gains tax rate. A provision in the House budget reconciliation bill calls for reducing the tax on capital gains for 2 yeas only and indexing capital gains thereafter. This may be an effective approach for marketing a new product, but it hardly seems like good tax policy.

Assuming that a tax preference for capital gains income would ultimately lose revenue, who would have to pay for this long-term revenue loss? I think the answer is clear. Over 60 percent of all Federal taxes are currently paid by taxpayers who earn less than $100,000 a year. While these taxpayers would receive only 20 percent of the dollar benefit from capital gains rate cuts, they would probably be expected to shoulder the bulk of any tax increase.

Proponents of a capital gains rate reduction argue that the revenue loss would be more than offset by an increase in business activity and economic expansion. They say a capital gains tax rate reduction would stimulate investment and encourage improvement in our national savings rate, and they point to the experiences of Japan and West Germany.

There is little evidence or concensus among economists that this is true. It is not at all clear that the economic successes of nations such as Japan or West Germany are the result of limited taxation of capital gains. In fact, there is a range of reasons why these countries have been successful. So many other factors explain their success, including culture, education policies, trade policies, and the role of government, that it would be folly to expect a mere reduction in capital gains taxation to recreate those countries' experiences here.

There is only one conclusion I can offer my colleagues regarding the issue of a capital gains tax reduction. If we are going to do it, we better know why we are doing it, and we better know how to pay for it.●

NATIONAL ALCOHOL AND DRUG TREATMENT MONTH

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today to thank my colleagues for their support of a joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 132, designating the month of September 1989 as "National Alcohol and Drug Treatment Month." This joint resolution was signed into public law by the President and has the support of 60 of my colleagues in the Senate and by 223 Members of the House of Representatives.

The designation of the month of September has encouraged a focus on the positive contributions alcohol and other drug abuse treatment services provide in assisting those suffering from alcoholism and other drug addiction to recover and rebuild their lives. Treatment service as the bridge from dependence to independence from alcohol and other drugs.

Because alcohol and other drug abuse are complex problems involving biological, psycological, and social factors, a variety of approaches are needed to break their grip on our society. Aggressive law enforcement can limit the availability of illicit drugs. Education and prevention efforts, including media campaigns, can help discourage people from trying drugs. Workplace programs and drug testing can motivate occasional users to stop using drugs. However, drug and alcohol treatment is the key to reaching those severely dependent abusers who have not responded to other approaches. A national alcohol and a drug abuse treatment strategy can control the impact of these severe cases on society and reduce the demand for illicit drugs.

Dependence on alcohol or other drugs is a chronic relapsing disease A 1985 National Household Survey on Drug Abuse showed that approximately 23 million Americans currently used illicit drugs. Of these, more than 6.5 million people are severely dependent on heroin, other opiates, amphetamines, and cocaine. The majority of these persons cease to function in legitmate social roles and often engage in criminal behavior as part of their drug-using lifestyle. This group accounts for the bulk of the social and economic problems commonly associated with drug abuse and provides a continuing market for the illicit drug distribution system.

In addition, more than one-third of the families of the Nation and Tennessee are affected by alcoholism and an estimated 10 million Americans are problem drinkers or alcoholics. And alcohol abuse during pregnancy is one of the leading causes of mental retardation in infants and is the only preventable cause.

Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome [AIDS] has added new urgency to the need to address the Nation's critical intravenous [IV] drug abuse problems. Because shared needles can transmit the AIDS virus, IV drug users constitute a growing percentage of those at risk for the disease. More than 70 percent of the pediatric AIDS cases are related to IV drug use by one of both parents of the infant. Drug abuse treatment can reduce the rate of spread of AIDS to minimize the tragedy of lives lost and the immense national economic costs.

Alcohol and other drug abuse treatment provides an effective means toward dependence from substance dependence and is a necessary element in solving the problems associated with drug and alcohol abuse. Treatment can reduce criminality, as well as increase stable employment, progress in schools, health relationships, higher self-esteem and overall improvement in general health.

Education is equally an important component in preventing alcohol and drug abuse. Many groups—such as the "I Said No!" Foundation in Nashville, TN—have proved successful in discouraging substance abuse by youth and young adults.

A broad coalition of constituency groups in the alcohol and drug field, including concerned citizens, individual service providers and program managers are encouraging alcohol and other drug treatment programs to open their doors and to hold community events during National Alcohol and Drug Treatment Month and invite the public to visit programs in their neighborhoods and learn more about treatment services.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for supporting National Alcohol and Drug Treatment Month which has helped to call attention to the positive contributions that substance abuse treatment can make to our Nation's efforts to decrease the demand for drugs and alcohol.●

JOINT FEDERAL-STATE COMMISSION ON POLICIES AND PROGRAMS AFFECTING ALASKA NATIVES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of calendar No. 259, S. 1364, a bill to establish a joint Federal-State Commission on Policies and Programs Affecting Alaska natives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceed to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SECTION 1. (a) The Congress has conducted a preliminary review of the social and economic circumstances of Alaska Natives and of governmental policies and programs affecting Alaska Natives and finds that—

(1) in this period of rapid cultural change, there is, among Alaska Natives, a growing social and economic crisis characterized by, among other things, alcohol abuse and violence, grave health problems, low levels of educational achievement, joblessness, a lack of employment opportunities, and a growing dependency upon transfer payments;

(2) these conditions exist even though public policies and programs adopted in recent decades have been intended to assist Alaska Natives in protecting their traditional cultures and subsistence economies and in encouraging economic self-sufficiency and individual, group, village, and regional self-determination; and

(3) Alaska Natives and the State of Alaska have expressed a need for a review of public policies and programs and a desire to make such policies and programs more effective in accomplishing their intentions.

(b) The Congress hereby declares that it is timely and essential to conduct, in cooperation with the State of Alaska and with the participation of Alaska Natives, a comprehensive review of Federal and State policies and programs affecting Alaska Natives in order to identify specific actions that may be taken by the United States and the State of Alaska to help assure that public policy goals are more fully realized among Alaska Natives.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to once again commend Senator INOUYE, the chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, for his support and concern for my constituents in the Alaska Native community, and to thank Senator MURKOWSKI for introducing the bill.

Over the last 20 years, the Federal Government and the State of Alaska have spent hundreds of millions of dollars on programs designed to address the health, education, and welfare needs of Alaska Natives. Progress has been made on many fronts, but serious problems remain.

The goals of this bill are a review of the policies and programs through which both the State and Federal Governments have sought to improve the lives of the Alaska Native people. We have seen the impact of alcohol and substance abuse as both the cause and effect of grim statistics detailed in the AFN report "A Call to Action." I have been particulary concerned about the high rates of fetal alcohol syndrome in my State, which has the notoriety of being the highest in the world.

This joint Federal-State commission would review the successes and failures of the past 20 years and evaluate what steps should be taken by the Federal Government and Alaska to meet the challenges now faced by the Native peoples of Alaska. This bill would guarantee substantial Native participation in this important process.

This Commission has been patterned after the highly successful Indian Policy Review Commission of a decade ago. No such comprehensive review and analysis of this kind for Alaska Natives has been done since 1968, and I believe the outcome of this Commission will be improved coordination between Federal and State agencies and Native contractors. I would urge my fellow Senators to vote along with me for passage.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, S. 1364 would establish a Joint Federal-State Commission on Policies and Programs Affecting Alaska Natives, a commission proposed by Alaska Natives to address critical economic and social conditions existing today among Alaska Natives, and endorsed and fully supported by the State of Alaska.

These conditions include high rates of suicide—especially among young Native males—alcohol-related deaths, joblessness, violent behavior, and poor health status, low levels of educational achievement, and sharply lower incomes than other Americans.

The Commission that would be estabished by this bill would undertake to address the critical needs of Alaska Natives by examining their social and economic status, by reviewing the effectiveness of current policies and programs affecting them, and by developing recommendations to the Congress and the State of Alaska for change.

The Commission would be funded jointly by the State of Alaska and the Federal Government, and accordingly, its voting members would be appointed by the Governor of Alaska and the President of the United States. Those members would include at least six Alaska Natives, so they would be full participants in the work of the Commission.

To help assure that the work of the Commission would become effectively an agenda for change, key U.S. Senators and Congressmn and Alaska Legislators would be ex-officio members of the Commission.

This bill is widely supported by Alaska Native villages and other organizations and by the State of Alaska. Virtually all of the objections of the Bureau of Indian Affairs have been addressed in the amendment in the nature of a substitute unanimously approved by the select committee.

Enactment of S. 1364 into law and prompt appointment of members of the joint commission will give new hope to Alaska Natives that changes in public policies and programs affecting their lives will be made. Its enactment will also assure that they are active participants in that process of change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (S. 1364) as amended, was passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF STATE HIGHWAY AND TRANSPORTATION OFFICIALS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators BURDICK, CHAFEE, MOYNIHAN, and SYMMS, I send a resolution to the desk commending the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials on its 75th anniversary and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

A resolution (S. Res. 189) honoring the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials on their 75th anniversary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 189) was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS PROGRAMS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators CRANSTON and MURKOWSKI I send a bill to the desk and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1709) to provide interim extensions of Department of Veterans Affairs programs of respite care for certain veterans, community-based residential care for homeless chronically mentally ill veterans, State Home construction grants, and leave transfers for certain health-care professionals, and of Department of Veterans Affairs home-loan fees.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am today introducing, along with the ranking minority member of the Committee, Mr. MURKOWSKI, legislation to provide interim extensions of five Department of Veterans Affairs [VA] authorities due to expire on September 30, 1989. Our bill would: First, extend through November 30, 1989, the authority to furnish respite care to certain veterans; second, extend through November 30, 1989, the authority to furnish community-based residential care to homeless and certain other chronically mentally ill veterans; third, extend through November 30, 1989, VA's authority to conduct a leave-transfer program for its title 38 health-care personnel; fourth, extend for 1 year, fiscal year 1990, the authorization of appropriations for the program of matching fund construction grants for State veterans home health-care facilities; and fifth, provide for the collection of VA home-loan fees on loans closed before December 1, 1989.

Longer term extensions of each of these provisions has already been passed by the House, proposed by the administration, and approved by our Committee on Veterans' Affairs. An interim extension of one has already been passed by the Senate in another vehicle. All are totally noncontroversial.

Specifically, the administration has requested legislation, which I have introduced by request, to extend each of the foregoing, as follows: Sections 3 and 4 of S. 748 propose to extend the respite-care authority and the authorization of appropriations of the State home program; section 8 of S. 1004 proposes to extend the program of care for homeless chronically mentally ill veterans; S. 899 proposes to extend the leave-transfer program; and section 1 of S. 404 proposes to extend the loan fee. Also, our committee reported to the Budget Committee, in order to comply with the reconciliation instructions contained in the fiscal year 1990 budget resolution (H. Con. Res. 106), a provision to extend the current one-percent loan fee through fiscal year 1990.

On June 27, 1989, the House of Representatives passed legislation, in sections 106 and 201 (a), (b), and (c) of H.R. 901, to extend, respectively, the leave-transfer program, the respite-care authority, the program of care for homeless chronically mentally ill veterans, and the State home authorization of appropriations. On September 13, the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs reported legislation to extend those same programs, in sections 203—care for chronically mentally ill veterans, 215; respite care, 218; State homes, and 262 leave transfers—of S. 13, a comprehensive veterans' bill.

In section 402 of S. 13, our committee has proposed a permanent 1.25-percent fee as part of a restructuring of the loan guaranty program, including the indemnification of veteran home buyers who lose their homes through foreclosure. H.R. 1415 as passed by the House on June 6, 1989, would also provide for a 1.25-percent fee and for indemnification.

However, Mr. President, it is now clear that the final legislation making the foregoing extensions will not be enacted before October 1.

Mr. President, with respect to the program relating to homeless chronically mentally ill veterans, I am advised that the VA General Counsel's Office has taken the position that, despite the provision in section 801 of the 1988 McKinney Act amendments—Public Law 100-628—authorizing appropriations for the program for fiscal year 1990, the provision in the law establishing the program—section 114 of Public Law 100-322—which provides that the authority expires on September 30, 1989, requires that no new patients be furnished contract care after September 30. I feel strongly that VA's authority to meet the needs of these unfortunate, impoverished homeless veterans should be continued without interruption.

Regarding the leave-transfer extension, I note that, under section 618 of Public Law 100-440, the fiscal year 1989 Treasury-Postal Service Appropriations Act, VA has temporary authority, during fiscal year 1989, to conduct a leave-transfer program which allows VA title 38 employees—primarily physicians, dentists, and nurses—to transfer their unused accrued annual leave to other title 38 VA employees who need such leave due to a personal emergency. Such a temporary authority had also been available to title 5 employees of all Government agencies—including VA—when, on October 31, 1988, Congress enacted, in Public Law 100-566, a 5-year leave-transfer program for title 5 employees. However, due to an oversight, VA title 38 employees were not included in this 5-year program and the temporary authority for them is due to expire on September 30, 1989. On September 18, the Senate adopted an interim extension of the title 38 leave-transfer authority that was included in an amendment—No. 757—that I offered to H.R. 2916, the fiscal year 1990 VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies Appropriations Act as passed by the Senate on September 28.

As to the 1-percent fee on VA-guaranteed loans and on the loans—known as vendee loans—that VA extends to the purchasers of homes acquired by VA upon the foreclosure of VA-guaranteed loans, it is important to note that these fees produce receipts of approximately $14 million per month for VA's loan guaranty revolving fund, which funds the operations of VA's home-loan guaranty program.

Mr. President, I have discussed this legislation with the distinguished chairman of the House of Representatives Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Mr. MONTGOMERY, and he has assured me that he will seek House action on this measure as soon as possible after Senate passage.

Mr. President, the provisions of this bill would prevent a hiatus in these important programs pending Senate and final congressional action on the legislation to make long-term extensions. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with the chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee in introducing this interim VA program extension bill. I rise in strong support of this bill which would extend important VA program authorities which will expire on September 30, 1989. I regret that we are in this position where we must introduce and quickly pass this legislation. However, in all cases the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, on which I serve as the ranking minority member, has favorably reported legislation to extend the three authorities which we seek to temporarily extend.

EXTENSION OF RESPITE CARE PROGRAM

Mr. President, section 1(a) of this bill amends section 620B of title 38 to extend, until November 30, 1989, VA's authority to provide respite care. VA's respite care program is defined as hospital or nursing home care of a limited duration which is furnished in a VA facility on an intermittent basis to a veteran with a chronic illness who resides primarily at home. It provides a rest for the patient's caregiver. The goal of the program is to maintain the veteran at home for as long as possible by allowing the caregiver to have scheduled breaks from caring for the patient. This is an important and useful program. S. 13 as reported by the Veterans' Committee would provide for a 2-year extension of this program.

EXTENSION OF HOMELESS CHRONICALLY MENTALLY ILL PROGRAM

Mr. President, section 1(b) of this bill amends section 115(d) of Public Law 100-322 the Veterans' Benefits and Services Act of 1988, to extend the Homeless Chronically Mentally Ill [HCMI] Program until November 30, 1989. According to VA's general counsel, without this extension authority, VA would lack the legal authority to enter into contracts to place homeless veterans in community-based halfway houses.

Mr. President, I have had an established interest in this VA program. In fact, on January 27, 1987, I offered an amendment to House Joint Resolution 102 to earmark $5 million for the treatment of homeless and certain other chronically mentally ill veterans and to establish a program to assist—through contracts with community-based psychiatric residential treatment centers—homeless and certain other chronically mentally ill veterans. This amendment was eventually enacted on February 12, 1987, as part of Public Law 100-6.

In May 1988, the authority for the program was changed from a general authority to a pilot program in Public Law 100-322. In addition, the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988—Public Law 100-628—authorized the appropriation of $15 million for the HCMI Program for each of fiscal years 1989 and 1990.

VA implemented its authority to conduct the program in May 1987, at 43 medical centers in 26 States and the District of Columbia. According to VA's second progress report of the HCMI Program, which was submitted to the committee on January 17, 1989, during the first 11 months of operation, over 10,000 veterans had needs assessments. Of these veterans, almost 50 percent had psychiatric exams and almost 30 percent had medical exams. Twenty percent—2,125 veterans—were placed in community residential treatment centers—at VA expense—which is the most costly part of the HCMI Program and is reserved for veterans with extensive clinical problems. According to VA's report, this program has been extremely effective in providing a broad range of services to the homeless veteran population.

I believe it is very important to act quickly so this authority will not expire.

STATE VETERANS HOMES

Mr. President, section 1(c) of the bill would amend section 5033 of title 38 to authorize appropriations of such sums as are necessary to carry out the State Veterans Home Grant Program for fiscal year 1990. Under this program, VA provides construction grants—of up to 65 percent of the cost of project—to States for the construction, remodeling, or alteration of State veterans homes. The President has requested $43 million in fiscal year 1990 for this program. That amount has been approved by the House and Senate in H.R. 2916.

LEAVE TRANSFERS FOR VA EMPLOYEES

Section 1(d) of the measure would extend, through November 30, 1989, VA's authority—as provided under section 618 of the Treasury, Postal Service and General Government Appropriations Act, 1989, Public Law 100-440—to operate a leave transfer program for medical emergencies of VA employees. Under such a program, leave accrued by a Federal employee may be transferred to the annual leave account of any other employee in order to assist the receiving employee during a time of medical emergencies.

EXTENSION OF HOME-LOAN FEE

Mr. President, section 2 of the bill would extend the requirement that VA shall collect a loan fee from veterans receiving a VA-guaranteed loan. The amount of the fee is 1 percent of the total loan amount. This is a temporary extension—and would apply to loans which are closed before December 1, 1989. Again, the Veterans' Affairs approved legislation to extend this loan fee.

I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1709

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Morris, to be Deputy Director for Supply Reduction, Office of National Drug Control Policy; and all nominations on the Secretary's desk in the Navy reported today by the Armed Services Committee.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominees be confirmed en bloc, that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read, that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table en bloc, that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nomination considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

William Andreas Brown, of New Hampshire, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of career minister, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Israel, to which position he was appointed during the recess of the Senate from October 22, 1988, to January 3, 1989.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK

IN THE NAVY

Navy nominations beginning Warren V. Ayers, and ending Mary Arlen Southerland, which nominations appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 4, 1989. (List reported and confirmed minus one name: Paul B. Thompson.)

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now return to legislative session.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I note for the record, as I have previously, that there are six remaining ambassadorial nominations: Richard Wood Boehm, to be Ambassador to the Sultanate of Oman; Warren A. Lavorel, to be United States Coordinator for Multilateral Trade Negotiations; Johnny Young to be Ambassador to the Republic of Sierra Leone; Lannon Walker, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Nigeria; Mark Gregory Hambley, to be Ambassador to the State of Qatar; and James R. Cheek, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Sudan.

These were among a group of nominations reported by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Tuesday, September 19. This cleared for approval on the Democratic side of the Senate on Wednesday, September 20. I presented them at that time for action by the full Senate but that action was denied because of a hold placed by a Republican Senator. I presented them again on Friday, September 22, with a request that they be approved by the Senate.

Consent was not given for their approval again at the request of a Republican Senator. I present them again today and understand that they are still not able to gain clearance on the Republican side as the distinguished Republican Senator and I have discussed this twice before. We are trying to expedite these Presidential nominations at the request of the President. These are six individuals who are, of course, waiting to take their positions.

I just want the record to show that we are prepared to do them, we want to do them, but we are prevented from doing so by a hold placed by a Republican Senator.

I hope very much that we will be able to get them cleared in the near future. I know the distinguished Republican leader has been making an effort in that regard. I appreciate his effort in that regard.

Mr. DOLE. I appreciate the statement by the majority leader. I certainly share the views he has just expressed. I know of no reason these nominees are being held except they are being held. I do not think there is any question about their qualifications. There is no question that they have been approved, and they have been on the calendar for 10 days. In my view they would like to make plans. With their families. Most are going overseas. They are not going to be here in Washington, DC. They will be going to Sudan, and other countries, Sierra Leone, the Republic of Nigeria, the State of Qatar; very important assignments.

I certainly underscore the majority leader's hope that by early next week these nominations can be confirmed, and these nominees can get on with their work.

I regret that there is a hold on the Republican side. I can understand from time to time because of qualifications or some reason there might be a hold. I have not yet been able to determine why there is a hold on these particular nominees but there is a hold. I know we do not honor holds but it is a question of timing, how much time we have to move on different nominees. I appreciate the comments of the majority leader and hopefully we can wrap these nominations up early next week.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the distinguished Republican leader for his comments, and I share the view which he has previously expressed, for it makes no sense for a Republican Senator to prevent approval of nominations of Republicans made by a Republican President, particularly since the President has consistently urged prompt action on his nominees, and we are trying to accommodate him. So I hope we will be able to act on these next week.

Mr. President, I want to extend my thanks to the Republican leader for his usual cooperation during what has been a very long and difficult week.

I think there will be a few more ahead. I think we are all grateful that we have reached the end of a difficult week and have made progress.

I note for the record that we were able, thanks in part, and due to the distinguished Republican leader's cooperation, to complete action on all of the 13 appropriations bills in the Senate prior to the end of the fiscal year. I am deeply disappointed that we were not able to proceed to the point that we could have completed final action on conference reports, but I hope we are going to be able to do that in the very near future as conferees meet and send the reports to the respective bodies.

Mr. DOLE. If I might add, I certainly want to commend Senator BYRD, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and Senator HATFIELD, the ranking member, for their work, and the members of the their staff and other members of the Appropriations Committee.

It is not very often that we complete action on all 13 appropriations bills. Some will be coming back to us, I assume, next week, some conference reports. We might have quite a few out of the way before October 1.

In addition, I think we demonstrated we can move very quickly in response to calamaties in this country. We acted very quickly on the continuing resolution, which contained $1.1 billion to help those in North and South Carolina, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and the President signed that measure this morning.

I think, again, the Congress did respond. There was a need to respond, and I thank the majority leader for his leadership and his willingness to persist, sometimes against rather formidable odds, particularly in late evening, but we have the appropriations bills behind us, and there is still as much to do. I hope we can still complete action by Veterans Day of this year.

Mr. MITCHELL. That remains my goal, hope, and intention.

RECESS UNIT MONDAY OCTOBER 2, 1989, at 2 P.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the distinguished Republican leader has no further business, and if no other Senator is seeking recognition, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now stand in recess, under the previous order, until 2 p.m. on Monday, October 2, 1989.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 4:51 p.m., recessed until Monday, October 2, 1989, at 2 p.m.

SENATE—Monday, October 2, 1989

(Legislative day of Monday, September 18, 1989)

The Senate met at 2 p.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Blessed is the Nation whose God is the Lord.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights * * * to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, receiving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Eternal God, Creator, giver of life and breath and all things, we thank Thee for the unprecedented freedom which is our legacy. We honor our Founding Fathers whose profound understanding of human rights envisioned a political system which has endured for 200 years and today is a model which is the hope of millions who have lived under oppressive godless governments. Help us Lord, not to take this gift of freedom for granted, nor to forget the Biblical roots from which it came. Grant us wisdom to appreciate the inevitability of repression when materialism is policy and spiritual reality is denied. Awaken us to the peril of liberty when the insidious disease of secularism prevails. While we abhor a system which repudiates human rights, save us from the illusion that such rights can be preserved apart from faith in God and a commitment to those values derived from such faith.

In Jesus' name. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized under the standing order.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, following the time for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business until 2:30 p.m. today. At that time the Senate will proceed into Executive Session to consider the nomination of Joseph Zappala to be Ambassador to Spain, with debate only on the nomination today. There will be no rollcall votes today.

AMERICA'S RESPONSE TO CHANGES IN POLAND

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on September 12, a historic event occurred. A largely non-Communist government formally assumed power in Poland. This extraordinary event symbolizes the dramatic change underway in much of Eastern Europe, change that clearly reveals the failure of communism, change which offers an unprecedented, an indeed historic opportunity for democracy, and the West.

Days after the change of government in Poland, I spoke at length about the American response, I hoped would be forthcoming. I expressed my disappointment regarding the administration's failure to play an active leadership role in shaping a comprehensive Western policy toward Poland.

I noted that the President's proposal for Poland, aiming to change a Communist-controlled country, was wholly inadequate to assist the Solidarity-led government in successfully implementing economic and political reform.

I outlined the need for a more significant and comprehensive approach, an approach that includes a greater commitment to initiatives to foster private investment and enterprise in Poland, to expand trade opportunities between our two countries, and to reduce Poland's external debt. I called upon the administration to exert American influence among our allies and within international institutions such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to speed efforts to alleviate Poland's crushing debt burden.

I encouraged the President to respond swiftly and creatively to the enormous opportunity before us, and I pledged to work with him toward that end.

The events that have since occurred have been encouraging, but I believe that the administration has yet to fully comprehend and seize this historic opportunity to promote political and economic freedom in Poland.

I am pleased that the President clearly has stated his intention that the United States be in the forefront of the international effort to assist Poland.

The President's call for the IMF and World Bank to work with Poland to rapidly develop a bold plan for economic recovery is a positive step which I hope will be followed by sustained administration attention and encouragement.

Most significant is the President's stated recognition that the United States must do more to assist the new Polish Government, a direct and candid acknowledgment of the inadequacy of the administration's initial response.

It is my hope that the administration will not, as some officials have implied, rely solely upon participation in the efforts of the IMF and the World Bank. I strongly support active participation in these institutions which provide loans linked to strike financial criteria. But I believe that the United States also can pursue a more imaginative policy capitalizing on American strengths and targeted toward Poland's specific and immediate needs. Fundamentally, it appears that the administration remains hesitant to move forward until Poland's economic reforms already are fully in place. In light of our great stake in the success of the new Polish Government, I believe this response is excessively timid.

Last week, I met with the Polish Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister, a leading architect of Poland's economic reform program. He described in detail the plan to cut government subsidies, privatize industry, stabilize the currency, encourage private enterprise and take other steps to move Poland toward a free market system. He expressed Poland's hope that the West would help provide the short-term assistance necessary to restore confidence and enable the new government to move ahead.

There is no doubt in my mind that the Solidarity-led government is firmly committed to transforming Poland's economic system. The only question is whether the West will make it possible for this transformation to succeed.

The European Economic Community appears to recognize the critical and immediate need for a concrete Western commitment to ensuring Poland's success.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

We in Congress have made it clear that we want the United States to make a similarly dramatic commitment to helping the Polish people achieve full economic and political freedom. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has proposed an extensive package of financial, technical, and medical assistance in conjunction with trade and investment benefits. The House Foreign Affairs Committee is drafting its own comprehensive package to assist Poland's economic reform process.

Congress will do its best to ensure that the United States does, in fact, play a leading role in encouraging the success of Poland's brave experiment. Clearly our effort will be most effective if it is supported by the administration. I hope the administration will join us in an effort to provide a practical and creative package of assistance to Poland.

I call upon the administration to abandon its timidity and to take advantage of this historic opportunity to provide the kind of help that is necessary for democracy and open government to succeed in Poland.

Mr. President, since the close of the Second World War, the United States has spent not billions, not hundreds of billions, but trillions of dollars to provide military equipment to use if needed to defeat communism by force of arms. In Poland, we see the defeat of communism not by force of arms but as a result of its own internal failure. Communism is a failure.

People the world over want freedom and economic opportunity. Communism has failed to provide either. And in Poland, the peaceful transformation of a government from a Communist to a non-Communist system, the transformation of an economy from a state-run to an open economic system ought to be hailed by the United States. We ought to provide assistance to help democracy succeed peacefully with the same energy, vision, and enthusiasm that we would be demonstrating if called upon to help communism fail by military means.

So I encourage the President, having already acknowledged the inadequacy of his initial proposal, to now join with us to come forward with bold, productive, and meaningful steps to provide the assistance necessary to help democracy succeed.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time and I reserve the time of the distinguished Republican leader.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the remainder of the majority leader time is reserved and the time of the Republican leader is also reserved.

EXTENSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for morning business be extended to 2:45 p.m. today and that the Senate then proceed into executive session under the previous order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the majority leader extend my time for my remarks to 15 or 20 minutes. I will try to limit it as much as I can. I want to make one coherent statement about Hugo.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Carolina be recognized for 15 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOUTH CAROLINA EXTENDS GRATITUDE FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, permit me to report to the Senate on my firsthand observations of a South Carolina struggling courageously to get back on its feet. Saturday and Sunday, I met with literally dozens of people whose homes were completely wiped out by Hurricane Hugo. They and tens of thousands like them have absorbed a tremendous shock, to their property and to their spirit. But they are determined to rebound and rebuild.

On that score, Mr. President, the Senate should be aware of the gratitude of the people of South Carolina for the tremendous outpouring of assistance from all across the country.

A few snapshots will give you some idea of the high morale and spirit of the recovery effort. Yesterday, Kelly's restaurant at Nags Head, NC, together with some half dozen restaurants in that community sent two big truckloads to Charleston loaded with some of the best-tasting food you have ever eaten, and we had the privilege of sharing it on Marion Square with hundreds of volunteer workers who had come from all corners of the United States. Words are inadequate to express our gratitude to those volunteers for all they have done and continue to do.

I will never forget the Cumberland County law enforcement group from North Carolina; the Ocean City group; Virginia Beach sent down 35 garbage trucks, plus a dozen or so firemen; South Bend, IN, sent volunteers from the Notre Dame section; Houston, TX; Stuttgart, AR; and Pompano Beach, FL, sent an entire public works team along with equipment; Fort Lauderdale sent similar teams; Green County, outside of Atlanta, GA, has contributed similarly.

There were volunteers from Laconia, New Hampshire; from Seattle, Washington; from Alaska; and even from Hong Kong. The man from Hong Kong told me he was an exporter and happened to be in town on business, so he decided to stay and help with the cleanup.

I couldn't help thinking of all the bills aimed at encouraging volunteerism. Believe me, we already have it in this country, a tremendous sense of wanting to pitch in and lend a helping hand. A decade ago, we heard a President talk about America's malaise. Well, I say "Hold the malaise." You don't have to worry about the spirit of this country. It is strong and thriving. Some 200 policemen have come to Charleston from around the State. The town of Awendaw lost eight cars, so North Augusta and Aiken sent patrol cars; Greenville sent help too.

Yesterday afternoon, the city of Toms River, NJ, adopted the town of McClellanville, which had been totally wiped out. Yesterday afternoon 38 18-wheelers arrived, full of equipment, led by a police escort and three fire engines. All kinds of equipment just moved right in from Toms River, NJ.

The Southeastern Lumbermen's Association in Atlanta called me this morning and now we are coordinating delivery of lumber free of charge to help in the reconstruction. There is a mill in Prosperity that sent 3,700 pair of work clothes, and so forth.

The telephone company, particularly Mr. Byrd in Columbia, and Joe Addison, have been outstanding. We have gotten what we needed in communications.

The South Carolina Electric & Gas Co. has been outstanding. They have been working nonstop. They brought in crews from Alabama and Mississippi; the Salvation Army, the Red Cross, the National Guard. You cannot say enough for those folks who have been working with such dedication, virtually around the clock, for 11 days now. And a very special word of praise and thanks to the Coast Guard, the Corps of Engineers, the Army and Marines; they have been Johnny on the spot, performing with urgency and professionalism from day one of this crisis. The morning after Hugo hit, the Coast Guard had ships out at first light to look for survivors.

I called up to ask for assistance from our friends who played key roles in the aftermath of Hurricane Camille. I knew Bill Simpson as an administrative assistant to former Senator John Stennis. I said, "Bill, reassemble that Camille working group because they could help us coordinate." And immediately I saw them Friday night out at the command center; eight of them paid their own way to South Carolina. They had ridden herd on the bureaucracy and paperwork when Camille hit down in the gulf. With their experience, they are in Charleston coordinating and directing our people in law enforcement. Everyone was tickled to death to get their expertise.

Corporate America, Mr. President, has responded in a most impressive way. Metropolitan Life; Philip Morris; Westvaco; Monsanto; all have made generous cash contributions.

The Taubman Co. up in Detroit sent down a young woman named Joyce Storm to oversee repair of the Omni Hotel in Charleston. She is now playing a major role in the citywide relief effort. I noted last week on the floor how Sam Walton had sent in 17 tractor-trailers from Walmart, and others were coming in. Well, it was a phone call from Joyce Storm that set all that in motion. She is working around the clock with volunteers, and becoming a local hero in the Charleston area.

Sunday morning I thanked one fellow working on a forklift which he was wheeling and dealing like an old pro. I said, "Thank God we have an expert." He said, "I have never been on one of these until yesterday, but I have been working it all day yesterday, all night, and all day today." I mean, he knew how to operate it.

So, Mr. President, this is the spirit of voluntarism and professionalism and tireless dedication that is carrying the day in South Carolina right now.

I could extend this at length, and I regret all the names I might have accidentally left out. I want to emphasize, after talking with Mayor Riley, Joyce Storm and the coordinating officials from every angle, that what we need, Mr. President, more than anything else is the expertise and manpower to handle the tons of supplies that are coming in from all over the country.

I started Monday morning a week ago urging Gen. Colin Powell to mobilize the Army's expertise. But, as I related on the floor last week, the FEMA crowd stopped us, roadblocked us; just stonewalled the whole thing. It was not until Friday that we got FEMA set up in the municipal auditorium. We need more. And the reason we need more is not for a lack of volunteers. We have people working now trying to get back to their families and their homes and their jobs. We need, especially in the rural areas, the face and presence of authority.

If we could have more troops from the supply brigades down in Fort Stewart, they would be a tremendous help. They could help us coordinate. When you send 38 18-wheelers into a little town like McClellanville, there is no place to unload and no way to deal with it. A supply brigade could work wonders in the town of McClellanville. Another team could go to Oranville.

After all, there are 24 counties affected in South Carolina. In each area they could use this expertise in coordination. We need most of all, with everything coming in, to ensure that is does not spoil, but is put to proper use and expeditiously delivered, because we have over 40,000 homeless, we have between 250,000 and 300,000 without electricity at this very moment. We need to be getting supplies to the people they are intended for and who critically need them.

At the same time, we need to clear the debris. I noticed in the morning paper how nearly 80 truckloads of debris were collected in a single quarter-mile stretch of road in Charleston. They have had a devil of a time just trying to clear out downed trees in all the small towns and particularly in the metropolitan areas of North Charleston, Charleston, Summerville, and so on. Meaning, of course, the electric and gas company is having great difficulty getting to their own downed lines. If we had the crews to come in with the equipment, the manpower to clear the debris and just systematically go about it, it would take them a good 10 days, going day and night at very least. Otherwise it will be this time next year, and I am not being facetious or talking lightly, it will be next year before we can get the job done.

Of course we also need homes for the homeless. Thousands and thousands of people have been put up in what is left of the schools, what is left of the churches. We have trailerhouses in reserve for this situation. There are thousands of them in Atlanta, in Texas and elsewhere. We need to start moving these trailers to rural areas where there is nothing being done. We need to get these folks in the trailers so their families can stay put and they can go to work, so we can begin to open up the schools again, because they have been closed, the schools and colleges, over this entire 11-day period.

I ran into this bottleneck of State officials worrying that they might be responsible for reimbursing the Feds for up to 25 percent of particular disaster-relief efforts. The choke point and bottleneck with FEMA and the State authorities in Columbia is they are all worried about the State running up a bill. I want to read section 502 of the Federal Emergency Assistance Act that we enacted last year, Public Law 100-707.

SEC. 502. FEDERAL EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE.

(a) SPECIFIED.—In any emergency, the President may—

"(1) direct any Federal agency, with or without reimbursement, to utilize its authorities and the resources granted to it under Federal law (including personnel, equipment, supplies, facilities, and managerial, technical and advisory services) in support of State and local emergency assistance efforts to save lives, protect property and public health and safety, and lessen or avert the threat of a catastrophe;

"(2) coordinate all disaster relief assistance (including voluntary assistance) provided by Federal agencies, private organizations, and State and local governments;

"(3) provide technical and advisory assistance to affected State and local governments for—

"(A) the performance of essential community services;

"(B) issuance of warnings of risks or hazards;

"(C) public health and safety information, including dissemination of such information;

"(D) provision of health and safety measures; and

"(E) management, control, and reduction of immediate threats to public health and safety;

"(4) provide emergency assistance through Federal agencies;

"(5) remove debris in accordance with the terms and conditions of section 407;

"(6) provide temporary housing assistance in accordance with section 408; and

"(7) assist State and local governments in the distribution of medicine, food, and other consumable supplies, and emergency assistance.

"(b) GENERAL.—Wherever the Federal assistance provided, under subsection (a) with respect to an emergency is inadequate, the President may also provide assistance with respect to efforts to save lives, protect property and public health and safety, and lessen or avert the threat of a catastrophe.

So, we have clear authority in the law itself. There is some question with respect to the grants that may go out as emergency disaster financial aid, that the State may have to pay up to 25 percent of it. But when we look at the total cost, some $4 or $5 billion, and that includes the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, as well as the Carolinas, I cannot imagine 25 percent of that, a billion, coming out of South Carolina, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. We simply do not have it. We do not have it and it was not intended that we have it. It was intended only that we be vigilant, prudent, and not wasteful.

Mayor Riley and officials in Columbia are working hard to avoid waste. Their priority is to get people back to normal, back to work so they can fend for themselves. They are working around the clock. I have never seen anything like it.

The statute is clear. The authority is there. It should not be a roadblock, but a "go" signal. I think we can move if we can get this FEMA crowd moving.

I intervened this past weekend with Susan Engeleiter of the Small Business Administration, after we had passed our bill on the floor, Friday afternoon, with $1,050,000,000. I said: "Can you light a fire under the Small Business Administration's disaster-response group?"

She said: "Yes, I cannot only help, I can open up those offices in South Carolina, as many as you need, Senator."

I said: "Well, can't you take on that FEMA crowd and let us expedite it?" I would make a wager on the floor of the U.S. Senate there has not been $1 delivered to anybody in South Carolina as of this minute. This is 11 days after the disaster. They have been buzzing around and bumping into each other but they are telling everybody in lines to fill out forms, come back October 7, and all this nonsense.

We need coordination. And I have called again on the Small Business Administration, because we do not yet have those offices.

Mr. President, I have mentioned a number of organizations that have responded with great skill and dedication to this crisis. Certainly, the U.S. National Weather Service must be near the top of anyone's list. They have performed magnificently before, during, and after Hugo. It was the Weather Service's accurate and timely forecasts that saved so many lives and allowed us to avoid even worse destruction. My hat is off to this superb outfit. It consistently does the government proud.

I also need to thank the many Senators and the volunteers they have mobilized. I want to thank those Senatorial staffs sending people to South Carolina to help with food stamp distribution and in other capacities. Many drove all night from New Jersey and elsewhere. I want to particularly thank Senator LAUTENBERG, whose staff rented a van and drove donated supplies to Williamsburg County; Senator ROBB, whose staff collected and delivered a huge collection of supplies; also Senator CONRAD, Senator SIMON, Senator DODD, Senator KENNEDY, Senator MITCHELL, Senator BENTSEN, Senator MCCAIN, Senator FORD, Senator HEINZ, Senator FOWLER, Senator WIRTH, and Senator SARBANES. And the Capitol Policeman outside Russell Building came in a little while ago—I know he does not want any publicity but is name is Jack Ballard—with a financial contribution of his own. I am touched and grateful.

People are great in this country. There has been a tremendous sense of urgency and human concern. Of course, this is in stark contrast to the stonewalling up here from FEMA. Yes, they have declared 24 counties as disaster areas, but they do not have but 10 offices open for all of South Carolina, if they have indeed opened the additional 5. This is 11 days after the disaster. They have not yet awarded a financial grant that I know of.

The SBA has yet to process a loan. If they started today that would be fine. That would be the first that they have processed.

Bishop James of the AME Churches in South Carolina has organized an excellent grassroots relief effort. Mr. President, I cannot praise too highly the stalwart leadership of our Charleston mayor, Joe Riley. He has just done a magnificent job, working around the clock. He had them all out there with T shirts reading "We are working together." Mr. President, the spirit is there. People are not despairing or fussing or complaining, but rather we are all in this together. We will build a stronger community out of the wreckage. And the best way is to not complain but go to work.

I must speak the blunt truth, however, that we at the Federal level have been embarrassed by the holdup we are suffering at FEMA and SBA. In that regard, I close with several paragraphs from this morning's edition of USA Today. I quote:

"I should say the next decade or two we should see more intense west Atlantic storms."

That prediction is little comfort to South Carolina residents who are still digging out—irate at the slow pace of aid.

Even the Federal Emergency Management Agency's public service announcements have opened it to ridicule.

Sunday, 10 days after Hugo wreaked $5 billion in damage, FEMA aired a spot advising residents to have candles, batteries and full tanks of gas in case of a hurricane.

And 14 days after Hugo hit St. Croix, FEMA officials today set up two aid centers.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll, the absence of a quorum having been suggested.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak as in executive session on the nomination of Joe Zappala, to be U.S. Ambassador to Spain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator may speak as in executive session for not to exceed 5 minutes. The Senator is recognized.

JOSEPH ZAPPALA—IN THE BUSINESS OF AMERICA

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I rise in support of Joe Zappala for Ambassador to Spain. Joe Zappala is the son of immigrant parents who came to this country from Italy. He joined the Army when he was 17 years old.

He went into business in Florida and has become one of the State's leading businessmen. In the process, he has helped create tens of thousands of jobs and generated economic growth, but he has not just been involved in business and job creation, as important as that is. In fact, Calvin Coolidge once said the business of America is business, and in that sense Joe has been in the business of America. But he has also been very active in efforts related to drug awareness and education and rehabilitation. He has been involved on behalf of retarded children. He has been heavily involved in community activities.

I know, Mr. President, that debate will occur as to whether Joe Zappala is qualified to be U.S. Ambassador because he does not have experience in the State Department. It seems to me that that is a relevant debate. I think experience in the State Department and knowledge of the foreign policy mechanism of America is a legitimate issue to raise. But I think also knowledge of America is a legitimate issue to raise.

More than anything else, the Ambassador of the United States in Spain represents our country, and I cannot think of anyone who is a better representative of what America is all about than the President's nominee for Ambassador to Spain. I think while we should and obviously have raised questions about the nominee's knowledge of the State Department, I think we ought to also be debating this nominee and other nominees' knowledge of America.

I would have to say, Mr. President, that I have complaints from time to time about professionals within the State Department, not a complaint about their knowledge of the State Department, but a complaint about their knowledge of America. I think in this case, we have someone who is the epitome of what the American system is all about. I think he will be an excellent representative of our Nation.

I commend the President for nominating him. I am strongly in support of him. In Joe Zappala, we have someone who will be a representative of America, who understands our system, whose life is the embodiment of that system.

Quite frankly, Mr. President, I would rather have someone who understands our system, what we are all about, what we are trying to do, than have somone who knows all about the State Department but who has relatively little experience in the business of America.

So, as a result, I am a strong supporter of this nomination, and I urge my colleagues to vote for Joe Zappala for Ambassador to Spain.

I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll, the suggestion having been made that a quorum is not present.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that morning business be extended by 10 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Morning business will be extended for 10 minutes. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Chair.

"DROP-DEAD" DAY

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, we face a drop-dead day 2 weeks from now, a drop-dead day with regard to this year's budget process, but there is still time, I believe, and still sufficient energy in this body to get us through the appropriations conferences, through the reconciliation bill, and through the reconciliation conference. There is still a narrow window of opportunity and I think a glimmer of hope that we can avoid an ultimate sequester under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law.

But if that is to occur, we are going to have to act now. It is absolutely imperative that we move with dispatch. I do not believe a single Member of this body wants across-the-board spending cuts. I am confident of that. But in the rush of business it is frequently very hard for us to focus very far down the road. Let me take a moment, if I may, to telescope events and to describe what I think we will be facing if the sequester action is allowed to fall on October 15.

The best estimates are that if we fail to complete reconciliation, we are going to face a $16 billion sequester on October 16. That would constitute the following problems: One, a 5-percent across-the-board cut in nondefense programs that are not exempt from sequester. That is going to include almost all appropriated accounts for nondefense programs and some entitlement programs. It will cut some $6 billion through the 1990 fiscal year. The 5-percent cut would apply to the portion of funds appropriated in each continuing resolution as well.

Second, a 4-percent across-the-board cut from defense programs would occur. This would apply to military personnel accounts as well as other defense accounts since the President has chosen not to exercise his option under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law and exempt military personnel.

Defense budget authority would be cut by $4.4 billion below the 1989 budget authority level. As with the domestic cuts, the defense cuts would apply equally to the portion of funds appropriated in each continuing resolution.

Mr. President, nobody wants the chaos, I do not believe, that will ensue if we do not act quickly. But I fear that our sense of urgency is somehow diminished by the fallacious presumption that we will simply roll back all of the negative effects, unwind the sequester, and make everything all right once again.

Well, I suppose it is possible to do that but let us not be under the illusion that no one is going to notice the sequester; and that no one is going to experience discomfort or disruption.

The fact is that some programs, those that expired on October 1, are already feeling some negative affects.

Guaranteed student loans fit into that category, and both lenders and recipients, the students themselves, are already feeling some of the pain. GSL lenders are receiving reduced interest and new students are paying higher origination fees on their loans. Those things are going on right now.

Some disaster assistance payments under the Farm Relief Program are also being cut.

Further, Mr. President, should we miss our October 15 deadline, Medicare providers are going to be receiving about 2 percent less in their payments, and some Medicare beneficiaries will have their reimbursement checks reduced by about 2 percent.

If we trigger sequester, all of that is going to take place no matter how quickly we undo the damage.

And the most frustrating part of this entire logjam—as I said here a week ago when we were first beginning to see the spectre of sequester darkening the horizon—the most frustrating part of this stall in the process is that it simply does not have to be this way.

Once again, Mr. President, the various authorizing committees in the Senate are complying with their deficit reduction instructions. The appropriations committees are reporting bills that are within the targets established by the budget resolution—a budget resolution, I might add, that was agreed to very early this year by a bipartisan team from the administration and the Congress.

In short, the dominoes were falling neatly and in order until we came to the bridge washed out by the capital gains debate.

Mr. President, if we do indeed founder on the capital gains issue, if we do indeed cause the country the unnecessary confusion of sequester, the administration will bear the great burden of that failure of responsibility.

The sad fact is that the budget reconciliation bill has become the vehicle for virtually everything but deficit reduction. The privileges written into the reconciliation process are being used to undercut the objectives toward which reconciliation was supposed to be directed.

When the administration insisted on using reconciliation to push their capital gains agenda, they flung open the flood gates and all the extraneous issues rolled in.

My colleagues on the other side of the aisle have produced a 40-page document that lays out the various extraneous provisions in the budget reconciliation bill. The bulk of that list relates to the House where the Byrd rule does not apply. And we, in this body, have done a better job of sticking to what is in fact at issue in reconciliation, the budget and this country's fiscal well being.

But Mr. President, those are precisely the issues that have been ignored as we fix our attention almost exclusively on the battle between capital gains and individual retirement accounts. And as that battle takes center stage, other issues irrelevant to deficit reduction get fought out on the periphery.

That is not how it was meant to be. That is not how it should be.

Mr. President, we still have the opportunity to get our eyes back on the prize, even if it's only for long enough to reach the modest deficit reduction goals we set for ourselves this year.

I want to urge all my colleagues who are involved in the reconciliation process to move just as quickly as possible. I want to congratulate the chairman and members of the authorizing committees in this body, who have worked long and hard to meet their reconciliation instructions and to report them on time.

I went to congratulate the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the chairmen of the various appropriations subcommittees, and the members of the appropriations subcommittees who have worked long and hard to reach the modest deficit reduction goals that were set in conjunction with a solemn agreement with the administration earlier this year.

If we can complete action on the floor by the close of this Friday, we still have a chance to go to conference with this bill next week and meet our targets, and meet our responsibilities. It simply is not in this Nation's best interests to let the tail of capital gains, President Bush's campaign promise of last year, continue to wag the dog, to bog this body down and to keep it from meeting its responsibilities, doing its duty, and avoiding sequester.

I yield the floor.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today marks the 1,661st day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

In October of last year, a videotape was released by Terry Anderson's captors. I ask unanimous consent that a Washington Post article on this subject be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Nov. 1, 1988]

HOSTAGE, ON VIDEOTAPE, FAULTS U.S. EFFORTS TOWARD RELEASE

(By Nora Boustany)

BEIRUT, October 31.—American hostage Terry Anderson appeared in a videotape released today by his Shiite Moslem captors and said the U.S. government may have blocked agreements to release him. He added that the plight of the hostages has received little attention in the presidential campain.

Anderson urged President Reagan and his successor to cooperate with "those who are trying to find a way out of this terrible impasse." He said that he had heard the "warming story" of U.S.-Soviet cooperation to free three trapped whales and called for comparable efforts toward gaining the release of the hostages.

The Associated Press journalist, who has been held more than 3½ years, longer than any other U.S. hostage, made his plea in a 2½-minute videotape distributed by the Iran-backed Islamic Jihad organization to two international news agencies this morning.

[In Los Angeles, Reagan denied that the United States had blocked any deal to free the American hostages and he accused the "barbarian" kidnapers of forcing Anderson to read a false statement. "I don't think that was Terry speaking," Reagan told reporters. "I think he had a script that was given to him. When I was given a script, I always read the lines."]

On the tape, Anderson, who marked his 41st birthday last week, spoke assertively, appeared clean-shaven and trim and assured his family, friends and the American people that he was being "well treated." But he conceded that he found it hard to keep his spirits up.

Release of the tape came amid a flurry of Islamic Jihad statements accompanied by photos of Anderson—five in the past 10 days—in what observers here saw as a sign that his captors are eager to free him soon.

Shiite Moslem security sources said they would not be surprised if some of the nine American hostages were released in the coming week, before the American presidential election. Western diplomats watching hostage developments here said, however, that they had seen no indications that a release was imminent.

"I gather there has been very little discussion of our problem in the U.S. presidential campaign, and that's disappointing, as is President Reagan's complete failure to find a solution," Anderson said on the tape.

"All that is necessary is that Mr. Reagan and Mr. Bush, if he is elected, use their influence in a positive way, not a negative one, with those who are trying to find a way out of this terrible impasse," he said, reading from a prepared statement.

Referring to the United States' declared principle of not negotiating with kidnapers, Anderson said, "I am not asking Reagan to deal with terrorists, although Mr. Bush did so in the Iran-contra affair and the [1985] TWA hijacking."

Anderson also charged that the U.S. government obstructed agreements that could have led to his release.

"I was very close to being released several times over the past two years but each time it seems that the U.S. government uses its influence to stop any agreement from being made," he said.

Anderson said that "whichever candidate wins this election, remember: an unyielding refusal to deal with this matter is not going to make it go away, it's not going to free us."

"I heard on the radio of the generous and ambitious effort to free three trapped whales a few days ago and of the president's thanks to the Soviet Union for its help," he said. "It is a warming story. That kind of cooperation and spirit is absolutely necessary to put this situation to an end."

Anderson opened the tape, the third showing him that has been released by Islamic Jihad since his capture in March 1985, by saying: "My name is Terry Anderson and this is the 30th of October. Once again I'm given the chance to speak to my family and to my friends and to the American people."

"First to my family, I love you and I miss you very much. I know of your continued strong efforts for me," he said. he also expressed gratitude to friends, fellow journalists and other people who have worked on his behalf.

He asked various relatives, including "Dad," to "kiss my daughters for me," an indication that he is not aware his father died in 1986.

A TURNING POINT FOR ANGOLA

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, while most of the world, media, and political attention in recent months have focused on the events in China, the Soviet Union, and Eastern Europe, and equally momentous set of events has occurred in southern Africa.

During no other time in the past 14 years have the prospects for peace, freedom, and the exchange of ideas shown more progress in the little heard of but vitally important country of Angola. If this potential is going to be carried to its final conclusion, the United States must turn our bipartisan policy of support for national reconciliation and support for free and fair elections into active engagement in the region.

How many of us imagined 1 year ago South Africa, Cuba, and Angola would sign an agreement to acheive the independence of Namibia and the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. Today, Cuban troops are leaving Angola and the process leading to free elections in Namibia is scheduled for November.

How many who have followed events in Angola believed a handshake between Dr. Jones Savimbi, president of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola [UNITA], and Angolan President Eduardo Jose dos Santos was possible; and again we recorded this historic occurrence in June. At a summit meeting in Gbadolite, Zaire, witnessed by 18 African heads of state, the two parties agreed to begin negotiations aimed at ending the war and building a peaceful nation.

Since the initial meeting in Zaire, negotiations have broken down. The MPLA has publicly revoked its commitment to the Gbadolite declarations of a cease-fire, national reconciliation and direct negotiations. Moreover, the Marxist MPLA regime continues to perpetuate war rather than facilitate peace. They have exhibited classic gunboat diplomacy by attempting to achieve with talks what they failed to do in 14 years of war. The positions they have put forward are political suicide for UNITA. At the same time they are trying to press UNITA militarily. The MPLA must understand that if it continues to pursue a military option, rather than reconciliation with UNITA, then the United States will not hesitate to apply increased pressure to reach the goals of democracy and free and fair elections.

Communism, like a disease, must be completely obliterated. Left to linger, it can regenerate itself and destroy fragile elements of change and progress. Continued attention and pressure from the United States and other African nations can get the talks back on track so a lasting peace and a truly free and prosperous Angola can be a reality.

The time for action is critical. Conditions in Angola cannot wait. What good is a policy if there is no action? How can we influence positive action for change without becoming engaged in the process? Where is our passion when victory is so close and within our grasp? Whether resumed negotiations can bring about a lasting peaceful settlement only time will tell. However, it is clear a continued United States policy of pressing for national reconciliation and free and fair elections in Angola remains the best policy approach.

Finally, all interested parties must realize there are new winds blowing over southern Africa, and they are the winds of peaceful change and a movement to democracy. Africa is exhausted from war, drought, and famine. The sense that peace is a necessary ingredient for bringing a better life to all Africans continues to grow.

The United States has responsibilities in Eastern Europe, the Middle East, Latin America and other places too numerous to name. But we have a special obligation in Africa the poorest continent. A steady policy of support for freedom and progress through economic growth and opportunity and the exchange of ideas are the most important ingredients for peaceful change. In Angola, we are close, closer to that goal than ever before. A bipartisan foreign policy of support for national reconciliation, independence, and free elections has brought us this far. We must continue to engage this policy and restore to those who have fought for so long with so little, against such odds, but with hope and determination the promises of peace, freedom, and democracy in Angola.

CORRECTIONS TO REPORT ON NOAA APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, in the printing of the report 101-144 accompanying H.R. 2991, the Departments of Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and related agencies appropriations bill, 1990, some changes approved at the full committee markup for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration were not reflected. Inasmuch as these changes affect several programs in NOAA's "Operations, Research and Facilities" appropriation, and have led to a little confusion, I ask unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point, the corrected pages 22 through 27.

There being no objection, the corrections were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee provides $18,005,000 of the administration's request to continue development of NOAA's program in climate and global change. The program will augment and integrate existing programs and should include global observations, monitoring, and data and information management relating to the study of changes in the Earth's climate system, fundamental research on critical oceanic and atmospheric processes, and climate prediction and diagnostics.

The Committee's recommendation includes increases totaling $10,900,000 for upgrading the computers at the National Meteorological Center and the Geophysical Fluid Dynamics Laboratory, and an increase of $8,139,000 for the coastal ocean initiative. With respect to the latter item, the Committee expects that $350,000 will be allocated to the University of South Carolina School of Public Health and the Baruch Institute for research to effectively manage small, high-salinity estuaries, in collaboration with the National Marine Fisheries Service Southeastern Fisheries Laboratory in Charleston, SC.

The Committee intends that $1,000,000 of the funds provided to NOAA for ocean assessment activities is for continuation of the work required to support the multiyear Long Island Sound study, which was designated as part of the EPA National Estuary Program in 1988. It is also the Committee's intention that work carried out with this funding will be done with the approval of the Long Island Sound Study Management Committee, of which NOAA is a member. In addition, $2,500,000 has been provided for NOAA's damage assessment activities under the Clean Water Act.

In increasing the allocation for the South Carolina multipurpose mapping project by $200,000 the Committee intends that one-half of the increase will be retained by the National Ocean Service for support of the expanded work in South Carolina.

The Committee has set aside $900,000 in funds from this account to continue a joint Federal-State research and demonstration project to develop a natural resources information system and to establish criteria and standards by which the public interest in privately owned natural resources can be determined. The Committee directs the National Ocean Service to contract with the State of South Carolina's Water Resources Commission to conduct this demonstration in the watershed of Edisto, and the upper reaches of the Combahee River. This pilot project will provide valuable information and methodology to enable the States and the Federal Government to continue to efficiently manage our natural resources. The Committee further expects that the State of South Carolina will finance an increasing percentage of the costs of the project over the last 2 years of this 5-year joint effort.

The additional $500,000 for ocean services is for the NOAA Center for Ocean Analysis and Prediction to cover continuing operating expenses in Monterey, CA.

Within the $2,650,000 restored for resource survey activities, the Committee expects NMFS to continue contracting with South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department for Resource Surveys.

The Committee notes its strong support for continued funding through the National Marine Fisheries Service of the Stuttgart, AR, Fish Farming Experimental Station operated by the U.S. Department of the Interior Fish and Wildlife Service. The Stuttgart farm is one of the Nation's leading research institutions on fresh-water aquaculture and the largest facility in the country of this type. The Committee directs that $75,000 of the funds received by Stuttgart for its operating budget be used to conduct research studies between Stuttgart and the University of Arkansas at Pine Bluff related to aquaculture and catfish farming. The Committee also directs the National Marine Fisheries Service to continue its present cooperative relationship with the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Of the $4,000,000 provided for MARFIN, the Committee has provided $1,000,000 for expanding the program to address fisheries issues in the South Atlantic. The South Atlantic expansion of MARFIN is intended as a coordinated research program involving the NMFS, the four South Atlantic States (North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida), sea grant and independent universities. This funding initiative would bring the scientific talent of the above groups to bear on important fisheries in the region. Initial priority should be placed on those for king and Spanish mackerel and red drum including expanded data collection and better catch statistics. Recreational catch statistics are especially critical.

Of the funds restored for marine mammal research, $350,000 shall be provided to the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission to support scientific research and the cooperative agreement with NOAA, and not less than $400,000 shall be available for monk seal research.

Within the $3,500,000 restored for interjurisdictional fisheries grants to States, the Committee directs that $200,000 be allocated for emergency disaster relief assistance for the oyster industry along the Texas gulf coast.

The Committee has provided $11,600,000 for the NOAA Undersea Research Program, and directs that $3,000,000 be provided to the Hawaii Undersea Research Laboratory [HURL].

The Committee has included grant funding of $2,000,000 for a small research vessel and related equipment, laboratory equipment, and research instruments for the marine research and education programs of the University of New Hampshire.

The Committee was pleased at the announcement by the Secretary of Commerce in March of this year that the Nation's weather stations would remain in service at current operating levels through fiscal year 1990. The Committee wishes to reiterate its support of the Nation's weather service stations and has included the full $29,073,000 required to carry out the Secretary's announcement. In restoring the funds, the Committee expects the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration to continue operation of West Virginia's weather stations at current levels. The Committee also expects NOAA to maintain the agricultural weather, fire weather, and other weather and flash-flood warning programs as they affect West Virginia at the fiscal year 1989 levels and to continue to accelerate the implementation of the integrated flood observing and warning system [IFLOWS] in West Virginia and surrounding States. The Committee wishes to be kept fully informed of the remaining milestones needed to complete the West Virginia portions of the IFLOWS system.

In the interest of aviation safety, the Committee has included the necessary funding in the NOAA account to reopen the federally contracted weather observation stations at Stampede Pass, WA, Blue Canyon, OR, and Sexton Summit, OR, closed between December 30, 1988 and April 1, 1989, at the same level of service and hours of operation as on December 29, 1988. The Committee urges NOAA not to close or reduce the hours of operation of such stations until automated equipment is provided that will provide the same level of service as a full-time human weather observer.

The Committee recommendation reflects approval of the cyclical program reductions totaling $119,699,000 proposed in the budget request for the polar orbiting and GOES satellite programs and NOAA port.

The Committee recommends $44,400,000 for the Landsat system, of which $34,900,000 is for the continued construction of Landsat 6 and $9,500,000 is for the expenses associated with the continued operation of Landsats 4 and 5. The amount provided for the operational expenses of Landsats 4 and 5 is based on the continued availability and level of Landsat imagery during the first 6 months of fiscal year 1990. If Landsats 4 and 5 continue to operate for a longer period of time, then NOAA will need to make suitable financial arrangements.

The amount recommended provides $3,500,000 for the further consolidation of NOAA's Washington offices in the Silver Spring, MD, Metro Building. This amount includes $750,000 for payment to the General Services Administration for the funds advanced by the Federal buildings fund for furniture for NOAA's new offices. The Committee expects a like amount to be budgeted for 1991.

The Committee is aware of NOAA's apparent reluctance to release appropriated funds in fiscal year 1989 for the Hawaii stock management plan, the Asian aquaculture exchanges, and Mahi Mahi technology research, not contained in the President's budget that have been identified in the statement of managers accompanying conference reports for recent appropriations acts. The Committee has also noted the obvious lack of such reluctance for apportioning funds requested in the President's budget. Therefore, the Committee directs NOAA to expedite the obligation of funds for the Hawaii stock management plan, the Asian aquaculture exchanges, and Mahi Mahi technology research, and in doing so, carry out the congressional intent of appropriations acts. Further, the Committee mandates that NOAA cease the apparent discrimination exhibited against congressionally funded and supported initiatives.

The Committee has included bill language to provide that administrative costs associated with the Saltonstall/Kennedy fund grant program be derived from receipts in the fund.

COAL INDUSTRY HEALTH BENEFIT STABILIZATION ACT OF 1989

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, on Friday, I introduced, along with my distinguished senior colleague from West Virginia, Senator BYRD, and the distinguished Senators from Pennsylvania, Senator HEINZ and Senator SPECTER, the Coal Industry Health Benefit Stabilization Act of 1989.

This legislation is needed to help address an emergency. It is needed to help ensure the financial condition of the health benefits program for retired coal miners. Simply put, what this bill does is authorize transfers of surplus funds from the 1950 United Mine Workers of America [UMWA] pension trust to the UMWA benefit trusts. The benefit trusts provide health benefits to 125,000 beneficiaries, with the majority of retirements from companies which are no longer in the coal business.

In recent years, due to such causes as rapidly escalating health care costs, the two UMWA health benefit funds have experienced serious financial difficulties. The 1950 fund has a $54 million deficit and the other is expected to be in deficit within weeks. As a consequence, payments to doctors, hospitals, and pharmacies are overdue by as much as 60 days.

We face the possibility of a breakdown of the health care system for retired miners. In West Virginia alone, there are approximately 32,000 UMWA pensioners who rely on the UMWA funds for health care. The funds contribute many millions of dollars to the West Virginia economy, and sustain the efforts of many health care practitioners and organizations. If allowed to continue unchecked, the financial difficulties in the UMWA health funds could cripple health care delivery in West Virginia and in the coal counties of States like Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

In contrast with the health funds, the 1950 pension fund has a substantial surplus, according to independent actuaries who have reviewed the financial condition of the fund. The bill would authorize use of the surplus pension funds to help repair the financial condition of the health funds. However, under the bill, the decision to transfer funds could only be made and the precise amount of surplus to be transferred would be determined through a joint decision of the UMWA and the Bituminous Coal Operators' Association [BCOA]. This is a critical point because it means that union representatives will have coequal participation and veto power.

The pension and health funds are supported financially by companies that have participated in the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement, which has been renegotiated periodically by the BCOA and the UMWA. The BCOA and UMWA have viewed the imminent health fund crisis with growing concern. After discussions between the BCOA and the UMWA, they asked me to introduce the present legislation, which they fully support. In order to help strengthen the financial basis of the funds, the legislation not only authorizes the transfers referred to before. It also provides statutory reinforcement for the contractual and other obligations of the companies regarding contributions to the retiree health funds. In this way, the security of each contributor is enhanced by the knowledge that the responsibilities of all contributors will be met.

Mr. President, many of our colleagues are aware that the funding of retiree health care throughout American industry is receiving increasing attention. It may be that in the next decade there will be a major, comprehensive revision of the way we approach the funding of retiree health care in this country. But the coal industry cannot wait for the long run. It faces an emergency today. That is why legislation specifically for the coal industry is required.

Furthermore, it should be understood that action to address the special needs of retirees in the coal industry is in keeping with the longstanding special relationship among the coal miners, coal operators, and the Federal Government. The UMWA pension and health funds were created as a result of discussions between President Truman's Secretary of the Interior and the UMWA in 1946, when the Federal Government was operating the country's bituminous coal mines. An early trustee of the funds was the late distinguished Republican leader, Senator Styles Bridges of New Hampshire.

The 1946 agreement establishing the funds required a survey of medical conditions in the coal fields and the retiree health program set to work responding to conditions the report found deplorable. Among other things, the program established hospitals and a rehabilitation program that combed the coal fields to identify the thousands of miners who had been crippled, with broken backs and severed limbs. At rehabilitation centers, they received the best treatment that modern medicine could offer. They were fitted with artificial limbs and received extensive physicial therapy and occupational and vocational training. This unique program provided renewed hope for many disabled coal miners who, until then, had no income and no expectation of ever again becoming productive members of society.

The program under the health fund also made great strides for improvement of overall medical care in coal mining communities. For example, the average age of a coal miner at death in 1947 was 10 years less than the national average for males. By 1946, it was 4 years more than the national average. The longevity of miners had increased by a remarkable 30 percent. Today, the UMWA health and pension funds pay many millions of dollars in benefits to over 125,000 beneficiaries in States from California to West Virginia.

Mr. President, we have come too far and the road has been too long, for us to turn our backs on this record of achievement. The successes for health care in the coal fields are an achievement of which all Americans can be proud. They provide a record of decency and of support for human dignity that is a model for the world. But for some years now, the structure that brought us these achievements has been eroding, and it is now in great jeopardy. We must act.

For over 100 years and more, coal miners have played a critical role in building this country from a small agricultural nation into a great industrial power. Our country was built on the backs of miners, who often paid with their health and their lives so the rest of us could enjoy the fruits of 20th century prosperity. Most Americans understand this and the importance of addressing the special needs of our coal communities.

Occasionally, however, I hear it said that because of rising health care costs or international competition, we must reverse course. But an effort to turn the clock back on our progress in industrial conditions is sadly misguided. Industrial strength can only rest on a foundation of mutual respect and mutual support. Continuous industrial chaos and recriminations are a recipe for industrial decline as well as for erosion of human dignity—a lesson most Americans learned long ago.

A decade of generally good coal industry labor relations has recently been disrupted by a bitter strike involving one company, bringing economic devastation to West Virginia and neighboring States. Adding to the difficulties for the health funds caused by inflationary trends, the shocking cutoff of health benefits and contributions viewed as a tool of economic conflict has touched off a firestorm. Fear and frustration regarding the eroding condition of the retiree health care system have fanned the flames of this conflict. It is a conflagration that threatens to spread throughout the industry, engulfing employers and employees alike, threatening to destroy the well-being of thousands and the position of the U.S. coal industry in global markets.

It was, in part, to avoid this kind of industrial chaos that coal industry labor relations were established forty years ago on the rock of the UMWA pension and health trust funds. If that rock is allowed to crumble, the consequences will be felt far beyond the retired miners whose health benefits are in jeopardy. The support for the present legislation by the BCOA as well as the UMWA reflects the widespread recognition of these facts throughout the industry.

In helping to preserve the rights of retirees, this bill does not address the deficits in the UMWA health funds through Government spending. On the contrary, because of the operation of the tax laws, I expect this bill to have a positive impact on the budget. What the miners ask for is the authority to use money from their own pension fund to address the deficits in their health funds.

The long-term future of retiree health care in American industry, including the coal industry, will not be solved today or by this bill. To do that, we must address difficut long-term issues of health care costs, industrial policy, and employment. Therefore, securing the long-term future of retiree health care will require persistent effort over many years. It is an effort that must be a top priority on our national agenda. It is an effort in which I intend to be actively involved.

But we also have a job to do today, and that is to prevent the imminent collapse of the coal industry retiree health care system. We need to provide increased certainty that the health care needs of affected retired miners and their families will be met. We cannot forsake the people who have been the backbone of America's coal industry, especially those in their twilight years who have special medical needs. We must continue to ensure that the promise of good health care for retired miners is kept.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

COAL INDUSTRY HEALTH BENEFIT STABILIZATION ACT OF 1989

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of S. 1708, the Coal Industry Health Benefit Stabilization Act of 1989, which has been introduced by my fellow Senator from West Virginia, Senator ROCKEFELLER. I believe this legislation is of critical importance, as it will help restore and stabilize the financial condition of the retired employee health benefit funds of the bituminous coal industry.

Two collectively bargained multiemployer trust funds currently provide medical benefits for approximately 130,000 retired coal workers. The 1950 benefit plan covers those employees who retired prior to 1976. This plan is currently in deficit by approximately $54 million. The 1974 benefit plan covers those employees who retired after 1976 and, at least according to its original design, whose former employers are no longer in business. Although currently in balance, this plan is projected to fall into deficit by the end of the year.

To allow these plans to founder would, I believe, be a tragedy for the retirees involved, and a shortsighted error on our part. We all know how the absence of adequate or affordable medical insurance is a growing national problem. We read stories almost daily of the millions of Americans who are without medical coverage. And we know that because of gaping holes in our insurance system, the cost of providing care to those without medical coverage often falls upon the back of the American taxpayer.

We are too compassionate, and rightly so, as a nation and as individuals, to simply deny medical care to those among us who, often for reasons entirely beyond their control, lack the financial resources to provide adequate medical care for themselves. Therefore, we would be foolish to let pass any opportunity to shore up those private insurance systems which provide much needed medical coverage to our retired citizens.

Today, just such an opportunity confronts us. The two multiemployer health plans which provide medical care for more than 100,000 retired coal workers are facing a bleak future. The financial stability of these plans has been seriously weakened by a combination of rapidly rising health care costs, the addition of more and more beneficiaries, and a shrinking contribution base. As a result, one plan is already in deficit, while the other is rapidly approaching a deficit situation.

Today, we have an opportunity to ensure that these deficits do not undermine the long-term survival of the 1950 and the 1974 benefit plans. The solution offered in this legislation is a relatively simple one. First, the bill authorizes the transfer of surplus funds from the 1950 pension plan to the two financially troubled health benefit plans. Second, the bill prevents companies who were once participants in these multiemployer plans and who remain in business today from effectively dumping responsibility for continued health care coverage on those firms who continue to contribute to these multiemployer plans.

The 1950 pension plan is a closed plan, covering only those individuals who retired before 1976. As such, its future liabilities and obligations can be reliably and precisely estimated. As a result of a past policy of rapid funding and conservative actuarial assumptions, the 1950 pension plan has accumulated a substantial surplus. With the assets of this pension plan safely invested in a dedicated bond portfolio, this surplus can be safely transferred without lessening, in any way, the ability of the plan to pay future pension benefits.

Without a transfer of funds from the 1950 pension plan to the two struggling benefit trusts, the assessments for the 1950 and 1974 health funds would have to be raised from a combined total of $2.25 per hour worked by a covered employee to $3.12 per hour—an increase of nearly 40 percent. I believe, however, an increase of that magnitude would impose such an onerous burden on the employers involved as to be counterproductive, in the long run, in terms of enhancing the financial stability of the health plans.

While authorizing a transfer of funds from the 1950 pension plan will help ease the immediate and pressing financial problems confronting the two medical benefit plans, an equally important second step taken in this bill is to require companies who had an obligation to contribute to one of the health plans on January 1, 1988, to continue making contributions as long as a national collective bargaining agreement remains in effect. The 1974 benefit plan was established for the purpose of providing health benefits for orphan retirees, those retired workers whose former employers have since ceased operating. It was not created to provide a way for companies who are still in business to transfer the health insurance costs of their retirees to other companies within the coal industry.

The provisions of this bill that effectively prohibit employees from dumping responsibility for health benefits for their retirees on the industrywide 1975 health plan are supported by both labor and management. This legislation has been crafted with the cooperation and support of those coal companies who have continued to contribute to the industry's multiemployer benefits plans, thereby conscientiously upholding commitments previously made to their retirees.

Finally, Mr. President, I would note that no costs are imposed on American taxpayers by this bill. To the contrary, to the extent that tax-deductible contributions might otherwise have to be significantly increased to put these health benefit plans back on sound financial ground, a transfer of funds from the 1950 pension plan would actually prevent a loss in revenues to the Federal Government. While my support for this legislation is in no way motivated by its positive revenue effect, I believe it is important to note the absence of any negative revenue effect.

Mr. President, this is a good bill. It is a timely bill, and I would hope that the Senate will act upon it quickly. I commend my colleague and friend from West Virginia for the work he has done in putting together this legislation. Let us now move forward to preserve and strengthen the coal industry's unique privately funded program for providing health care coverage to its retirees.

UNITED STATES-CUBA COOPERATION ON NARCOTICS IS IN OUR NATIONAL INTEREST

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, in mid-June when the Cuban Government arrested General Ochoa on charges of narcotics trafficking, I issued a statement recognizing Cuba's action. I also reiterated that during my meeting with President Castro last November we discussed the possibilities of cooperation between the United States Coast Guard and the Cuban Boarder Patrol on narcotics interdiction. Fidel Castro responded positively to this as he did to Congressman RANGEL during the visit which followed mine.

I am well aware that various interpretations are being given to the Cuban government's quick and decisive actions as shown by the execution of General Ochoa and other high ranking military and internal security officials. We must not ignore the fact that the Castro government has moved vigorously against Cuban officials involved in narcotics trafficking. Most importantly, Fidel Castro in early July stated the need for communication between the United States and Cuba to combat the common foe of narcotics.

We must not let this opportunity pass. If indeed we are waging a serious war against drugs, United States-Cuba cooperation should be an important component. As I stated during a Foreign Relations Subcommittee hearing on United States-Cuba narcotics issues, we should move forward on discussions with the Cubans on narcotics cooperation. This cooperation with the Coast Guard would serve the best interests of the United States.

Mr. President, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues the op ed piece written by respected journalist Tad Szulc which appeared in the New York Times during the August recess. Mr. Szulc, who recently wrote a critical biography of Fidel Castro, also believes that we should be talking to the Cubans about narcotics cooperation. He states, "Common sense as well as cynical self-interest seem to dictate full-fledged talks with Cuba on the desperately urgent matter of drug trafficking."

I ask unanimous consent that the Szulc piece be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the piece was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Aug. 9, 1989]

JOIN WITH CASTRO TO FIGHT DRUGS

(By Tad Szulc)

WASHINGTON.—For reasons that may be cynical and self-serving, Cuba's President Fidel Castro has formally invited the United States—for the first time—to join his regime in the "common battle" against drug smuggling. For reasons of American national interest, which likewise often requires self-serving cynicism, the Bush Administration would be well advised to at once take Mr. Castro at his word instead of responding with worn out legalisms and ideological foot-dragging.

That the Cuban leader has only now offered to cooperate with U.S. authorities in helping to stem the ever-rising flow of narcotics to this country across the Caribbean from South America is unquestionably the immediate result of the shocking discoveries that he says he made in April—that 14 of his top officials were part of the Colombian Medellin Cartel contraband ring.

In the most dramatic display of Castro power in 30 years, four of them, including the former commander in chief of Cuban troops in Angola, who was regarded as a national hero, were executed last month. Many others (among them, the Interior Minister) were arrested, and others were fired and disgraced in the still continuing purge.

Whether Mr. Castro, as many observers suspect, used the drug and corruption scandal to smash a parallel political conspiracy against his rule is a fascinating but separate subject. So is the reality that his economy is in such disastrous straits that he needs quick access to American trade and tourism.

What should concern the U.S. at this juncture is Havana's belated willingness to work with American law enforcement agencies in trying to control drug smuggling, in the light of fresh evidence that use of cocaine-derived crack at home is at record levels.

The Administration knows that the Cubans have the means, ranging from their MIG-23 jet fighters to their high-speed naval patrol boats, their electronic listening and radar installations and their Latin American intelligence network, to cripple the illegal traffic if they so desire. Cuba lies astride the main smuggling routes from Colombia to the eastern U.S. and smugglers' small aircraft found it safe and convenient to drop drug cargoes near the island for recovery by fast boats.

The Cuban route was vital because the U.S. has effectively closed off Bahamian air space. Transfer to boats is necessary since smugglers' planes are virtually precluded by U.S. air defenses from reaching the mainland.

According to the Drug Enforcement Administration, 39 such drops were spotted in the first half of 1989, when the Cubans were looking the other way. But this practice stopped instantly in June after Mr. Castro announced that he would have the contrabandists' planes shot down. He said in a speech on July 9 that illegal overflights of the Cuban territory were "intolerable," that Cuba and the U.S. "really have to discuss how to manage such things" and that "we have to arrange a form of communication between the U.S. and Cuba in this common battle."

The Administration's reaction was simply that it was prepared to "put Cuba to the test." Congressional testimony by a senior State Department official made it clear that the U.S. had no intention of entering into actual negotiations with the Cubans, who should not expect any political rewards no matter what they did in drug interdiction.

This stance was presumably based on the declaration last March by Secretary of State James Baker. In a confidential memorandum to all U.S. diplomatic posts abroad, Mr. Baker said that "no modification of U.S. policy is contemplated in the absence of significant changes in Cuban repression at home and unacceptable behavior abroad inimical to U.S. interest." Issued shortly before Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev visited the island, and intended as an ideological pronouncement, the memo added that "Cuba has not demonstrated a serious intent in improving relations."

Washington's response to Mr. Castro reaffirmed the Baker position, but it raised the crucial question of what really constitutes negotiations. Thus, in rejecting Mr. Castro's idea of "discussing" the best way of controlling drug traffic—done most likely to avoid being pushed into possible political negotiations and pressures for "improving relations"—the U.S. appeared to apply confusing standards.

Common sense as well as cynical self-interest seem to dictate full-fledged talks with Cuba on the desperately urgent matter of drug trafficking. A quid pro quo in the form of broader political talks may open useful new horizons for future relations at a time when the Castro revolution is clearly at a dramatic crossroads.

Cuba's withdrawal from Angola was won through international negotiations with Cuban participation, directed by the U.S., and now there is a Central American settlement. In the past, successful agreements were reached directly in preventing aerial hijacking and on immigration problems.

So what does the Administration do at this critical moment in the American war against drugs? It chooses to insist as a precondition on the extradition of such fugitives as the indicted financier Robert Vesco and Cuban officials indicted by U.S. grand juries for drug smuggling. This is not creative policy.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order previously entered the Senate will go into executive session to consider the nomination of Joseph Zappala, of Florida, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Spain.

The clerk will state the nomination.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph Zappala, of Florida, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Spain.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS].

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, the nomination of Joseph Zappala to be Ambassador to Spain was submitted by President Bush to the Senate on May 2, 1989. On the same day, the nomination was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Joseph Zappala is one of Florida's leading businessmen, with an extensive record of community service in areas ranging from adolescent drug abuse and mental retardation to the organization of political life.

Mr. Zappala is the chairman and chief executive officer of Joseph Zappala & Associates, an investment and land development company based in St. Petersburg, FL. This company has been responsible for the construction of millions of square feet of quality and award-winning projects throughout Florida, with values totaling hundreds of millions of dollars. Through this company, Mr. Zappala developed the first condominiums in Florida, and has been referred to as the "Grandfather of Condominiums." Indeed, he has been responsible for the construction and sale of thousands of single-family residential units and of numerous office and industrial buildings. In the course of his work and his philantrophic activities abroad, he has visited more than 40 countries.

In addition, to his land development and investment business, Mr. Zappala is the chairman of Home Town Investors Inc., which operates a large health care facility in St. Petersburg, FL. Mr. Zappala is the owner and chairman of Tucson Greyhound Park in Tucson, AZ. He also sits on the board of directors of First Union National Bank, and was previously chairman of the board of the First National Bank of Seminole in Pinellas County, FL, a bank which he founded.

Mr. Zappala's philanthropic activities have been numerous. Mr. Zappala serves as president of STRAIGHT, Inc., a drug treatment and rehabilitation program for adolescents with offices from California to Florida. Privately funded, STRAIGHT is the largest drug treatment program for adolescents in the country. More than 10,000 young people have passed through this program, with a total impact upon families of a much higher multiple. In some cases, a patient takes as long as a year in the program. Mr. Zappala also serves on the board of the College of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Florida in Gainesville, FL and on the board of the Police Athletic League. He is the past chairman of the Pinellas Association for Retarded Children [PARC], an organization which tripled in size under his direction. He is also one of the founders of his local community's opera company.

Mr. Zappala's civic action has also extended to the promotion of political activity among citizens, both through political organization and through fundraising. These activities deserve special notice. He has had a long personal relationship with George Bush. He was active both nationally and statewide on behalf of the George Bush for President campaign, dating as far back as 1979. In that year, Mr. Zappala was the finance cochairman in the Pinellas County, FL, of the first George Bush for President campaign. He cochaired the first Florida fundraiser for the Bush campaign in this year as well. Mr. Zappala was also among the State finance chairmen who met in Chicago with the candidate and then campaign manager, Jim Baker, to assist in establishing one of Mr. Bush's first national fundraising efforts. Mr. Zappala also assisted with fundraising for the Fund for America's Future, a multicandidate political action committee established by Mr. Bush in 1985.

After the commencement of the 1988 George Bush for President campaign, Mr. Zappala served prominently on the National Steering Committee and National Finance Committee as cochairman of the Republican National Committee's Team 100. He currently serves as the national cochairman of finance for the American Bicentennial Presidential Inaugural and as chairman of the Florida Victory Committee.

Mr. Zappala's fundraising talents have also been used on behalf of many religious and charitable organizations throughout the United States. He has received numerous awards, including a prestigious Florida State award for hiring handicapped workers. Mr. Zappala was awarded the Ben Gurion Award, the prestigious Tree of Life Award, and the Gates of Jerusalem Award in 1983 for his internationally recognized commitment to the State of Israel. The Tree of Life Award was personally presented to him by Mrs. Anwar Sadat. This year a park is being named in his honor on the Peace Road between Egypt and Israel.

Mr. Zappala, 55, attended the New York Institute of Finance. He is a native of New York and came to Florida as a young man to begin a career in real estate. He and his wife Carole have four daughters, Kimberly, Valerie, Joanne, and Andrea.

COMMITTEE ACTION

The Committee on Foreign Relations held a hearing on the Zappala nomination on June 8, 1989. The committee considered the nomination on June 20, 1989, but at the request of Senator SARBANES, action was not concluded. The committee considered the nomination again on July 25, 1989, and ordered the nomination reported favorably by a vote of 10 to 9. Voting in the affirmative were Senators HELMS, LUGAR, KASSENBAUM, BOSCHWITZ, PRESSLER, MURKOWSKI, MCCONNELL, HUMPHREY, MACK, and ROBB. Voting in the negative were Senators BIDEN, SARBANES, CRANSTON, DODD, KERRY, SIMON, SANFORD, MOYNIHAN, and PELL.

1980 FOREIGN SERVICE ACT

During consideration of the nomination the distinguished Senator from Maryland, Mr. SARBANES, and others raised a number of questions relating to the propriety of the President in appointing as Ambassador a personal friend who had been involved politically in supporting his nomination. Opponents quoted section 304 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 as follows:

SEC. 304. APPOINTMENT OF CHIEFS OF MISSION.—(a)(1) An individual appointed or assigned to be a chief of mission should possess clearly demonstrated competence to perform the duties of a chief of mission, including, to the maximum extend practicable, a useful knowledge of the principal language or dialect of the country in which the individual is to serve, and knowledge and understanding of the history, the culture, the economic and political institutions and the interest of that country and its people.

(2) Given the qualifications specified in paragraph (1), positions as chief of mission should normally be accorded to career members of the Service, though circumstances will warrant appointments from time to time of qualified individuals who are not career members of the Service.

(3) Contributions to political campaigns should not be a factor in the appointment of an individual as a chief of mission.

Opponents suggested that President Bush was abusing the nomination process by appointing nominees who were qualified only by the donation of large political contributions, instead of maximizing the number of nominees drawn from the Foreign Service.

The committee rejected that argument.

In the first place, the language of section 304 is only hortatory, and not mandatory. In each clause the operative verb is "should." In other words, section 304 hardly does more than express the sense of Congress, and certainly cannot be construed as a direct command or prohibition.

Second, no statute can limit a Presidential power specified in the Constitution. Article II, section 2, states:

He [the President] shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls. * * * and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

Clearly, ambassadors, public ministers, and consuls are offices created by the Constitution, while other appointments not mentioned are only creatures of law. Thus the law can define and prescribe such lesser offices as Secretary of State and appointments in the ranks of the Foreign Service, but it cannot circumscribe the qualifications of ambassadors. An ambassadorial appointment is a constitutional office, and is therefore legally superior to offices created by law, such as the ones just noted. No law can mandate the qualifications of ambassadors, nor require them to be appointed from a specified class of citizens.

Section 304, therefore, is a standard which does not bind the President, and has only as much authority as any other personal standard which a Senator may consider, implicitly or explicitly, in exercising his or her obligation advice and consent under the Constitution.

QUALIFICATIONS

Nevertheless, Mr. President, Mr. Zappala meets any reasonable interpretation of the hortatory standards of section 304. Mr. Zappala's extensive career as a businessman, financier, philanthropist, and political organizer has given him excellent skills as a negotiator, advocate, manager, and coalition builder—in other words, he has a demonstrated record in the four key areas which must be mastered by any diplomat. In his numerous enterprises, he has been responsible for the well-being and payrolls of over 1,000 employees, and has won awards for his employee practices. Since a large Embassy staff, such as the one in Spain, typically includes more than 100 employees from several agencies, the committee believes that he will be well-prepared for the management problems he will face.

It was also alleged against Mr. Zappala that he was deficient in language skills since he did not know Spanish. This issue has been a matter of concern to the committee for many years. Indeed, in hearings held last fall before this committee, an official State Department study was cited which showed that, in the period 1983 to 1985, 21 percent of Foreign Services officers were promoted into the Senior Foreign Service "despite the fact that they were not qualified at level 3 in any language." Then Under Secretary of State for Management, Mr. Ronald I. Spiers, stated that only three-quarters of Foreign Service Officers meet the full language competency requirements. Yet the Foreign Service manual calls for officers entering the Senior Foreign Service to have a tested 3/3 level proficiency in two foreign languages. Moreover, as a practical matter, Mr. Spiers observed that an ambassador could not function fully in a foreign language unless he or she were at the 4/4 level of proficiency, which few attain.

Mr. Zappala readily acknowledged his deficiency in Spanish, and enrolled in Spanish language training courses. However, he has been fluent in Italian all of his life. Spanish and Italian are related Romance languages. They have similar grammatical and rhetorical structures. They have the common bond of a similar vocabulary, and transferable language skills. Therefore it is not surprising that Mr. Zappala is already reasonably proficient in Spanish.

With regard to the requirement for an understanding of the problems of the history, the culture, the economic and political institutions of the country, it should be noted that Mr. Zappala will be going to Spain in a period during which relations with Spain have cooled under previous Ambassadors. Some observers have felt that previous Ambassadors have spent too much time supporting and building up relationships with left-of-center political forces in Spain to the detriment of building coalitions with political forces more oriented toward strong NATO participation and United States partnership. Under detailed questioning from Senator SARBANES during the nomination hearing, Mr. Zappala demonstrated an ample knowledge of recent negotiations and the removal of United States forces formerly based in Spain.

Moreover, Spain has recently emerged as a key entry point for narcotics from Colombia entering Europe. Mr. Zappala's intensive work with drug-rehabilitation programs should make him especially sensitive to working with Spain on this problem.

Indeed, a few days ago the Spanish Foreign Minister, Francisco Fernandez Ordonez, welcomed the nomination of Mr. Zappala in an interview in the Spanish press. He stated that Mr. Zappala, "is a political ambassador, who is a great friend of President Bush, and who, sincerely, I think, can be very useful for the new phase of our bilateral relations. A person in the confidence of President Bush can be very useful, sincerely, I believe so."

CAREER VS. NONCAREER APPOINTMENTS

During the course of debate, the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES] stated concerns that President Bush, in his view, was nominating a disproportionate number of persons who were not members of the career Foreign Service.

Specificially, the Senator stated that the President had nominated only 14 career members of the Foreign Service to be Ambassadors, as opposed to 30 noncareer nominees. He stated that this was a proportion of 32 percent career, versus 68 percent noncareer—a virtual reversal of past practice.

However, it was subsequently pointed out that President Bush had made a decision to allow sitting career Ambassadors to finish out their 3-year terms, while recalling immediately most sitting noncareer Ambassadors. Under this count, at the time the Senator spoke, President Bush had 92 career Ambassadors in place or proposed, and a total of 49 noncareer Ambassadors in place or proposed. Thus, the ratio was in actuality 65 percent career, versus 35 percent noncareer.

It should be stated that statistics on career vs. noncareer Ambassadors vary according to the month. The exact percentages change as Ambassadors are nominated, confirmed, resign, or are recalled. The variations from month to month or administration to administration are not significant. Statistics supplied by the Department of State show that the current ratio in the Bush administration, for example, compares favorably to ratios in the Kennedy administration. There is nothing to suggest that, when the current sitting career Ambassadors are replaced at the end of their respective terms, the ratios will be any different from historic practice.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an annual "snapshot" of such ratios for each year back to 1961 be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, finally, a word should be added about the exhortation in section 304 which urges that ambassadorial appointments "should normally be accorded to career members of the Service." The committee notes that this recommendation merely articulates the practice of the past three decades. Nevertheless, there is no constitutional requirement, and there can be no legal requirement, that the President must follow any particular ratio of appointments, or even that he must take any nominees whatsoever from the Foreign Service.

An ambiguity arises from the fact that an Ambassador chosen from the career services really holds two Presidential appointments simultaneously. He or she is primarily holding a constitutional appointment, under which the President has an absolute right to nominate any person he chooses; his or her appointment in the Foreign Service is not a constitutionally mandated appointment, but an appointment under law passed by Congress pursuant to congressional powers. Thus the rank of Ambassador, as noted above, is legally superior in force and dignity to even the highest rank of the Foreign Service itself. When the President chooses a Foreign Service officer to be an Ambassador at the same time, he confers an additional honor on the nominee in addition to the honors which such a nominee already holds.

The Foreign Service is composed of able, dedicated men and women who have devoted their careers to the pursuit of public service and foreign policy. No country could be without the services of a distinguished and elite corps of skillful and experienced professionals. Every modern President has responded to this need by choosing the majority of Ambassadors from among the ranks of the Foreign Service.

Nevertheless, foreign policy is not a science, but an art. A specific President's foreign policy will be shaped not only by the events and opportunities which are offered, but also by the President's moral and philosophical analysis of the options available, and by the ability to rally public support. For that reason, all Presidents have also included within the ranks of their Ambassadors some of their key political advisers and supporters. Although other countries may rely almost entirely on a professional, technical corps of diplomats, no other country in the world has our practical systems of separation of powers and checks and balances. For this reason, U.S. Presidents always have, and always will, leaven their diplomacy by bringing in talented noncareer professionals.

Diplomacy cannot be the private preserve of a closed foreign policy establishment, whether governmental or nongovernmental. It is the very essence of democracy to be open to new ideas and new experiences. The roster of noncareer Ambassadors who have made outstanding contributions to our diplomacy is too long to tally. Moreover, the vast proportion of them never had diplomatic or foreign relations training. The committee believes that the United States makes an important statement when it sends such distinguished citizens of accomplishment abroad as Ambassadors.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. President, it was intimated during the debate that Mr. Zappala was appointed solely because of political contributions. In the committee's opinion, the qualifications of Mr. Zappala already enumerated speak for themselves, and make the question of political contributions irrelevant. Moreover, the public disclosure forms clearly indicate that Mr. Zappala made no personal political contributions whatsoever to the George Bush campaign in 1988.

However, Mr. Zappala has made substantial contributions to many other political campaigns as may be seen on the public disclosure forms. Indeed, the width and depth of such contribution, to a wide variety of candidates, shows clearly Mr. Zappala's eager commitment to our democracy. The U.S. Supreme Court has said that political contributions are an expression of protected speech under the first amendment; Mr. Zappala has exercised that right vigorously and properly.

Moreover, Mr. Zappala has done more than support a wide variety of political campaigns. He has gone out and encouraged his fellow citizens to do so as well. He has organized committees, directed strategies to involve thousands of others in the political process, and provided invaluable advice to the candidates of his choice. The committee recognizes that few Senators would be Members of this body without the dedicated and distinguished assistance of supporters like Joseph Zappala. The committee does not believe that notable civic action should be a bar to public service as an Ambassador.

Finally, Mr. Zappala's political activity is a very important part of the story of our democratic system. Fellow democracies such as Spain will recognize the important part that such activities play in the preservation of freedom, and will appreciate the insights which his experience will give to their own political process. We honor our allies when we share with them persons whom we ourselves value so highly, and who are so important to the dialog of liberty.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, the Senate will be taking up today and tomorrow one of its very important responsibilities under the Constitution, and that is to give or withhold its consent to Ambassadors nominated by the President.

This is a constitutional provision that has been present since the founding of the Republic, and it is one that I take seriously. It seems to me there has been a tendency over the years, perhaps, to permit Senate scrutiny of nominees, as they come before us, to slip, that is to start down the slippery slope, and therefore to place in some jeopardy the effectiveness of U.S. diplomatic representation abroad.

It is that concern which has led to the issue that is now before the Senate. It is that concern which led to a very close vote in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which reported the nomination of Joseph Zappala to be United States Ambassador to Spain, on a vote of 10 to 9. So the nomination comes to the floor of the Senate by the very narrowest of margins.

The issue here is to some extent reflected in newspaper editorials from around the country, and I would like very quickly to read the titles of some of these editorials, because I think they give a sense of perhaps what the issue is before us. "Anyone For Ambassador." "Amateurs Abroad." "Send the Best Abroad?" "Embassies for Sale." "Trivializing Ambassadors"—and so forth and so on.

Mr. President, what I want to try to do here this afternoon for a reasonable period of time is to look at this issue in a somewhat broader context, and then narrow it down to this particular nomination, to Spain and this particular nominee.

The first thing I want to address is the assertion sometimes made that the President is entitled to his nominee, that the Ambassador simply is the President's person, and the President can pick whoever he wants.

That is not what our constitutional system provides for. In fact, the appointment power is a very cogent example of our constitutional system, and one of "separated institutions sharing powers," in the very apt phrase of Prof. Richard Neustadt. Neustadt, who has written well and frequently on the separation of powers and the balance of powers, perceives our Constitution as establishing separate institutions sharing power. That is very clear in this instance. Article II, section 2 of the Constitution provides explicitly that the President is "to nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint Ambassadors."

In so certifying, the Founding Fathers reinforced the fundamental system of institutional checks and balances and also underscored the importance of America's representation abroad.

The reasons for requiring Senate advice and consent to Presidential nominations were spelled out by Alexander Hamilton in the Federalist Papers. As we all know, Hamilton, Jay, and Madison wrote the Federalist Papers as an argument to the Nation at the time, as persuasive brief in support of verification of the Constitution, as formulated in Philadelphia in the summer of 1787, by the appropriate number of States, to go into effect and become the governing charter of this Republic.

In the Federalist Papers, in Federalist No. 76, Hamilton states in the course of discussing the Senate power:

> To what purpose then require the cooperation of the Senate? I answer that the necessity of their concurrence would have a powerful, though in general a silent operation. It would be an excellent check upon a spirit of favoritism in the President and would tend greatly to prevent the appointment of unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment or from a view to popularity.

It is interesting that, in contrast to the principle set forth above, one of the arguments advanced is that the President should have a free rein in appointing ambassadors, namely, that they are personal friends of the President. Political loyalty is often mentioned in this connection, and of course in each instance behind that lies very large campaign contributions, as I will shortly seek to show.

It is interesting that Hamilton, in discussing why the Senate was given this power of advice and consent, said it would tend greatly to prevent the appointment of unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity.

We operate not only under a constitutional mandate, but the Senate in granting or withholding its advice or consent also needs to take account of the statutory criteria with respect to the appointment of ambassadors.

Section 304 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 sets out the following standards for the appointment of chiefs of mission:

> An individual appointed or assigned to a chief of mission should possess clearly demonstrated competence to perform the duties of a chief of mission including, to the maximum extent practicable, a useful knowledge of the principal language or dialect of the country in which the individual is to serve, knowledge and understanding of the history, the culture, the economic and political institutions, and the interest of that country and its people.

The act then goes on to make these criteria applicable to all nominees to ambassadorial positions whether career or noncareer, providing that nominations will normally be made from the career service while acknowledging that circumstances will warrant appointments from time to time of qualified individuals who are not career members of the service. The statute further stipulates, and I want to underscore this language:

Contributions to political campaigns should not be a factor in the appointment of an individual as chief of mission.

One of the things that has taken place thus far in the Bush administration with respect to ambassadorial nominations is a disturbing pattern of nominees from outside the career service who lack any evident qualifications for the serious ambassadorial responsibilities they propose to undertake. I want to make very clear that the appointment of some noncareer ambassadors is in itself neither unusual nor objectionable and can, on occasion, serve important national interests. But in this instance there has been a marked shift in the percentage of nominees who are being drawn from the noncareer service and there has also been, I submit, a marked lowering of the dimensions of quality and experience that noncareer ambassadors bring to these appointments.

In previous administrations many of the noncareer ambassadors, like some of those nominated this year, brought to their assignments relevant education, professional associations or board memberships, language skills, experience in some aspect of international affairs, and commitment to public service.

Such nominations, both in the past and this year, in those instances in which these practical factors are present, appear to rest on valid reasons over and above political involvement and campaign contributions and money raising.

This year, however, the Senate has been asked to approve the nomination of an unusual number of ambassadorial nominees lacking serious qualifications. Close inspection of the résumés submitted to the Senate leads to the conclusion that in too many cases large donations to political campaigns or successful fundraising activity are the only reason for the nomination.

Indeed, in direct conflict with the Foreign Service Act that I quoted earlier which provides that political contributions should not be a factor in ambassadorial appointments, this year the Senate in numerous cases has been confronted with nominees who demonstrably have no qualifications other than large campaign donations.

Furthermore, this practice has deteriorated to the point where in some instances the Presidential certification of demonstrated competence required with each nomination explicitly sets forth such political involvement.

Under this law a certification of demonstrated competence must be submitted to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with respect to the appointment of each Ambassador. The statute, of course, says that political contributions are not to be a factor, and yet we have been receiving certifications of demonstrated competence which contain in fact highlight in some instances and are overwhelmingly dominated by assertions of political contributions as a basis for demonstrated competence.

It is entirely contrary to what was provided for in that statute and contrary, I think, to any common sense view of the basis on which ambassadors ought to be appointed.

I hope we have not yet reached the point in this country where we are prepared simply to accept very large political contributions as a basis upon which to make nominations for Ambassadors.

It is quite true we have had people who have given large contributions in the past who have been approved; some this year and some that I support. But in each such instance this year the record has shown dimensions over and above their political contributions so that one in effect would not look at their resume and ask, now why is this person being nominated as a ambassador and find the answer in appendix A, listing the political contributions.

Not only has the quality of noncareer appointments declined under the current administration, but the number of noncareer appointments has increased dramatically.

Contained in the committee report and in our statement there is a table showing that at July 31 out of 46 country ambassadors nominated, only 15 were career and the rest were political. These are Ambassadors to countries. Of course, have others who hold the title of Ambassador for purposes of negotiations; they may be an ambassador because the Department feels that having that title lends them additional weight and therefore they seek that title. But now we are talking about country Ambassadors. Out of the 46 officially submitted as of the end of July, 30 or 31 were political Ambassadors and 15 were career.

We have updated those figures. As of this date 58 nominations have been submitted as country Ambassadors, instead of 46; 22 are career, and 36 are political. That makes a percentage of 38 percent career and 62 percent political at this point in time.

We have gone back and checked the percentages of other Presidents in terms of nominees submitted to the Senate at this point in their respective administrations—in other words, in the first session subsequent to an election. In no instance did the career percentage drop below 61 percent. With Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Carter, and Reagan the percentage of career nominees never dropped below 61 percent.

This time, thus far in the Bush administration, the percentage is 38 percent. Just 38 percent of the people nominated in this administration as Ambassadors, country Ambassadors, have come out of the career service. In previous Presidents, the lowest was 61 percent. In fact, it went as high as 72 percent.

It is asserted: "Well, President Bush has left these other people, career people, in place." But of course other administrations have done that, as well. The administration is trying, in effect, to include the prior appointments of previous administrations in their numbers.

The important thing, it seems to me, is to compare apples with apples, to see what this administration has done in terms of its own appointments. And what it has done is shift radically the percentage of its appointments which have come from the political sector rather than the career sector. When the noncareer people who drawn in have a manifest lack of the relevant experience and qualifications that one would hope for, we are dealing a blow to American diplomatic service and potentially to American interests abroad.

We are all familiar with very distinguished noncareer people—Senator Mansfield, for example; Averell Harriman; Ambassador Reischauer; David Bruce; and others. Such appointments are welcome because they can in fact supplement our existing diplomatic resources and capabilities. They are individuals who will invigorate and refresh the foreign service rather than drain and demoralize it.

Mr. President, there are some who assert that the contemporary role of the U.S. Ambassador is such that it does not really matter much who we send as Ambassador. I am coming more and more to the conclusion, as I look into this issue and hear the arguments and responses, and in fact questions of some of the nominees, that there are some very widespread misapprehensions or misunderstandings about what an ambassador does.

Some assert that in the age of modern telecommunications the U.S. Ambassador no longer plays a decisive or even particularly functional role in the formulation and conduct of foreign policy, and that for all practical purposes the role has been reduced to its ceremonial aspects; that all decisions are made in Washington; that the Ambassador's counsel is irrelevant; and that a competent embassy staff can serve to present a novice Ambassador from making major mistakes.

I submit that this view is extremely shortsighted and misleading. First, the U.S. Ambassador has very serious responsibilities. The era of glamor, if it ever existed, is long past. At a time when disputes are increasingly being resolved by diplomats, we rely on our Ambassadors not only to help solve problems but to prevent them from arising in the first place. We also look to them to discern and develop opportunities. And we pay significant costs in lost opportunities when they are not competent to do so.

From questions of trade to interethnic rivalries, terrorism, and security relationships, our Ambassadors must know how and where to represent our interests most effectively. Defusing sudden and complex conflicts in a relationship and identifying new avenues of mutual cooperation depend on having astute, knowledgeable and experienced representatives on the scene. This is crucial to U.S. interests—economic interests, political interests, security interest.

Too often an amateur is sent out and manages to get through a term without a major mistake, largely because the career professionals in the embassy are constantly there as a sort of back-up. Often when such an ambassador comes home everyone says, "Well, you see it made no difference. There was no major gaffe. There was no really significant embarrassment. So what difference did it make?"

But that fails to recognize the lost opportunities that could have been developed by a knowledgeable, able, skillful Ambassador. A good Ambassador can make a major difference for our interests in the country to which he or she is accredited.

The range of responsibilities are really very wide. I commend to my colleagues this excellent study called the modern Ambassador, the challenge and the search, prepared by the well-renowned and respected Institute for the Study of Diplomacy at the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University. This study, which is now about 5 years old, has a number of different essays discussing the role of the Ambassaor. What does an ambassador actually do? There are some very good chapters here on the tasks of an ambassador; a day with an ambassador; running an embassy. What is it really like being an ambassador? How much work is involved? How much time does it take? What are you expected to know? An examination of requirements and qualifications.

The study includes a section called "In Favor of Noncareer Appointments"; another "In Favor of Career Appointments"; and then sort of a summary section, "From Either Source, the Best." And then there are some case studies, including some of disastrous appointments and how U.S. interests suffered as a consequence.

I submit to you if we are serious about being a leading power, then we need to be serious about who we send abroad as Ambassadors. Other countries, when they send their Ambassadors here, invariably draw from the very best of their career service. They recognize that a skillful Ambassador in Washington is enormously important to them in furthering and enhancing the interests of their country.

It seems to me we need to recognize the same thinking in the other direction. We need to perceive that it is not simply acceptable in today's world, where we no longer have the sort of dominant economic and security power that we had in the immediate postwar period, to overlook the importance of our Ambassadors. We need very skillful people on the scene. And we need them for a wide range of activities, not only representational functions.

We get people who say, "Well, I am a people person. I am really good at getting along with other people." Fine. I do not know that that is a unique qualification, however I do not know that having that qualification excludes having a range of additional qualifications, which are very important to handle these complicated assignments.

Second, sending an Ambassador who possesses no obvious qualifications for the position conveys a very unfortunate message to the country involved. We cannot always send an Ambassador who speaks the language, although I think that is highly desirable wherever it is feasible. Some languages are very difficult. There are not many people who have expertise in them. Often someone may have a range of other qualities—Senator Mansfield, for example—which outweigh or transcend not having the language itself and still enable him or her to be a very skillful, able, and effective Ambassador.

If you do not have these other dimensions or qualifications, I think the message you send to the nation is not our relationship is not important enough to require the appointment of an able representative of our country. In many respects it says that we value the country's climate more than we do its respect and friendship. And to the world at large it says: The United States is not serious about diplomacy: America places a higher premium on political rewards than on furthering its interests abroad. No other major industrial nation appoints its ambassadors in this way, and neither should the United States.

Third, choosing an unqualified ambassador has a demoralizing effect on the career Foreign Service and ultimately will endanger our ability to attract educated, committed young people into professional diplomacy. Our national interests are not, in my judgment, well served if donating $100,000 to a political party gives one a better chance of being nominated to an ambassadorship than spending 20 years in the career Foreign Service. Would the Members of this body for a moment consider nominating generals and admirals in the same fashion?

Stop and think about that for 1 minute. It happened at one point in our Nation's history and in the history of other countries. What would the reaction be if someone presented some of the same resumes that we are looking at in connection with ambassadorial nominations: Large political involvement, heavy political giving, no real experience in the area of foreign policy or diplomacy or international relations. Suppose it was said of these people: We are going to make them a general, or we are going to make them an admiral.

The impact of this trend on the career Service is manifold. First of all, the kinds of percentages that we are dealing with here, where only 38 percent thus far of the President's nominees for country Ambassador have been drawn from the career Service, means that those who have spent a lifetime working in the career Service, developing skills and talents relevant to moving up the ladder and eventually holding an ambassadorship, the number of opportunities is significantly diminished. In fact, it is clear with this administration that no career person can really hope to serve in an embassy in Europe. All but a handful of the European embassies are going to noncareer people. These embassies, of course, are the ones most sought after by big political givers and those heavily involved in political campaigns.

So, we are denying the opportunity which represents the culmination of a career in the Foreign Service. We are limiting their numbers.

As I indicated earlier, I think there is a case to be made on occasion for taking people from outside the career Service, but the numbers should be far different. They should represent a distinct minority of our ambassadorial appointments, and qualifications and abilities of such nominees should be such that they command general respect when they are selected.

In addition to the demoralizing impact on the career Service of denying opportunities to advance to the very top of their profession, there is another problem. Think what it does to career people to have an utterly amateur ambassador whom they have to, as it were, shepherd through each day. The stories of this are legion.

And, of course, the most important decision that these noncareer nominees make at the very outset is the choice of a deputy chief of mission.

Most of them have the good sense, at least, to recognize that they have to make a good choice because, if they do not, the embassy is in real trouble. Then they do not have a dedicated career servant to carry out the formidable responsibilities of the job while they carry out this other notion of what it is to be an ambassador.

We can see this impact on the career service. The American Foreign Service Association has written about it, sometimes with great feeling. Let me quote from the Foreign Service Journal of June 19 an article headed "Qualified Ambassadors"—

Are we in the Foreign Service the only ones concerned about the qualifications of ambassadorial appointees? It appears so. And when we sound the alarm, we are seen as interested only in job security for ourselves. But political Ambassadors are not the problem. Ambassadors without qualifications are, be they political or career. The media treats the absence of qualifications lightly, with titters in the gossip columns. Congress, even those Members who know better, shrugs and says nothing.

Maybe they are right. Maybe it is OK to sell our diplomatic posts abroad to the highest bidders, for the taxpayers to bear the burden of paying off political activists, and that American interests in country X, Y or Z be damned. But we don't think so. Diplomacy is too important. We should practice it carefully and with skill and send out our very best to represent us. We recommend a quality control process for ambassadorial appointments for both career and political.

The United States no longer can work its will through the sheer force of economic, political or moral might. Our place in the scheme of things is affected by events and decisions in other countries. We are foolish if we do not seek every legitimate means to influence those decisions. World events touch everyone's job. Ask the steel workers, the UAW, and the farmers. Corporate board rooms understand the importance of the world to their welfare and they are beginning to look to Washington for effective diplomacy.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full editorial from the June 19 issue of Foreign Service Journal be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUALIFIED AMBASSADORS

Are we in the Foreign Service the only ones concerned about the qualifications of ambassadorial appointees? It appears so. And when we sound the alarm, we are seen as interested only in job security for ourselves. But political ambassadors are not the problem. Corporate board rooms understand the importance of the world to their welfare, and they are beginning to look to Washington for effective diplomacy.

How important is skilled diplomacy to reducing the threats of war, to having some impact on the international flood of illegal drugs, to the health of our world's environment? The list of international issues that are important to Americans now and which will be more so in the future is long.

How do we convince the people of a foreign country that we are serious in the pursuit of our country's objectives if the chief representative of the United States in that country can't speak the language, knows next to nothing about that country, and has no visible qualifications to represent the United States there? We can't.

AFSA urges the administration and Congress to consider whether the time has come to rethink the question of ambassadorial qualifications. Experience should have taught us the painful lesson that not just anyone is good enough to represent all of us. We, also, should care enough to send the very best.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, let me turn to the specific situation before us today. I want first to address the general question that we are considering, the nomination of an Ambassador to Spain.

Where Spain is concerned, the United States has economic, political, security, cultural, and historic interests of the highest order. Spain has undergone a profound political and economic transformation since the death of Franco in 1975 and the subsequent establishment of democratic institutions.

In 1975, Spain moved to democracy. It was a profound development, and so perceived not only in Europe and in this country, but throughout the world. In fact, the Spanish transition is being looked to by some nations in Eastern Europe as offering a model from which perhaps they might follow.

A Cabinet minister from Hungary recently spent some time in Spain for the express purpose of examining how Spain accomplished this transition, both political and economic; how it moved to democracy, moved to an open economy, and became part of the European Community.

Since this turning point in Spain, throughout this 14-year period, the United States has been represented in Madrid by ambassadors with distinguished careers in the Foreign Service with experience directly relevant to their service in Spain.

Since Spain moved to democracy, American administrations, Democratic and Republican alike, recognizing the importance of Spain to our interests and the sensitivity of the Spanish situation, have sent ambassadors with distinguished Foreign Service careers.

From 1975 to 1978, we were represented by Ambassador Wells Stabler. Ambassador Stabler, a career officer with more than 30 years' experience, including posts in Rome and Paris, was at the time of his appointment the principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs. He spoke Spanish and had had extensive management experience in the Department.

Ambassador Stabler was followed by Ambassador Terence Todman, a fluent Spanish speaker. Ambassador Todman had served as Ambassador to Chad, Guinea, and Costa Rica. At the time of his nomination to be Ambassador to Spain, he was the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

There are about 15 Assistant Secretaries in the Department. There is the Secretary, the Deputy, several Under Secretaries, and then the Assistant Secretaries. So at the time he was appointed to go to Spain, Ambassador Todman had risen to this rank in the Department.

From 1983 to 1986, we were represented by Ambassador Thomas Enders. He came to Spain after serving as Ambassador to Canada as U.S. representative to the European Community and as Assistant Secretary for Economics and Business Affairs. For the 2 years prior to his appointment, he held the position of Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs. So he had been in the European Community, a major ambassadorship in Canada, Assistant Secretary in the Department of State.

He was succeeded by the fourth in this line of successive career ambassadors to serve in our Embassy in Spain—to give you some sense of the importance which administrations, Republican and Democratic, have attached to this assignment—Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew, who served from 1986 to 1989. Ambassador Bartholomew served in the Department of Defense from 1968 until he joined the Foreign Service in 1974. A Spanish speaker, he had previously been Ambassador to Lebanon and special negotiator for the United States Greek base negotiations. He was recently confirmed as Under Secretary of State for Security Affairs.

Although the transition of the immediate post-Franco period has ended, new changes are underway. In a March 11 article appropriately entitled "The Next Transition," the Economist noted:

Spain is at a painful but unavoidable turning point in its recent history. The country is changing gears. Having entered the European Community just 3 years ago, Spain already plays a crucial role in the rapid movement toward European economic integration which will culminate in Europe in 1992.

Mr. President, let me just very quickly mention a few of the reasons why Spain is such an important factor and needs to be recognized as such, and why I think four successive ambassadors over a 14-year period were highly respected members of the career Foreign Service, diplomats of demonstrated competence and experience.

First of all, we have Spain and NATO, a delicate and complicated situation. Spain obviously occupies a strategic position. Spanish participation in NATO was finally agreed upon after a popular referendum. It is limited in the sense that Spain is not fully integrated into the NATO command, which in and of itself raises certain questions about how things would work if, in fact, a crisis were to take place.

The United States has had base facilities in Spain since 1953. They have just been renegotiated. We are closing down one of them, the airbase outside of Madrid, at Torrejon. We must undertake implementation of the agreement that has been negotiated; not an easy matter, involving sensitive issues.

This new agreement on United States-Spanish bases was entered into force barely 4 months ago. It represents a significant change in military arrangements which date back to 1953. The agreement redefines the United States-Spanish military relations in the context of Spain's affiliation with, but not its full integration into, the NATO command in the context of Spain's increasingly active involvement in all aspects of European affairs.

Implementation of that agreement, including redeployment of the F-16's heretofore stationed at Torrejon, is just beginning. In my view, it is hardly an opportune time to put U.S.-diplomatic representation on automatic pilot with an inexperienced ambassador.

Second, it is important to note Spain's role in the European Community. In fact, since 1986, Spain's economy has grown the most rapidly of any country in the European Community. At the end of June, Spain finished its first 6-month term presiding over the European Community. The Spanish Prime Minister was the presiding officer under the 6-month rotation system which the Community follows.

The Prime Minister, Felipe Gonzalez, was perceived by all as having done an outstanding job as President of the European Community in Spain's first rotation. The Spanish Government sought to demonstrate its commitment to the European Community, and in fact at the EC summit in June of 1989 Prime Minister Gonzalez engineered a very significant compromise with respect to plans for monetary union in the EC. He was able to bring together Prime Minister Thatcher and President Francois Mitterrand—no small achievement, as we all will recognize. I might also note that a Spaniard is currently serving as President of the European Parliament.

So Spain is important to the United States for a number of bilateral reasons—important because of its position and role in NATO; important because of its role in the European Community; important because of its role in Latin America.

Spain, traditionally regarded as the mother country of 18 Latin-American nations, is making continuing efforts to expand its presence, economic and political, in the Western Hemisphere. In fact, Spain is interested not only in expanding their ties with Spanish-speaking Latin America but also with the Hispanic community in this country. I understand there are plans for the Spanish Prince to visit the U.S. Southwest later this year to establish ties with Spanish-speaking people living in the United States.

Spain has had a special interest and a longstanding degree of influence with the countries in Latin America, regarding itself as the mother country in culture, in history and tradition, and of course, in language. In fact, citizens of Spanish-speaking Latin American countries enter Spain without a visa, just one small reflection of that relationship. Spain trains a number of Latin American diplomats at its own diplomatic academy, and the Latin Americans see Spain's entrance into the Community as giving them a potential spokesman for important interest.

I think it is particularly important in this period to have a U.S. Ambassador sensitive to the potential significance of the Spanish experience to the nations of Latin America.

I spoke earlier perhaps of the role which Spain may play as a model for a transition to democracy on the part of, for instance, Eastern European countries. The Hungarian Minister of Justice, traveling throughout Western Europe and talking with constitutional scholars in particular, was studying successful democratic transformations in Spain.

So we are dealing with a country of major import. I am not sure we fully appreciate that in our society at large. I think the Department has appreciated it, and that is reflected in the quality of the career Ambassadors we have sent to Spain since Spain became a democratic nation in 1975.

Spain will host the Olympics in Barcelona in 1992. In that same year Madrid will be Europe's official "cultural capital." The European Parliament, as I indicated, now has a Spanish member presiding as its President in the next 2½ years. From all reports the Spanish now see themselves as playing a major role in the Community and, indeed, an increasing role on the world's stage, particularly as it relates to Latin America.

Further, the Prime Minister has now called for elections early. They will be held later this fall, and they may well be an important watershed in recent Spanish history.

Mr. President, let me turn to the nominee now before us to take this very important and sensitive assignment. My own view, very candidly put, is that who we send as an Ambassador to any country is important, and it is obviously important in the thinking of that particular country. Therefore, we ought to be concerned in each and every instance that we send the very best we can. But we have to recognize, just as a matter of reality, that there are some countries, because of their role in the world, their size, the importance of their economy, their political position, perhaps their cultural and historical leadership—and now we are talking about the premier Spanish-speaking country in the world—where we need to be even more sensitive to the nature of the representation we send.

In this instance, we have a case in which, in my judgment, disregarding the guidelines set forth in the 1980 Foreign Service Act and the critical interests and complex issues in the United States-Spain relationship, we propose to send an Ambassador to Spain who possesses no prior experience or educational background in foreign policy, no particular interest in or knowledge about Spain, and no Spanish language ability. In fact, one is struck by the paucity of Mr. Zappala's civic involvements as listed in his response to the committee's questionnaire. I ask my colleagues to refer to appendix 2 in the committee's report in which biographical information is set out.

Furthermore, despite the fact that the statute specifies that political contributions should not be a factor in making nominations, they appear to be the sole reason behind the nomination of Mr. Zappala. In fact, a good part of Mr. Zappala's certification of demonstrated competence, which I earlier indicated is required to be sent to the committee with each nominee, is devoted to enumerating his heavy political giving.

This is the report to the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. Subject: Ambassadorial nomination: Certification of Demonstrated Competence, (Foreign Service Act, section 304(A)(4). Post, U.S. Ambassador to Spain. Candidate, Joseph Zappala.

It is short enough, Mr. President, that I am going to read it, the full certification of competence to the Senate. I particularly want Members to note the focus and attention which is placed on his role as a political campaign contributor even though the statute says "contributions to political campaigns should not"—not—"be a factor in the appointment of an individual as a chief of mission."

Mr. Zappala, 56, is presently Chairman and Chief Executive Office of Joseph Zappala and Associates, in St. Petersburg, Florida; Chairman, Home Town Investors, Inc., and Owner and Chairman of Tucson Greyhound Park, Tucson, Arizona. Mr. Zappala is also presently on the Board of Directors of First Union National Bank and the board of the College of Veterinary Medicine, University of Florida, Mr. Zappala is President of STRAIGHT Inc. and a member of the board of the Police Athletic League.

Mr. Zappala was National Finance Co-Chairman for the American Bicentennial Presidential Inaugural and Chairman of the Florida Victory Committee. Formerly Mr. Zappala was on the George Bush for President National Steering Committee in 1988 and the National Finance Committee Co-Chairman for the State of Florida as well as National Co-Chairman for the Republican National Committee's Team 100. Mr. Zappala was also Co-Chairman of George Bush for President 1979.

Mr. Zappala is a graduate of the New York Institute of Finance. Mr. Zappala's impressive business background in real estate combined with his civic activities qualify him as an excellent candidate for U.S. Ambassador to Spain.

And then it has a short concluding paragraph.

Members of the Republican National Committee's Team 100 are those who gave more than $100,000 to the Republican National Committee in the last campaign. In fact, there are at the moment eight persons from that list who have been nominated by this administration to be ambassadors.

If anyone were to ask me, what is the one single thing that he or she can do that might lead to ambassadorial appointment, I think it is becoming increasingly clear that the answer is to be a member of Team 100.

It also becomes apparent as we examine this situation that a development with respect to the responses to the questionnaire which is itself a small thing in a way reflects a larger proposition. Nominees are required to fill out an extensive questionnaire submitted to them by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The questionnaire asks them about community involvement, employment, financial information, and includes a number of detailed questions about personal résumé and background. For instance, it asks a question of government experience: "List any experience in or association with Federal, State, or local governments including any advisory, consultative, honoraria, or other part-time service or positions not shown in question 8."

In response to that question Mr. Zappala listed all of his political activities. I am not quite sure I recall any government experience properly speaking but that is where he listed his political activities.

Right at the end, or almost at the end; the questionnaire asks:

Are there any factors other than the information provided above which particularly qualify you for the position to which you have been nominated?

In response to that question Mr. Zappala said, and I am now quoting from his questionnaire:

I am known as a coalition builder. I am able to organize my colleagues and peers to action in support of worthwhile civic, charitable, and political causes.

This same questionnaire is submitted to all the nominees for ambassadorships that come before the committee. In response to this question, a close friend of Mr. Zappala's and a fellow real estate developer, Mr. Melvin Sembler, who has been nominated by the President to be United States Ambassador to Australia and whose nomination, I presume, in due course we will be considering, responded, and again I quote, to the same question:

I have been known as a coalition builder, able to organize my colleagues and peers to action in support of worthy civic, charitable, and political causes.

Mr. President, I did not make a mistake. I did not by mistake here happen to read Mr. Zappala's answer instead of Mr. Sembler's to that question. The fact of the matter is they gave virtually identical answers to this question in their separate questionnaires.

Do they regard this process as serious? Do they think the committee has an important responsibility to discharge? And, if so, why are they giving us identical answers to the same question?

The Washington Post looked into this in an article on the 24th of June, 1989; "Two Would-Be Envoys Are Frequent Partners—Nominees Even Shared Phrases." In the article they explain that this occurred because Mr. Zappala's public relations consultant filled out the questionnaire for him by copying the words of Mr. Sembler's public relations consultant who had filled out Mr. Sembler's form.

These nominees cannot even fill out their own forms. We have public relations people treating it almost as a joke. Let me just read from the Post article, which I will include in the RECORD.

Aides to the two developers said in separate interviews that they, not their bosses, were responsible for the strikingly similar prose in the five-page questionnaire that every ambassadorial nominee must file with the committee.

"Those are my words," said Tampa public relations consultant Pat Lewis. She said she completed Sembler's form using the same description of Sembler she often employed during the past five years while serving as his speech writer and publicist. Lewis said, however, she was not certain how her words got onto Zappala's form.

Bruce Bannard, a Zappala associate, said he knew. Bannard said he filled out Zappala's form and had a copy of Sembler's résumé, borrowed from Lewis, with him at the time. "Whether consciously or unconsciously," Bannard said, he lifted the wording.

The Washington Post in an editorial commenting on this said:

Modular testimony. Pre-fab (by someone else) self-description. It doesn't inspire a whole lot of confidence. Can the would-be ambassadors be trusted to enter into dialogue with their host governments if they, apparently, cannot be trusted to write a few lines on their own qualifications?

Mr. President, I spoke earlier about how, on occasion, the service can be refreshed by bringing people in from the outside. One of the nominees we considered earlier was Governor Orr of Indiana, to be Ambassador to Singapore. He was approved by the committee, approved by the Senate and is now in Singapore on assignment.

Governor Orr, to his credit, filled out the questionnaire in his own hand. It was very clear that the responses to the questions were his own and that he obviously had the ability and the capacity to respond intelligently. He brought to that nomination not only some distinguished political experience in this country, actually governing, actually administering, but also a long-standing interest in the Far East. He had 60 some of 18 trade missions to the Far East in the course of his tenure as First Lieutenant Governor and later Governor of Indiana. I only mention that by way of contrast.

Numerous articles and editorials from around the country have commented on the matter of this nomination. The St. Petersburg Times, in fact, the hometown newspaper of Mr. Zappala, said:

In the past, some new Ambassadors' lack of preparation for their jobs has been offensive to host countries and has prevented our Government from taking advantage of important diplomatic opportunities. Whether political appointees or career diplomats, our Ambassadors should possess the same qualifications that we have come to expect of foreign diplomats serving in this country. Otherwise, we run the risk of creating touchy situations that even successful St. Petersburg developers are not capable of getting us out of.

Mr. President, I have not based this argument on any contention about Mr. Zappala as a person. I concede, for purposes of this argument, that he is a fine person. I am sure that any of us would be happy and privileged to have him as a friend and neighbor. He has been successful in his business pursuits, and in fact, the majority refers to him as the "grandfather of condominiums" in Florida.

But I am simply making the point that when asked to give its advice and consent to ambassadorial nominations, the Senate must keep in mind that the Nation's interests are at stake. This is a serious business. It is not something to be done as a matter of political reward. It is simply not adequate or appropriate to have ambassadorships treated as rewards for campaign fundraisers.

There was a warning signal back in February of this year, and I have to confess that I—and I guess others—did not pick up on it; we should have picked up on it at the time and come back with a counterwarning. An article appeared in the New York Times, on February 20 under the headline. "Ex-Finance Chairman Complains Few Jobs Go to Bush Fundraisers." That was about a month into the administration.

The article begins:

Robert A. Mosbacher, Sr., the Commerce Secretary, who was finance chairman of President Bush's campaign, says he is distressed that more campaign fundraisers have not been rewarded with political appointments. He blamed officials in the administration, but not Mr. Bush himself, for favoring political operatives over fundraisers for posts at all levels of Government.

Skipping through the article, we find the following:

Mr. Mosbacher said in the interview that he planned to bring the issue to the attention to White House personnel officials, and that he hoped to speak directly to Mr. Bush about it.

The Commerce Secretary, who ran the Bush fundraising efforts in the primaries and the Republican Party's drive to raise millions of dollars from wealthy donors, said there were "several hundred" fundraisers who deserved appointments to ambassadorships, sub-Cabinet posts or lower level jobs on commissions who were being neglected. The campaign had a national finance board of some 350 people in the primaries, and for the general election, 249 individuals and corporations, gave at least $100,000 apiece to the Republican Party.

"Quite a high percentage of those who have been helpful have not gotten anything," Mr. Mosbacher said.

The article goes on to say:

More than a dozen people who gave at least $100.000 to the Republican Party last year, or helped solicit millions of dollars more for Mr. Bush, are being tapped for jobs as ambassadors or as policymakers at subCabinet levels.

It then goes on to discuss this practice, mentioning the two people that I have mentioned here today, Mr. Zappala and Mr. Sembler, and others we are considering in the committee. Actually, this article ends with Mr. Mosbacher saying about another fundraiser:

"By all standards, she deserves something," Mr. Mosbacher said. "She raised a lot of money, worked hard."

Mr. President, I am not being a purist about this. In the past along with my colleagues, I have participated in cases of looking the other way and allowing some nominees to go through despite some doubts and misgivings. But I have been, driven to this fight by a combination of circumstances. I do not know how many here remember the movie "Network", in which Peter Finch at one point throws open the window and says "I am just not going to take it anymore." That is the point I finally reached with these ambassadorial nominations.

We had a list of nominees in the committee. It included some career people. It also included noncareer people with some dimension to them. But it also included some noncareer people who had absolutely no dimension to them. It was not a matter of one or two, but more. So one looks at the situation, sees at the numbers, and realizes that there has been a marked shift in the number of noncareer people, and at the same time a sharp drop in the quality of many of the noncareer people.

I am going to make a comparison because I want the point to be understood. I am going, in effect, to impose upon Ed Ney, who is now our Ambassador to Canada, to help make the point I am trying to underscore here today.

Mr. Ney is a noncareer appointee to Canada. He came before the committee with an impressive and distinguished record. He was very active politically, involved both as a participant and as a giver, but he is also chairman of Paine Webber, Young & Rubicam Ventures; he was for many years chairman and chief executives officer of Young & Rubicam, the world's largest independent advertising and communications company, and he was selected repeatedly as the outstanding person in his profession. He served on the board for International Broadcasting. He was on the President's private sector survey on cost control. He was on the Policy Advisory Committee of the U.S. Trade Representative, on the advisory board for the Center for Strategic and International Studies, on the board of trustees of the Urban League, and Director of the Center for Communications. He had been vice chairman of the Foreign Policy Association. He served on the board of trustees of a number of outstanding academic institutions, including Amherst College, NYU Medical Center, Columbia Graduate School of Business, visiting committee of Afro-American Studies at Harvard, frequent and repeated contact in Canada both at the personal level and on the business level. He speaks French, highly relevant in a country that is bilingual. And there are a number of other activities which I have not enumerated.

Ambassador Ney is a noncareer appointee. He has had substantial political involvement but when you look at his record and review his papers, it is clear as you read the résumé that there is a solid basis on which to send this person as Ambassador to Canada.

The answer to the question, why is this person being nominated to be an Ambassador to Canada? Was not to be found solely in the appendix listing his political contributions, although there was such an appendix and the contributions were significant. But the answer was not in that appendix solely. The answer lay as I have tried to show in a wide range of other activities and involvements.

I submit we have to start taking these appointments seriously. We can no longer treat them as political throw-aways. We must get off of this money merry-go-round. We cannot simply accept the proposition that solely because someone can write large checks he or she should then be on the short list for an ambassadorship. I am frank to say I regard check-writing as more of a problem than extended political involvement; at least an active citizen is taking part in the political process of trying to make our democracy work. But here we have instances where, as Secretary Mosbacher complained, few jobs go to Bush fundraisers. The Secretary was simply distressed that more campaign fundraisers had not been rewarded with political appointments.

But we have other interests to consider. If we are going to reduce these ambassadorial nominations to this level, perhaps we should put certain countries up for auction, then at a certain hour there will be a public bidding at the auditorium of the Department of State and whoever bids the most will get the assignment. At least in that case we would put the money into the Treasury of the United States and use it to offset the deficit. Of course the winners could also pick their DCMS. We could bring in three or four prime candidates and put them on display, and say, these are the longtime professionals in the career Service who have been trained for ambassadorial or diplomatic posts; one of these people will come with this job so if you bid for it you will get one. Doonesbury did a series of cartoons suggesting this very thing. Mr. President, I think it is time to get serious about these nominations. The process has deteriorated markedly with respect both to the overall numbers and the specific qualifications or, more accurately, put, lack thereof, of some of the nominees presented to us. I do not think we ought to let the process deteriorate any further. It has gone too far already. Now is the time to say stop. I urge my colleagues to reject the nomination of Joseph Zappala, to be United States Ambassador to Spain.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ].

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I agree with my friend and colleague from Maryland that Spain is indeed important, that Spain has now been without any ambassador since the 12th of March of this year and that it is indeed time to get serious about this nomination.

It is the practice of the Senate that a single Senator can hold up a nomination for quite a bit of time. This nomination was presented to the Senate 5 months ago, to the day, I believe, and the hearing took place 4 months ago. Since that time even though there has not been an ambassador in Spain this nomination has been held up, by a single Senator.

Yet we are now hearing that we are supposed to take the process seriously, that it is time to get serious about this nomination.

I listened carefully to the speech of the Senator from Maryland, and as a matter of fact since we are on the committee together I have heard elements of it before. He has heard elements of my response.

But let me first talk about Joseph Zappala and let me say that I understand that some Senators would judge a man of Mr. Zappala's background somewhat differently than I. His background, frankly, is not much different than mine in coming here to the Senate. His background, I might say, is far broader than many of my colleagues' here in the Senate prior to their time of coming here.

His background is one of a businessman of very wide accomplishment, of a businessman who has branched out far beyond the community where he began.

In the report that the Foreign Relations Committee prepared about Joseph Zappala, he is listed as one of Florida's leading businessmen with an extensive record of community service in areas ranging from adolescent drug abuse and mental retardation to the organizations of political life.

He is indeed one of Florida's leading businessmen, having really fulfilled the American dream, having done what few have been able to achieve.

(Mr. WIRTH assumed the chair.)

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. He came from New York. He went to Florida. He become a developer. He went without capital. He went with his dreams. He went with his ambition. He went with the ability and desire for hard work.

He has built millions of square feet of quality and award-winning projects throughout Florida. He is one of the larger shopping center developers in that part of the country.

As the distinguished Senator from Maryland has mentioned he originated the idea of condominiums in Florida which has led to very rapid development in that State. While some of that may not have much to do with diplomacy, I submit to the Senate that this is a man of considerable accomplishment. I will discuss, as we talk about what is required about diplomacy, how this kind of experience applies to that, because more than simply diplomatic experience or experience in the State Department is important to the business of diplomacy.

Mr. Zappala operates a large health care facility in St. Petersburg. He is the owner and chairman of the Tucson Greyhound Park in Tucson, AZ. He sits on the board of directors of the First Union National Bank, and was previously chairman of the board of the First National Bank of Seminole in Pinellas County in Florida, a bank which he founded.

In addition to being most successful in his own right, starting from ground zero, accomplishing things of magnitude in his State and across the Nation, the report of the committee on Foreign Relations further states: "Mr. Zappala's philanthropic activities also have been numerous." He is president of STRAIGHT Inc. STRAIGHT Inc. is the largest drug treatment program for adolescents in the country. More than 10,000 young people have passed through this program. This is an an accomplishment of great merit, in my judgment, and one which may have some relevancy for Spain particularly when we consider the fact that Spain is now thought to be an entry point into Europe for drugs.

So in confirming Mr. Zappala we would be sending to Spain an ambassador who has broad experience in drugs and how to deal with drugs.

Another important asset Mr. Zappala would bring to his assignment is that, in the words of the Foreign Relations Committee's report, "He has had a long personal relationship with George Bush."

It is indeed one of the most important elements of an ambassador's job that there be a relationship with the Chief of State. Which would the Spanish Government prefer? Would it prefer a bureaucrat, somebody who has been a career diplomat, carefully and cautiously in most instances working their way up the ladder of diplomacy? Or would they prefer a friend of the President? Would they prefer a person who has had a long, personal relationship with George Bush?

The Senator from Maryland pointed out an interesting fact, that the State Department is a very large organization with many officials. There is, as the Senator pointed out, the Secretary of State, a Deputy Secretary of State, three Under Secretaries of State, and 21 Assistant Secretaries of State, and probably 40-odd Deputy Assistant Secretaries of State. And it is to that bureaucracy that the Ambassador reports.

The question is: Does the Prime Minister of Spain, when he talks to the Ambassador, want somebody who is going to go through all these bureaucratic steps? If he really has something important, does he want somebody with that capacity, or does he want a person who has a long, personal relationship with George Bush? I submit to you that the people in Spain who are politicians themselves would indeed prefer someone with a long, personal relationship with George Bush.

That relationship was involved with finance, as indeed many political relationships are. Joseph Zappala cochaired the very first Florida fundraiser for the Bush campaign, back in 1979. He was on the National Steering Committee, on the National Financing Committee, and his fundraising talents were not only used for the political sphere but for many religious and charitable organizations as well, from which he has won numerous awards.

The Foreign Relations Committee report continues and says: "Mr. Zappala meets any reasonable interpretation of the hortatory standards of section 304," of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 to which my friend referred. Continuing the quote:

> Mr. Zappala's extensive career as a businessman, financier, philanthropist, and political organizer has given him excellent skills as a negotiator, advocate, manager, and coalition builder—in other words, he has a demonstrated record in the four key areas which must be mastered by any diplomat. In his numerous enterprises, he has been responsible for the well-being and payrolls of over 1,000 employees, and has won awards for his employee practices.

I know that many in the Senate do not share that kind of background. As a matter of fact, there are few people in the U.S. Senate who do have a business background similar to Mr. Zappala's. I am one of those few who came here as a businessman. I am one of those few in the Senate who is not a practicing lawyer. I am one of the few in the Senate who is really an entrepreneur and started his business much as Mr. Zappala did, and moved forward and indeed employed over 1,000 people.

And so I am particularly appreciative of the background of Mr. Zappala, and what it takes to get there. I did not come to the Senate with prior experience in diplomacy. I have no education in diplomacy. And yet I am on the Foreign Relations Committee, and I indeed help make the foreign policy of this country.

My friend from Maryland stated that Mr. Zappala cannot even fill out his own forms. He has a speech writer and a publicist. There are 100 Senators here in this body and many of them have speech writers and press secretaries. So the fact that he has a speech writer or a publicist really should not be so unusual to those of us in the Senate.

It was alleged that Mr. Zappala was deficient in language skills. But yet he is totally fluent in Italian, and has been all of his life. As the report once again says, "since Spanish and Italian are related romance languages, with similar grammatical and rhetorical structures," there is "no reason to believe that Mr. Zappala will not be reasonably proficient in Spanish by the time that he takes up residence in Madrid."

And indeed, as I noted, he has had a lot of time to become familiar with Spanish, as this nomination has been dragging on and on. It is a shame. If we were to get serious about the business of diplomacy and serious about the business of getting an ambassador to Spain, this nomination should not have been held but should have been brought to the floor.

We should have voted it up or down months ago, so that we would be properly represented in this important country.

I might say since 1960 there have been a number of ambassadors who have been political appointees. I do not know exactly the years that these people served there. But the following people served as political appointees to Spain, during the period subsequent to 1960:

John Lodge, Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., Angier Biddle Duke, Frank E. McKinney, Robert F. Wagner, Robert C. Hill, Horacio Rivero, and Peter M. Flanigan. Eight people, some of whose names I am most familiar with, have served as Ambassador to Spain as political ambassadors since that time, since 1960. I presume that many of them are Democratic appointees.

When we are considering ambassadors, we must consider the role that they play at these Embassies where they serve. First, they are personal representatives of the President as well as representatives of the Nation, and they deal on a regular basis with senior political leaders of the countries to which they are assigned. In the case of noncareer ambassadors it is one politician dealing with another politician, rather than a bureaucrat dealing with a politician. And I submit, Mr. President, that the politicians, the political leaders of Spain, appreciate the fact that the President sends a friend. And, indeed in the case of Joe Zappala, that is what is happening in Spain. The President is sending a friend.

In addition, ambassadors play an important role, particularly during the days of multibillion dollar trade deficits, in helping American businesses find opportunities abroad for creating new markets. Does Mr. Zappala's background fit there? It most certainly does. Does it fit there more than the normal bureaucrat? It most certainly does.

I have had businessmen say to me they have gone to countries and sought help from the Embassy. They have complained to me that they get there and nobody in the Embassy even understands what a letter of credit is.

Finally, an ambassador is responsible for managing quite a large number of people on the staff. The Senator from Maryland and I recently held a hearing for the new Ambassador to Fiji. Both of us were surprised to learn that there were 80 people employed by the American Embassy in Fiji. In Spain, the Embassy employs about 650 Americans and Spaniards. And the Americans represent many Government agencies. We are talking about a nominee, Mr. Zappala, who has led an organization in excess of 1,000 employees. Indeed, the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations says that he has won awards for his employee practices.

I might say the business of managing 650 people in an embassy is not always quite so simple. There are often a number of different agencies of Government represented in a single embassy. Very often there are many interagency battles that go on.

I submit that somebody who is outside of that, but yet has managerial experience, one who has not been involved in those turf battles, who carries no baggage in that regard, is indeed in a better position to deal with that than someone who comes from within the bureaucracy itself.

Let me talk for a moment about the number of nominees who are political nominees and those who are career nominees. I think I find myself in agreement with my friend from Maryland when he says that in certain situations, certainly career diplomats are of great value and are needed. Even though traditionally in some of those positions, political appointees have gone, for instance, to the United Nations. Some of our best ambassadors of recent years have been Ambassadors to the U.N. Vernon Walters was widely hailed. So was Jeane Kirkpatrick. Both of them were political appointees.

This President, however, in that important post, has chosen not a political but a career appointee, the former Ambassador to Israel, Tom Pickering, whom I have known for a number of years. I know Tom, and can say the President could not have made a better choice for this job if he wanted to show his esteem for the career service.

However, if we are going to say how many ambassadors are career appointees and how many are political appointees, the question is should we include those career ambassadors who are left in position? Should we include those who are in the midst of their normal 3-year terms and are allowed to continue in figuring out the averages?

When a new President comes on board, ambassadors, whether they are career or political appointees, as a matter of form send in their resignation. The result is that all can be replaced. This President chose to continue virtually all the career ambassadors who were in the midst of their terms. He did not accept their resignations. Should those people be included as appointees at this point? Or should only those people whose resignations were accepted, who were mostly political appointees be considered? Or should we also consider the group that was reappointed and left in place and did not require a nomination procedure? I submit that they, too, should be included.

When they are included, the numbers are more as they have been in the past. As a matter of fact, they are very much like they have been in the past and in my judgment we cannot count only those we are called upon to confirm at this time.

It has been said that we are seeing a flood of political nominees, from Republican "Team 100" contributors, those who gave $100,000 or more to the President's election campaign. The truth is there are only about a half a dozen who have been asked to become ambassadors. I thought there were half a dozen. My friend from Maryland says eight. I will certainly take his figures.

But that is a half dozen or 8 out of 150 Ambassadors we have representing us around the world. That is hardly a flood, in my judgment. How does an individual give $100,000? There are limits, and the limits are far less. I might say, when someone gives outside, not directly to the candidate, when they give to the party for so-called party building, then there are no limits.

This was not something started by this side of the aisle. This was not something started in the last campaign by the Republicans. However, it was copied by the Republicans when it was started by our friends on the other side of the aisle and it is not surprising to me that friends of the President would respond to such a solicitation.

Does a friend of many years who has succeeded greatly in business, a friend who responds to a request for a contribution, thereby become disqualified to serve as an ambassador? Is a contribution to be deemed just given for some kind of advantage? Cannot a large contributor also be judged as being a friend? Cannot a large contribution be judged as a sign of friendship? Or of a commitment to a philosophy? Cannot it also be judged as a sign of success?

The fact that some political appointees have been successful enough in business to contribute large amounts of money to the political process should not be held against them, as some would say. The only thing that this person has accomplished is that he has made a political contribution. I would review again the accomplishments of Joe Zappala, and I would also say that in the report by the Committee on Foreign Relations it is said:

> Finally, Mr. Zappala's political activity is a very important part of the story of our democratic system.

And I agree that his political involvement should not indeed be held against him. Certainly, his political involvement over many, many years was not aimed at being an ambassador at some later point. I know Mr. Zappala and I know indeed that is the truth.

As I have said, Mr. President, one of the most important jobs ambassadors have today is to help American companies find new business abroad. Successful businessmen know how to make deals; they know how to get things done. Having them as ambassadors helps the State Department carry out this very key task to find new markets, to help reduce our trade deficit. So I am pleased we have businessmen who go abroad.

Again, Mr. President, I perhaps, with my background, am more comfortable. Perhaps the great distinction between me and some of the critics of these nominees is the fact that my background is not dissimilar to theirs and my background is, on the other hand, dissimilar, not very close to what the background of what most in the Senate is.

Frankly, Mr. President, one of the reasons I am in the U.S. Senate is that many people in my State thought that my experience as a businessman and with a career in business was just the kind of values that were needed here in the U.S. Senate. I agree that my approach to problems of wanting to get things done is rather frustrating when compared with the way we sometimes work here. I am used to going to point A to point B in a rather direct line and not wasting too much time in doing so.

The fact that Mr. Zappala does not speak Spanish, although, as I said, by this time he has had time to become proficient in it and also since he is fluent in Italian and romance language, his ability to learn Spanish is much improved.

I might point out very often career diplomats are also not proficient in the language of the country where they go. Sometimes there is no logic to it at all. Not so long ago a diplomat who was going to go to Saudi Arabia came to my office. He was fluent in Mandarin Chinese, so fluent and so skilled and so familiar with the history of China that when President Nixon went there, he was the interpreter and adviser to President Nixon. He spoke Chinese with such proficiency that he was the interpreter. Now he is going to Saudi Arabia. He does not speak Arabic. In going to Saudi Arabia, I think he is most capable. Maybe his Chinese will come in handy if in reading some of the manuals that go along with the missiles China sold to Saudi Arabia.

Another Chinese expert is going to Botswana. A third Chinese expert is going to Haiti. So there is no logic to some of the career diplomats and where they go, nor is the language matter one of great difficulty that will not soon be overcome.

Mr. President, I believe that this President is not, in the words of Alexander Hamilton certainly not an unfit character. This is a man who has achieved much in life who, indeed, should withstand and closest scrutiny by the Senate of the United States. He has been a man of accomplishment, not only in the field of business but also in the field of charity. He has done much to improve the welfare of his fellow human beings.

So I congratulate the President for sending Joe Zappala to us. I am pleased that his nomination has finally reached the floor of the Senate, in October, after it has been discussed in the Senate for over 5 months. It is time that we fill that slot. It is time that we send an Ambassador to Spain. It is time that we vote on Joe Zappala and send him as an accredited diplomat on to Spain where he will serve this country, in my judgment, in the most admirable fashion. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the nomination of Joe Zappala to be the Ambassador to Spain, the nomination made by the President of the United States.

I make no apologies for the fact he has been a very successful businessman and has been able to contribute to the Republican Party. I make no apology that he is a close friend to the President of the United States, and there have been some indications that the government in Spain is pleased by that nomination to realize that they have that kind of direct input.

Let me try to put the debate in perspective, at least from my point of view. There has been much discussion indicating that the President is relying more and more on noncareer appointments. If you put it into perspective, if you go back and look over the record, starting in 1961-62, the Kennedy years, 64 percent were career, 36 percent noncareer; 1963, the Kennedy-Johnson years, 65 percent career, 35 percent noncareer. Go to the Nixon years, 69 percent career, 31 percent noncareer.

If the 28 nominees who are before the Senate are confirmed, the ratio under the Bush administration would be approximately 65 percent to 35 percent.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. MACK. I say to the Senator, I appreciate him asking me to yield, but I have been here now some 2 hours, and I would like to finish my statement. I graciously listened to your comments for some length of time. I am sure you will have opportunity to respond.

Mr. SARBANES. I assume the Senator will be happy to yield at the end of his statement.

Mr. MACK. I will be delighted to see he has time.

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator from Florida will be happy to yield for some comments.

Mr. MACK. I will determine that at the end of my comments.

The Senator from Minnesota, Senator BOSCHWITZ, and I came to the U.S. Senate with similar backgrounds. As he indicated, maybe this is why we have a sensitivity to what has been said with respect to Mr. Zappala.

I began my career in 1982, having spent 16 years in the banking business, never acted in politics and the question was raised, am I qualified, am I capable? I was pleased to respond and react to those questions and said that I would like people to look at, my record, my involvement, what I had accomplished in my career before making a determination to run for the House, then for the U.S. Senate.

I make the same comments with respect to Joseph Zappala, an individual who has been successful in his business career and very involved in his community. I think most people would recognize the fact that raising a family of four children, active in business, one could make the argument that that is all that is required.

But, again, as Senator BOSCHWITZ pointed out, there are many accomplishments by this individual: his interest in helping his community, helping children, helping to solve the drug problem. He was involved in getting the STRAIGHT program started in 1976. He served as president of the STRAIGHT program. Again, we have heard that tens of thousands of individuals, young children, have been helped because of that involvement.

In addition to that, he served as president of the Pinellas Association for Retarded Children, again making a significant difference, and again fundraising capabilities played a role. Funds were cut off. Mr. Zappala and others banded together and raised the money that in fact has helped thousands of kids. There are 600 enrolled in the program today.

I mention that because it shows that special sensitivity, that special need to be involved, that special belief that one person can make a difference. He has done that in his life. He has indicated his ability to succeed, again just looking at it from the community aspect.

When you look at his business ventures, again we share a common background. He started a bank in 1971, very successful—successful in business, in the development of construction. Again, I make no apologies for an individual being successful. I think we want to send a message that, yes, there is a role for successful business people in Government. In fact, there are many of us who think they are needed.

In addition, I should like to touch for a moment on this question that keeps coming up about, well, he is not qualified because he has not served before. There was a letter sent by Robert Wagner, one of the former Ambassadors to Spain, to several Senators and I would like to read just a portion of it.

He says, "I have had the privilege and opportunity to speak at length with Mr. Zappala. He impresses me as a fine and decent American citizen who through study has a real grasp of the responsibilities of Ambassador. I have found him to be intelligent and conversant with what is going on in Spain and the United States relations with Spain.

"As you may remember, I was named Ambassador to Spain by President Lyndon Johnson in the 1960's after my terms of office as Mayor of New York. Therefore, I had a special concern that we have good representation there. The Ambassador can make a concrete contribution to the people of Spain and of course to the people of the United States.".

He goes on further to say, "As one of Florida's most distinguished businessmen, Joe's remarkable record of community service also makes him one of the State's leading philanthropists. He has been a leading adviser and fundraiser for religious and charitable organizations as well as political campaigns throughout the United States."

And then he says in parentheses, (The latter is something that we never held against Averell Harriman.)

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a letter from the National Italian American Foundation as well as from the Pinellas Association for Retarded Children.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL ITALIAN AMERICAN FOUNDATION,
Washington, DC, September 6, 1989.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Italian American Foundation strongly urges your support of the nomination of Joseph Zappala to be our next Ambassador to Spain. Since it has been over four months since President Bush first nominated Mr. Zappala for this post, we also request the Senate leadership to immediately set the vote.

We strongly agree with Senator Charles Robb, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee who said, "in the case of Ambassadorships, I am inclined to give great deference to the judgment of the President, since an Ambassador is not only the United States representative, but also the personal representative of the President. And, ultimately the President's accomplishments in foreign affairs will depend on the strength of these and other appointments."

President Bush nominated Joseph Zappala on the basis of an outstanding career as a businessman, civil and philanthropic leader in Florida. Joe is the highly successful President and CEO of Joseph Zappala and Associates, an investment and land development company based in St. Petersburg, Florida. He also serves as President of Straight, Inc., the largest national drug treatment program for adolescents producing some 10,000 drug free young people in 15 states. He is also past chairman of the Pinellas Association for Retarded Children. He is the recipient of the prestigious Ben Gurion Award, the Tree of Life Award and the Gates of Jerusalem Award for his commitment to the State of Israel. In fact, later this year a park is being named in his honor in the Peace Park between Egypt and Israel.

According to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee "Mr. Zappala's extensive career as a businessman, financier, philanthropist and political organizer has given him excellent skills as a negotiator, advocate, manager and coalition builder. In other words, he has a demonstrated record in the four key areas which must be mastered by a diplomat." The committee also cited his "strong knowledge" of the major issues in current U.S. Spain relations.

Joseph Zappala is eminently qualified to be our next Ambassador to Spain. We commend President Bush for selecting such an outstanding individual for this important post. We are obviously proud that he chose such a prominent Italian American to serve in Spain especially since it will be one of the three main nations celebrating the Columbus Quincentenary in 1992. The Order of Sons of Italy in America joins us in urging a prompt and favorable vote on Mr. Zappala. At their National Convention in August, a resolution was passed expressing their "full support" of Joseph Zappala and urged the Senate "to expeditiously schedule a final vote on confirmation." We especially agree with the conclusion of their resolution which stated "any further delay would be unwarranted and unfair to Mr. Zappala, President Bush and the Italian American community."

With best wishes we are

JENO F. PAULUCCI,
National Chairman.
FRANK D. STELLA,
President.

PINELLAS ASSOCIATION FOR RETARDED CHILDREN,
St. Petersburg, FL, September 14, 1989.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: The Pinellas Association for Retarded Children is a nonprofit corporation that serves retarded children in Pinellas County. We accept everyone regardless of the severity of their disability or their ability to pay.

We also serve youngsters who are visually impaired, hearing impaired, neglected, abused, emotionally disturbed and nonambulatory.

Currently there are approximately 600 children and adults in the PARC Program. We provide year-round residential services for 135 children and adults. PARC programs include: Preschool, Speech, Physical and Occupational Therapy, Residential Services, Sheltered Workshop, Vocational Training and Job Placement. Hundreds of people in our community are able to walk today as a result of the physical therapy received as very young children in our Preschool Program. Each year we graduate approximately 30 children from our Preschool Program and many of them are able to attend regular first-grade classes in the public school system.

Every month at least one adult leaves our program for community employment and independent living. During our history we have made it possible for hundreds of people to leave state institutions for the mentally retarded to live and learn at the PARC Center with all the benefits of the community available.

We are involved in the Special Olympics and have a very successful recreation program.

PARC has approximately 1,000 duespaying members and over 1,500 volunteers. The volunteer sector is the backbone of this organization.

Joe Zappala, past president of the Board and Board Member for 12 years, without a doubt has been the most outstanding contributor to the success of this organization. Under his leadership at the Board level, we climbed out of a period of financial problems to a stable, sound fiscal organization.

Mr. Zappala single-handedly was responsible for raising the money to construct our first 10,000 square foot Sheltered Workshop. Mr. Zappala has introduced our organization to all of his family, friends and business associates.

The ripple affect of this presence on the Board of Directors is immeasurable.

Over the years Joe has won several awards at the state level for his outstanding contributions to the handicapped. He has been very generous to the Pinellas Association for Retarded Children with his time, talent and donations.

Each year I call Joe Zappala to contact his friends to invite them to the variety of special event, fund-raising affairs that we conduct for the benefit of the children we serve.

Joe Zappala has made a significant impact on the lives of the children in this community.

BERT MULLER,
President.

Mr. MACK. In closing, I say again I want to focus on what this individual has accomplished in his life. That is where we are going to determine whether the individual has the ability to be successful in this job to which the President has appointed him.

I think that record speaks very clearly. This is a man who can take on challenges, has proved his ability to succeed, and I am confident he will be a great success as our Ambassador to Spain.

Now I am delighted to yield to my colleagues from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. I would like to ask the Senator about these numbers. Is the Senator representing on behalf of the administration that in all the subsequent appointments of Ambassadors they intend to make, they will be career people in order to sustain this ratio that he talked about?

Mr. MACK. I say to the Senator from Maryland that I certainly cannot speak for what the future appointments or nominations might be, but I think it will be on the record, in the years to come, probably very close to the 65-35 ratio and, in fact, when you look down the information which I took out of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, from August 3, 1989, that is a fairly constant ratio, and so I feel confident that will occur in the future.

Mr. SARBANES. We have no assurance of that from the administration. The basis on which you can make a comparison is to take the nominations this administration has made and compare them with the nominations that other administrations made.

Now, other administrations kept their Ambassadors in place until they eventually got around to making the nomination, either at the end of their tenure or perhaps even earlier. What the figures show, on a comparative basis, on the basis of the numbers thus far appointed, is that this admnistration has completely reversed the ratios so that their nomination of political people far exceeds anything that has occurred at this point in previous administrations.

If the Senator is prepared to say for the administration, well, this is the end of it; we are not going to do any more of these political people; we have done them all right up front and this is the end of it; and they are all going to be career, and therefore eventually we will work back into a percentage that looks reasonable and compares with the others, that is one thing. But as far as I know they have not made any such commitment. On the basis of that we have seen so far and know so far, they have really left the career service to the side and they have gone all political. A former Under Secretary——

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I would like to reclaim my time.

Mr. SARBANES. A former Under Secretary of the Department, in referring to what was——

Mr. MACK. I would like to reclaim my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. MACK. I believe I have answered his question, and I would like to reclaim my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. MACK. I thank the Chair.

Again, I say in my closing remarks, I think we have addressed this question with respect to ratios. I am not trying to make any blame on future appointments that the President of the United States is going to make with career versus noncareer. If you look at the record, if you add the 28 appointments that are now waiting to the numbers that are in the field, you are going to come out with a ratio of roughly 65-35. We can debate in the future what the ratio should have been or could be, but the reality is it is going to be very close to 65-35.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Will the Senator from Florida yield for a comment?

Mr. MACK. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. I say to the Senator from Florida that this administration has said time and time again that it fully intends to maintain the normal two-thirds to one-third ratio that has existed between career and noncareer appointees.

Mr. MACK. Again, I thank the Senator for his comments.

In closing, I encourage my colleagues, both Republicans and Democrats, to support this Presidential nomination to Spain. He is a qualified individual, an individual of whom we can all be proud.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article "Trashing the Foreign Service," to which I made reference be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TWO BUSH MISTAKES: TRASHING THE FOREIGN SERVICE

(By Ronald I. Spiers)

In June, I left the U.S. Foreign Service after a career of almost 35 years. I would not have traded these 35 years for anything. The variety, excitement and opportunity for participation in history-making events could not have been matched anywhere else. Yet I departed with a deep unease about the future of our country's diplomatic establishment.

America's diplomats—unlike her intelligence and military services—have no domestic constituency. Indeed, there is general ignorance about what a diplomat is and does. I have been misidentified as a Forest Service ranger and as a member of the Foreign Legion. Others still dismiss us as "striped-pants cookie-pushers," engaged, so they imply, in one long round of cocktail parties. But our diplomats work at the very heart of our most important national interests. Journalists write about foreign policy, scholars and historians analyze it, academics teach about it, but only our diplomats are practitioners.

Indifference toward diplomacy seems to be shared by many in Congress and the new administration. Two stories in The Post last week illustrated the problem. One noted that Bush has thus far appointed fewer Foreign Service officers as ambassadors than either Ronald Reagan or Jimmy Carter—favoring instead political appointees, including one ambassadorial nominee who has no job history and no college degree. The other story noted that the Senate has introduced 120 amendments—most of them involving pet projects and special interests—to the State Department authorization bill.

We wouldn't treat our military so contemptuously. Yet diplomats—who run greater dangers these days—seem to be fair game for the politicians. They face dangers, disease, discomfort. Their pay, while adequate, is far below what people of their caliber could command in the private sector. Often their spouses can't be employed in the countries to which they are assigned. They face a constant threat from terrorists—since the Korean War, more ambassadors have been killed on duty than all the admirals and generals. And what do our Foreign Service officers get for their troubles? Potshots from Congress and the White House.

In even the most professional foreign service, of course, there can be bad apples, and that may be the case with Felix Bloch, a career diplomat who is under investigation by the FBI for possible involvement with the KGB. But what's striking about the U.S. Foreign Service—in comparison with almost every one in the world—is how rare such cases have been. The last one, to my knowledge, was in the early 1960s.

Foreign Service officers, like our military officers, are in a "bottom-up" system. They enter the service through a highly competitive process. As many as 18,000 apply to take the exam; at the end of the process, approximately 235 new officers are selected each year. The competition continues throughout an officer's career. When he reaches first-secretary rank, which is equivalent to an Army colonel, he can compete for promotion to the "flag rank" of the Senior Foreign Service, a 700-member cadre that staffs the senior embassy and headquarters positions. An officer who elects to compete for the senior service has six annual shots at promotion. If unsuccessful, the officer must retire. This means that each year some very good officers are forced to leave, but it ensures that only the very heaviest hitters get to the top.

We need good diplomats. The problems the United States will increasingly face in the future are going to require more diplomatic skill and less military heft—problems like drugs, terrorism, pollution, waste management, acid rain, global warming, deforestation and desertification, regulation of outer space, debt management, trade regulation and a plethora of others. The focus of our attention will move from Afghanistan and "Star Wars" to rain forests and nuclear-waste dumps. Most of these issues are characterized by the irrelevance of force to their solution and by the requirement for diplomatic skill in mobilizing the collaborative efforts of the world community for dealing with them.

Yet the United States seriously underfunds its diplomacy. We spend less than two-tenths of one percent of our federal budget on this vital function. The $300 billion we spend on defense dwarfs the less than $2 billion we spend to conduct our foreign relations. The $600 million projected as the cost of a single new-generation B-2 bomber would be more than adequate to give us the tools we need to be effective. We could devote the funds we need to match our Soviet counterparts in language skills (when I was ambassador to Turkey we had no one in our embassy who was as fluent in Turkish as were a number of the Soviet embassy staff members; the same was true of Urdu when I was in the same position in Pakistan).

The cost of one B-2 would give our embassies the money needed to permit our personnel to travel in the hinterlands of the countries they are supposed to know. It would let us do the "representation" work that is often the lubricant for influencing key decision makers and opinion leaders in other countries. It would permit us to abandon the wasteful economies we are now forced into by skimping on maintenance of our embassies abroad, by sacrificing training or, alternatively, accepting long staffing gaps in our overseas missions. These long gaps means that an officer who will have spent several years developing contacts and accumulating knowledge, experience and cultural "feel" cannot pass on what he has learned to his successor, who must then start from scratch. These are foolish economies which cut deeply into our diplomatic "readiness."

Congress won't even let us economize. Surplus military bases are finally being closed, but we in the Foreign Service are unable to close unnecessary posts abroad because of some vested congressional interest. So we pay to keep them going while cutting more important areas of expenditure. Last year Congress decreed that the State Department would be penalized by a $50-million "fine" if it closed any of its posts. This year the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is trying to make the department open a post in the city he served in as a young diplomat!

Then there is the problem of ambassadorships. Once upon a time, generals were appointed on political grounds. Commissions were sold and senior military officers were selected for their political connections. The story of Britain's misadventures in the Crimean War demonstrated the folly of these traditions, and today no one thinks of appointing military leaders because of their political campaign contributions. I believe professionalism is as important in our diplomatic service as it is in our military and intelligence services. This does not mean the diplomatic service, any more than the military, can be a law unto itself. Nor does it mean the political appointees can't make outstanding ambassadors. But things are getting out of hand.

The politicization of ambassadorships, which accelerated under the Reagan administration, is if anything getting worse in the Bush administration—despite the general expectation that the president, who had served in foreign-affairs positions himself, would change things. The new secretary of commerce set the tone soon after taking office, when he was quoted as complaining about the slowness of paying off political supporters with appointments. By the end of May, the president had selected 44 noncareer and 28 career ambassadors.

Competent non-career ambassadorial appointees are welcomed by the career service. I have worked under several, including David Bruce and Elliot Richardson, who were my chiefs when I was posted in London. These were people with serious interests and extensive backgrounds in foreign affairs, superbly qualified to contribute effectively to conduct of American foreign relations. However, appointees of this caliber are now very much the exception." And during President Reagan's eight years the percentage of political appointees rose from 25 to 40.

This has two effects. First, it demonstrates a casualness, a lack of seriousness of purpose, on the part of the United States. Imagine the reaction of Bahamians when the newly appointed ambassador listed as his qualifications for the job the fact that he came from a state where gambling was a big industry and that he liked to play golf. Twice in recent years, political ambassadors had to be removed for outrageous personal or sexual behavior.

Second, it makes management of a career service difficult and ultimately weakens our diplomatic capability. We have had a recent exodus at the top of our service as some of our best senior personnel—people who have been trained and paid at taxpayer expense—find they have no future in the Foreign Service because people whose only qualification is the size of their political contributions have preempted positions that career officers had spent a lifetime preparing to occupy. They leave, and the United States loses valuable assets. It is having a corrosive effect on some of our brightest younger and mid-level officers who no longer have the spur of a good chance at ultimately holding positions at the highest leadership levels.

Two arguments are made on behalf of this practice. Both, in my view, are specious. Political appointees, it is argued, have direct access to the president that career appointees do not have. This is seldom the case. In any event, ambassadors who go directly to the president tend to get short shrift. John Kennedy let his impatience show when some of his appointees tried to exercise this purported access too freely.

A second argument is that the president needs people on whom he can rely to carry out his policies because they know and share his viewpoint. However, the career service is—like the military—a disciplined service. There is no uncertainty about who sets policy. Presidents generally have more trouble with free-wheeling political people than they ever do with career professionals. President Reagan faced the problem of a political appointee ambassador who went off to Libya trying to implement his own policy toward Gadhafi.

Finally, it needs to be understood that an ambassador is not a "policy-maker." Policies are made in Washington, and carried out in the field. This is probably the basis for the oft-encountered contention that ambassadors are essentially "messenger-boys." So, it is asked, what difference does their qualification make? I encountered this contention frequently in the last administration. There is a self-fulfilling aspect to this canard, since Washington will avoid dealing through or listening seriously to people of whose qualifications they are skeptical.

In fact, an ambassador's energy, persuasiveness judgment, contacts, substantive knowledge—his ability to act coolly improvise quickly on the basis of experience or well-honed instincts and intimate knowledge of U.S. goals and objectives—can be crucial in a crisis. There is no substitute for on-the-spot knowledge of other cultures, languages, personalities and what buttons to push to get results.

I believe the Bush administration should show much greater care in its selection than it has to date, as well as recognize the impossibility of keeping an astute and effective career service if its members conclude, as too many have, that the opportunities for promotion to the most responsible positions either at home or abroad are greatly restricted.

At last count before I left the State Department, more than 100 senior officers were without assignment. These so-called "corridor walkers" are people with the skills, background and experience—and the years of training—to represent us with credit aboard. It is an unconscionable waste of an important national asset. Foreign diplomats shake their heads in wonder at this American profligacy.

There is a set of plaques in the main lobby of the Department of State headquarters in Washington. Each May the names are added of those members of our diplomatic staffs who have been killed in the line of duty in the previous 12 months.

When I joined the Foreign Service in January 1955 it held 72 names, covering a period of 175 years. During the 35 years I was a Foreign Service officer, 90 names had been added—most of them victims of terrorist action. It angers me to see their legacy of diplomatic skill and professionalism being squandered by Congress and the administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona, Mr. DECONCINI.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. Is it necessary to get time yielded or is the floor open?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. DECONCINI. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has been recognized.

Mr. DECONCINI. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I would like to speak for a few moments on the nomination of Joe Zappala as U.S. Ambassador to Spain. I am very pleased and thankful that the Senator from Maryland agreed to let this matter come to the floor for a vote. I understand his strong feelings in the area of ambassadorial appointments and I have listened a number of times when he has spoken.

I also thank the majority leader for scheduling this nomination. He has a busy job on his hands, as the President pro tempore of this body knows better than anybody else, to schedule things. The majority leader committed to a number of us that he would bring Mr. Zappala before the Senate so we could, as we say, work our will and vote up or down on this nomination. The majority leader has been accommodating to this Senator and others.

Frankly, Mr. President, I believe that much of the uproar about this nomination is more of a tempest in a teapot. Whatever the language that was included in the Foreign Service Act of 1980 on the qualifications of Ambassadors, the Constitution is quite clear on the President's prerogative in this field. The Constitution says, and I quote, "He," meaning the President, "shall nominate, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls."

I am not trying to deny that the Senate plays a very important constitutional role. That is what we are doing today, debating and discussing qualifications and the ability of this individual, Mr. Zappala, to serve as the Ambassador to Spain.

I have always believed that our responsibility is to give the President his prerogative unless there is a compelling reason that the person is unqualified or cannot hold that office. But I feel the President should be allowed certain discretions in this area. That is what he has done in this instance.

The important part of this process is to be satisfied when, from the President's point of view, he has a nominee that can do the job he believes is necessary. As the architect of our Nation's foreign policy, the Chief of State must be comfortable with those who are going to implement his foreign policy. That is what the appointing process is all about. If our Founding Fathers thought otherwise, they would have said that the President must choose from the rank and file, or he must choose with some criteria laid out in the Constitution. We know that is not the case. There is a protection that the United States Senate exercises—in the event a nominee is appointed and for reasons of a lack of qualifications or other reasons that the nominee is not in the best interests of the United States—then the Senate should rise and refuse to approve the nomination, whether it be for an ambassador or for a court of appeals or the Supreme Court.

I also reject the idea that you have to be a foreign policy expert to be an ambassador. Ambassadors must perform a number of functions. They must manage an embassy, of tremendous size, such as the one in Spain. Many of you have visited there, as I have. That is not a small little enterprise in and of itself. The Ambassador to Spain is responsible for overseeing approximately 250 employees, for reading all cables that come through, numbering hundreds per week. The agencies represented including the Commerce Department, the Agriculture Department, the USIA, and the Defense Department are all under his control, all reporting to him as though they were reporting to the President of the United States.

Each person attached to the Embassy is directly responsible to the Ambassador, and they must work in concert as a team representing the United States abroad. Also, as Spain only became a member of the European Community in 1986 and as all Europe is moving toward an economic union planned in 1992—a big role for any ambassador and any person who is there—Mr. Zappala's business background should serve as an asset in this post. Clearly, previous experience in running a successful business is extremely relevant to the successful running of an embassy.

Ambassadors also directly represent the American people. I believe our Ambassador should reflect the regional, economic, and cultural diversity that make this country unique. Representing America cannot be left to a small group of foreign policy officials, the elite in the Foreign Service and the State Department who would like to think that only they can put forward the policy of the administration that is in power. That is not what our system is about. That is why we elect a President every 4 years—so we have an opportunity to have a new policy put forward and not one that is left over or which might continue. We need citizens from all walks of life to demonstrate the ideals that this country is all about.

One of the issues raised by the opponents of this nomination is that Mr. Zappala does not have the experience in international affairs. I believe that while such experience is very useful and can certainly be of some benefit to the United States, it is not fair to say that a lack of this experience is a reason to deny the confirmation of this nominee.

There are a number of examples, I might say. First, private citizens, often with little or no previous experience in foreign affairs, have served our country with distinction as ambassadors abroad. We have had business people, and entertainers serve as our ambassadors. Some have been controversial and have not done a good job. We have also had some that have come through the ranks on the professional side that have not done a good job.

As an example of one previous ambassador who has done a good job and came from the ranks as a private citizen with no experience which immediately springs to mind is Anthony Motley. Ambassador Motley was an Alaskan real estate developer. That is what Mr. Zappala has done for a good part of his life. He has not developed real estate in Alaska but in Florida.

Mr. Motley was appointed to Ambassador to Brazil by Ronald Reagan in 1981. He had no previous experience in foreign policy whatsoever except foreign travel as have many, many Americans. He had been, however, a strong supporter of President Reagan's campaign. Yes, he contributed money to the campaign of Ronald Reagan. He faced a battery of skeptics in the press and elsewhere similar to that now being faced by Mr. Zappala.

I would like to read part of an article from the New York Times commenting on Ambassador Motley's performance:

> In a year he gained extraordinary access to the highest levels of the Brazilian Government earned the highest regard of other ambassadors in Brasilia, won over the most traditional diplomats in his own Embassy, and gained the singular tribute of being hailed our Ambassador by major Brazilian newspaper.

This Ambassador's work in Brazil earned him a further post in the Reagan administration because of the outstanding leadership he demonstrated, while coming with no previous amount of foreign relations experience. He was appointed as Assistant Secretary of State for Latin American Affairs. There are few observers of international affairs—and I think I can include our professional diplomats in that number—who would deny that he has served his country well in both of these posts.

Another example is Clare Booth Luce, a well-known playwright, politician, and a woman of renown throughout the United States. Clearly, her appointment was a political appointment for her past assistance and support to the Republican Party. She served as Ambassador to both Brazil and Italy. Her tenure as Ambassador to Italy was summed up in the Washington Post editorial as follows:

> When she began her post in Rome more than 3 years ago she had to combat Italian fears and suspicions of a woman Ambassador and amateur diplomat. When she left she had the respect and admiration of the Italian people, if not always their agreement.

What a compliment for someone with no diplomatic experience to have stepped into a very sensitive role as Ambassador to Italy and received that kind of compliment for her service to this country.

She was a political appointee. Which ones are not political appointees, perhaps, when you really get to the bottom line? She ended her term in office with accolades and quotes from President Eisenhower as having done a superb job.

We tend to forget that Elsworth Bunker, the premier diplomat of the past generation, was in the sugar refining business before being appointed as Ambassador to Argentina. He served well there and with great distinction—as a matter of fact, for 35 years in the Foreign Service. Following his first appointment as ambassador in 1951, Ambassador Bunker served in some of the toughest assignments in our diplomatic corps, including Vietnam.

In serving his country Ambassador Bunker won the Presidential Medal of Freedom and the Grand Cross Knight of the Republic of Italy. He went from sugar refiner to diplomatic troubleshooter around the world on behalf of this Nation. Perhaps Joe Zappala is a future Elsworth Bunker.

If this body does not confirm him, we will never know, but I am satisfied that if he is not an Elsworth Bunker, he could indeed be a Clare Booth Luce, and he can serve at least in a capacity equal to that prominence.

We cannot tell today, but neither will the Senate know unless we move forward and approve this nomination.

There are other examples of private citizens who have become fine ambassadors representing the United States and who have played major roles in foreign policy transmission and direction—IBM Chairman Tom Watson, who served as Ambassador to the Soviet Union. It was only appropriate that the United States send the chairman of the leading example of our capitalist system to the capital of the largest Communist system.

What a compliment that was to the United States and to Mr. Watson, and what a fine record he was able to leave as a legacy in serving this Nation.

I point also, to the Coors official, Mr. Sam Zakhem, who served in Bahrain. Here was someone who was treated with skepticism. Here was a man whose parents were immigrants from Lebanon. He lived the American dream, wanted to give back something to his country. He made some money in this great Nation of ours and he made contributions to the Republican Party. He served this Nation with eagerness and exuberance in Panama.

When I was there visiting with him, it was interesting to talk with the crown prince, who went out of his way to tell me how influential this businessman ambassador was in getting the Bahraini Government not to vote in favor of sanctions by the Arab League against the United States after our strike against Libya.

The crown prince told me himself; I asked if the Ambassador asked him to raise it. He said, "No, I raised that because it is important for us to know how we feel about this individual in Bahrain."

It was there that our servicemen and women were able to recover from the tragic attack on the Stark during our operations in the Persian Gulf. It was in part due to the Ambassador Zakhem's effort, that these berthing rights were guaranteed.

I believe Joseph Zappala will exemplify those standards set by these great citizen diplomats of the past and become a first-rate ambassador. He will bring to the job a number of qualities and qualifications that will serve him and the country in good stead.

He is a man who is used to meeting challenges. The son of an immigrant, of an Italian immigrant, Joseph Zappala has built an investment and land development company in Florida that has been responsible for projects worth hundreds of millions of dollars.

He truly has adopted the American can-do spirit. He wants to do what is good for his country. He has also been extremely active in philanthropic activities. On an issue close to my own heart, he was cofounder and president of STRAIGHT, Inc., a drug treatment and rehabilitation program for adolescents with offices around the country today.

He is involved in the University of Florida School of Veterinary Medicine, as well as many other associations, including one benefiting retarded children. He has been a strong supporter of Israel since his youth, when, as a 17-year-old, he volunteered for the Army during World War II and was sent to train outside Dachau. There he learned firsthand of the atrocities of the Holocaust, and has worked ever since to ensure that the lessons learned there are shared with succeeding generations.

He has been awarded the Ben Gurion Award, the Tree of Life Award, and the Gates of Jerusalem Award for his commitment to the State of Israel and the welfare of the countries in the Middle East. There was recently a park named in his honor on the Peace Road between Egypt and Israel.

Much has been made of Mr. Zappala's inability to speak Spanish. I must say that certainly is a tremendous benefit of any ambassador. Many ambassadors, including the IBM president, Ambassador of the Soviet Union, did not speak Russian, and yet he executed that position very well.

I point out that Mr. Zappala speaks Italian, and I firmly believe that he can familiarize himself with Spanish. He understands the Italian culture and life, and I must say, though, different as it is, there are many similarities between those two nations and the cultural values that bring them together. I have little doubt that he can become very fluent in Spanish in a short period of time.

The issues being raised on this nomination are not directly related to Mr. Zappala's qualifications. He has been caught up in the middle of a struggle over what has been seen by critics as an inordinate number of political appointments to ambassadorial positions, and that for some reason, this is a bad thing.

Politically motivated appointments to ambassadorships have been with us since the beginning of the Republic, and I daresay will continue, and should continue. If a President is foolish enough—and some are—to put someone into a position representing the United States, being the President's voice in that country, who is unqualified and does not understand the country, and is unable to articulate and to represent the United States and the views of the President, the President pays the price, not just that individual.

The President has made clear in recent statements that he expects his appointments to be in line with previous administrations and, if anything, he wants to reduce the number of political appointees. I do not know what else we can ask.

During the debate on the MacNeil/Lehrer Report last Friday, it was noted that while 36 of the 58 people President Bush has nominated to be ambassadors are political nominees, the President has also left nearly 100 career ambassadors in place around the world.

What are we going to say? If one tips one more over than one is supposed to, by somebody's arbitrary number, then there are no more political ambassadors? Each one should be chosen first on their merit and their relationship with the President, and second, they should be chosen on whether they can represent the United States and the President of the United States.

As we face that obligation under the Constitution to confirm or not to, to advise and consent or not to, it is the responsibility of us to look at what the individual is, and not judge it on numbers.

To sum up, Mr. President, Mr. Zappala is one of Florida's leading businessmen. He has a long history of involvement in community service, and he has been active in the public arena.

I have no doubt that he will make an excellent Ambassador to Spain from this country; he will make our country very proud. He comes from a background that is dedicated to success and to hard work. He has a close relationship with the President of the United States. I do not know what else we could ask for.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. PELL.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PELL. I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. Did I understand the Senator from Arizona to be citing a New York Times editorial with respect to Ambassador Motley?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield for a colloquy?

Mr. PELL. I yield the floor for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DECONCINI. If the Senator would yield, the particular article is in the New York Times, dated November 24, 1982, "Our Man From Alaska Goes Over Big in Brasilia." I ask unanimous consent that that be inserted into the RECORD. I would be glad to share it with the Senator from Maryland.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUR MAN FROM ALASKA GOES OVER BIG IN BRASILIA

(By Warren Hoge)

RIO DE JANEIRO, November 23.—When Langhorne Anthony Motley was named the United States Ambassador to Brazil a year ago, a lot of people grumbled.

"I know, I was one of them," said Lowell C. Kilday, director of the State Department's Office of Brazilian Affairs in Washington. "A lot of eyebrows were raised. We looked at Brazil, the most important country in Latin America, and thought, 'What's going on around here sending a guy like that?' "

In Brasilia, the outgoing Ambassador, Robert M. Sayre, was asked by the Federal Reserve Board head, Paul A. Volcker, then visiting Brazil, who his successor would be.

"Some real estate agent from Alaska," was the acid response, according to two other people who participated in the conversation.

THE COMPLAINTS ARE QUALIFIED

A land developer, Republican Party stalwart and former Air Force officer, Mr. Motley came here from Anchorage as one of the host of political appointees with which the Reagan Administration has filled its ambassadorial ranks—to the distress of many career diplomats like Mr. Sayre. The American Foreign Service Association says that one of every three such appointments have been going to noncareer people under President Reagan after the Carter Administration had succeeded in reducing the number to one in every four.

But today the complaining in State Department corridors over the phenomenon carries a conversational asterisk exempting Mr. Motley. In a year he has gained extraordinary access to the highest levels of the Brazilian Government, earned the high regard of other ambassadors in Brasilia, won over the most traditional diplomats in his own embassy and gained the singular tribute of being hailed as "our" Ambassador by a major Brazilian newspaper.

He played a principal role in setting up President Reagan's coming trip here, dealing directly with Brazil's president, Jaoa Baptista Figueiredo, by White House telephone while the Brazilian leader was campaigning in interior cities for candidates in elections held Nov. 15. If the two Presidents follow the practice of their first meeting in Washington in May, Mr. Motley will be doing the translating when they get together in Brasilia Dec. 1.

BRAZILIANS BACKGROUND A HELP

Mr. Motley has brought to his assignment one great advantage. Born and raised in Rio de Janeiro, he speaks fluent Portuguese down to the accompanying gestures and unprintable expressions. "A lot of Brazilian editors have told me they have to clean up his interviews," an embassy press officer said.

* * * He has driven his pickup out to Mr. Figueiredo's farm on a number of occasions for drinks with the President himself or barbecue lunches with the presidential palace "groupo" that runs the country.

State Department officials said the embassy reporting from Brazil had grown far more informed and other ambassadors in Brasilia have been making it their habit to drop in on Mr. Motley for briefings before they take their home-leave trips. "When Motley first came, I wasn't prepared to be impressed," said one. "Who is this Republican businessman, I thought. But I've grown to have a lot of respect for him."

TELLING IT LIKE IT IS

Mr. Motley has become a familiar figure in Brazilian public life because of his willingness to talk to the press and to be interviewed on television. He earned the admiring editorial in São Paulo's Jornal da Tarde after making speeches to business and banking groups in the United States arguing that Brazil's economy was being unjustly compared to those of Mexico and Argentina. The newspaper complimented Mr. Motley for doing a job that it said should have been expected from Brazil's own Ambassador in Washington, Antonio Azeredo da Silveria.* * *

The son of a former head of the American Chamber of Commerce in Rio, Mr. Motley has gotten high marks from the sizable American business colony for his combative response to Brazilian charges that United States protectionism is crippling the economy here. "He really tells it like it is and we appreciated that," said Joseph W. O'Neill, president of the American Chamber of Commerce in São Paulo.

Mr. Motley commonly points out that millions of Americans wear Brazilian shoes and challenges critics to find any Brazilians in American footwear. He also notes that so many Bandeirante aircraft have been sold to American commuter airlines that there are now more Americans than Brazilians flying in such planes.

Forty-four years old and boyish-looking, he dresses in loafers and loose-fitting suits and often walks around with his hands thrust into his trouser pockets. It has not been uncommon for people to ask him where the Ambassador is.

10 YEARS IN THE AIR FORCE

Known as Tony, he said that even his mother never called him Langhorne. She is half-Brazilian and half-British and still lives in Rio. His father, an executive with Atlantic Refining in Rio, died in 1950 in a plane crash.

Mr. Motley lived in Rio until leaving for college at the Citadel in Charleston, S.C., when he was 17. He spent the 10 years after graduation in the Air Force before retiring to civilian life and helping create the largest real estate company in Alaska.

He served for two years as the state's Secretary of Commerce and Economic Development and then spent four years lobbying in Washington against environmental groups in the Alaska lands debate. He has worked closely with the Alaskan Senators, Ted Stevens and Frank H. Murkowski, each a Republican. In 1978 he and Senator Stevens were the only survivors of a plane crash in Anchorage that took five lives. He is outgoing and informal and works a room like a politician. "I've never seen a political appointee who got to know so many people so fast," said Mr. Kilday.

He plays soccer with the handymen and gardeners and opens his residence pool on weekends to embassy staffers who live in Brasilia's faceless "superquadra" apartment buildings. For July 4 this year, he gave a party for more than 2,000 people at his house with American beer and baked beans, parachute jumps, square dancing and treasure hunts. "He had everyone there from Cabinet officers to janitors," one Embassy staffer said.

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator wanted to know the source. I would like to insert into the RECORD immediately following that article an editorial in the New York Times dated July 3, 1989, entitled "Trivializing Ambassadors," in which the New York Times states, "No one argues that the country would be better served if all ambassadors were professional diplomats." I have not argued that here today, nor should campaign contributors be automatically excluded. They can do a good job, depending on their political instinct, stature, and experience.

I have also conceded that point here today. This editorial does go on to call for the rejection of Mr. Zappala, and it states: "It would be wise for the President to reconsider such nominees, and if not, permissible, indeed salutary, for the Senate to reject them." I ask that that editorial in full be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, July 3, 1989]

TRIVIALIZING AMBASSADORS

Presidents and Congress have a habit of rewarding fat cats and cronies with foreign embassies, of treating many ambassadorial appointments as if they don't much matter in representing American interests and values. But they do matter, sometimes critically.

President Bush has not improved on the tradition, to judge by his nominations to Spain, Australia and New Zealand. The only distinction visible in his proposed Ambassador to Madrid, Joseph Zappala, a Florida developer, is a distinctively large contribution to the Republican Party, reportedly $126,000. Ditto for another Florida businessman, Melvin Sembler ($127,000), nominated to Canberra. And the choice for Wellington is Della Newman, a Seattle broker who managed Mr. Bush's state campaign.

Dispatching a lightweight or inexperienced envoy sends a message of unconcern verging on contempt. That's why a move by Senator Paul Sarbanes deserves support. The Maryland Democrat has forced the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to put off considering this trio until mid-July, giving the Senate more time to weigh the nominees' qualifications—and for all concerned to think harder about the importance of ambassadors.

No one argues that the country would be better served if all ambassadors were professional diplomats. That would have meant losing such star noncareer performers as Mike Mansfield, Averell Harriman, David Bruce and Edwin Reischauer, to name a few. Nor should campaign contributors be automatically excluded. They can do a good job, depending on their political instincts, stature and experience. Moreover, foreign service officers can make feeble ambassadors, given to inertia, caution and fixation with form.

Presidents need considerable latitude in selecting what are in part personal representatives. The Constitution spells out their right to do so, subject to senatorial consent. It clearly stretches the legislative role to withhold or delay confirmation if a Senator objects to a nominee on ideological grounds—an abuse repeatedly and indefensibly indulged by Senator Jesse Helms.

Yet advice and consent does mean something: the Senate has an obligation to hold Presidential nominees to rudimentary standards of competence. Senator Sarbanes has reasons to be troubled when Mr. Sembler, the nominee for Australia, supplies this written answer to a question about his qualification: "I have been known as a coalition-builder, able to organize my peers to action in support of worthy civic, charitable and political causes."

Nearly identical language was used by whoever answered the same written question for Mr. Zappala, the nominee for Spain, treating both the Senate and an important capital with the same manipulative cynicism.

Those old European capitals, with large embassy staffs and calm relations, have long offered safe places to reward fat cats. That's much less true today. Change now buffets Western and Eastern Europe. Consider Italy, where only a year ago and at some political cost, a centrist coalition government agreed to accept U.S. airbases soon to be closed by a Socialist government in Spain. Yet Mr. Bush's choice for Rome is Peter Secchia, manager of his Michigan campaign, whose innocence in diplomacy seems complete.

Does it repay Italy's fidelity, or soothe Spain's nationalism, for the United States to send them envoys conspicuously unequipped by experience or knowledge? It would be wise for the President to reconsider such nominees; and if not, permissible, indeed salutary, for the Senate to reject them.

Mr. SARBANES. Second, I say to the Senator from Arizona—because I am prompted to make these very quick remarks about two statements he made—one, to bracket Joseph Zappala with Ellsworth Bunker, as he did, is to make a comparison I think he may some day regret. I am perfectly happy to hold Joseph Zappala to that standard, if he should in fact succeed in going to Madrid, and I am prepared at any time in the future to engage in a debate with my colleague from Arizona with respect to Mr. Zappala and his performance in Spain, as compared to Ellsworth Bunker.

I know the Senator wants to make a point here to get Joseph Zappala over a certain threshold, but it does seem to me that it is overreaching to bracket him with one of the most effective and skillful persons who has ever represented us in the diplomatic field, Ellsworth Bunker.

I am surprised you do not have David K. Bruce in the same bracket.

Finally, the Senator makes a great deal of giving the President sort of carte blanche. He said at one point that if the President is foolish and sends foolish nominees, it is the President who pays for it. But it is the United States that pays, I submit to the Senator, and the foolishness is not only the President's in nominating them but it may well be the Senate's in confirming them, and that is the point I am trying to assert here today.

Our responsibility is not simply a passthrough rubber stamp responsibility. If the President makes a foolish nomination it seems to me we have some role in trying to prevent it from happening. And if it should happen, I do not agree with the Senator's observation that it is the President who pays the price. It is the United States and all the American people who pay the price of having a representative who is really not up to handling the job.

Mr. DECONCINI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island has the floor.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield 1 minute?

Mr. PELL. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island yields to the Senator from Arizona for a statement without losing his right to the floor.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I concede the Senator from Maryland makes a good point, that the United States suffers as well as the President. I am glad he made that clarification.

My point is with Ellsworth Bunker that when he was brought before the Senate and nominated to be the Ambassador to Brazil, he was a sugar refiner with no experience whatsoever. People questioned Mr. Bunker, as people have questioned Mr. Zappala. I do not know if he will match that good record. But 35 years proved that Mr. Bunker, coming from no experience at all, turned out to be one of our great Ambassadors.

It seems to me that anybody who is presented here with qualifications such as Mr. Zappala's, which are similar to those of Mr. Bunker, ought to have the benefit of the doubt and be approved.

I pointed out in the New York Times article about Mr. Motley that precedes the one the Senator from Maryland put in the RECORD that he came also from the private sector with no experience and went on to be appointed as Ambassador to Brazil.

My point, Mr. President, is simply this: Where are you going to get qualified people? You cannot get them all from Foggy Bottom, and I do not think we want them all from there. We want people who are in business and who have been successful or are in the environmental area or in the legal profession who have proven success in whatever profession you may choose. They are bound to be associated closely with the President or they would not be nominated. Is there anything wrong in that? I do not think so. I think that is what this process is all about.

I thank my friend from Rhode Island for yielding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL].

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, it is with regret that I state my own intention to vote against the nomination of Mr. Joseph Zappala to be the Ambassador to Spain. My decision to oppose this nominee was not taken lightly. It is rare that I oppose the President's choices for ambassadorships. Further, my vote should not be taken as a judgment on Mr. Zappala's character. It is not. In fact, I am sure he is a man of fine character and intelligence. He is just not qualified for this particular job.

Rather, my vote is based on the unique and vital constitutional responsibilities of the Senate in approving Presidential appointments. In essence, the Senate is a guardian, charged with passing judgment on the qualifications of individuals for the positions for which they have been appointed.

In section 304 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, the following standards are set for the appointment of Ambassadors:

> An individual appointed or assigned to be a chief of mission should possess clearly demonstrated competence to perform the duties of a chief of mission, including, to the maximum extent practicable, a useful knowledge of the principal language or dialect of the country in which the individual is to serve, and knowledge and understanding of the history, the culture, the economic and political institutions and the interests of that country and its people.

The act goes on to state that,

> Contributions to political campaigns should not be a factor in the appointment of an individual as a chief of mission.

Regrettably, when these standards are applied to Mr. Zappala, I am forced to conclude that the nominee does not possess the qualifications outlined in the Foreign Service Act. An examination of the nominee's résumé reveals not one instance of experience in dealing with foreign governments. Nor is there any indication that prior to his nomination, Mr. Zappala had displayed an interest in the people, the politics, or the history of Spain. Indeed, a review of the nominee's "Certification of Demonstrated Competence"—a document submitted to the Foreign Relations Committee describing a nominee's qualifications for the position to which they have been appointed—does not mention a single one of the criteria outlined in the Foreign Service Act.

What then were the reasons for his nomination? In looking at the record, I am forced to conclude that the main reason for Mr. Zappala's nomination was his fundraising and financial contributions to the past political campaign. Sadly, this view, too, is borne out in the nominee's "Certification of Demonstrated Competence." Approximately one-half of the document is devoted to Mr. Zappala's fundraising activities on behalf of the President. In this regard I do not recall when an ambassadorial nominee's financial contributions were so crassly and openly given as reasons for his appointment.

Mr. President, I realize that there have been political appointees in the past and that there will be political appointees in the future. Indeed, there is a litany of individuals who, although not career Foreign Service Officers, have served this country with the greatest of distinction as Ambassadors of the United States. One has only to think of former Senator Mansfield in Tokyo, Arthur Burns, in Bonn, and Averell Harriman in Moscow to realize that there is and must be a place for noncareer diplomats to serve as ambassadors. Equally clear, however, is the fact that these men brought to their ambassadorships experience applicable to the job, experience that with their ability enabled them to serve as ambassadors of distinction.

Unfortunately, Mr. Zappala does not bring these types of qualifications to the Senate. If he did, I would be one of the first to voice my support for his nomination.

Instead this nominee appears to have been chosen for his fundraising and financial contributions in the past political campaign.

Mr. President, the Senate was given its responsibility of advising and consenting to ambassadorial nominations precisely to prevent this type of favoritism from occurring. If it is to fulfill its constitutional responsibilities, the Senate has an obligation to oppose this nominee.

In making these remarks, I am conscious of the fact I believe I am the only Senator who has been a career diplomat, so I am perhaps particularly sensitive to the qualifications that are needed.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator yields the floor.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES].

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, as I understand it, when he was speaking earlier, the Senator from Minnesota listed various ambassadors who had served in Spain as political ambassadors. If the Senator will yield for a question, is that correct?

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. And included in that list, as I recall, there were some eight ambassadors, ending with Peter Flanigan.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I would like to comment on that. First of all, since 1975 all our ambassadors to Spain have been career people and, as I indicated in my opening statement, have been amongst the most distinguished in the career service.

Second, Peter Flanigan never made it to Spain as an ambassador. He was nominated in the late summer of 1974. His nomination ran into serious difficulty in the Senate and was withdrawn on November 16, 1974.

The reason that nomination ran into trouble—and then subsequently we got the first of these career appointees—was that Herbert Kalmbach, who was President Nixon's private attorney, testified at the House Judiciary Committee's impeachment inquiry in 1974 that Peter Flanigan brokered ambassadorships in return for massive contributions to the 1972 Nixon Presidential campaign. Flanigan himself acknowledged to Kalmbach that a potential ambassadorial nominee, Dr. Ruth B. Farkas, was a good prospect for solicitation. According to Kalmbach, Flanigan advised him to contact Dr. Farkas, since she was interested in giving $250,000 for Costa Rica. Dr. Farkas, Kalmbach reported, thought Costa Rica not worth that much. By contributing $300,000, she eventually got herself named Ambassador to Luxembourg.

Kalmbach later went to jail. He pleaded guilty for promising an ambassadorship for campaign contributions and was sentenced to a jail term of from 6 to 18 months and ordered to pay a $10,000 fine.

So citing Flanigan is not relevant here because, first of all, he never went as Ambassador to Spain although he was nominated to be Ambassador to Spain. And the reason he did not go was his involvement with Kalmbach, who disclosed that he had been the conduit between contributors and the White House staff in charge of selecting political appointees. And it was in the aftermath of these disclosures that the United States then sent a career ambassador to Spain, and has since sent a career ambassador each subsequent time that the post has been filled.

The shift to a career ambassador in 1975 also coincided with Spain's emergence from the Franco dictatorship into a democratic country. Obviously, it seems to me it was a recognition on the part of our administration of the need to have an able and experienced ambassador on the scene as Spain went through the extraordinary transition to democracy.

And Spain still, while it has moved through the political transition, is now involved very much in an economic transition.

So I only make the point to my colleague that while it is true there were a series of political nominees during the period when Franco was in control in Spain and we were treating that nation as something of, apparently, a political throwaway, that issue was turned into a crisis, by the controversy surrounding the Flanigan nomination. And although my colleague listed Flanigan as an Ambassador to Spain he never made it; he was nominated but not approved here, and the nomination was withdrawn.

At the same time the crisis was intensified by the changes taking place in Spain. Spain's role today is a critically important one, and I think this underscores the significance of the nomination.

Mr. President, I would like to bring up to date the record that appears on page 12 of the committee report, to show the percentage of ambassadorial nominations made by this administration thus far into its term as compared with nominations made by preceding administrations. The table in the committee report on page 12 shows figures for the first 7 months. Revised through September the figures shows that of the 58 nominations which President Bush has made, 36 of them political, for 62 percent, and 22 are career.

Let me just run through the other administrations. President Kennedy, in the first 9 months of 1961, made 64 nominations. Of those, 39 were career, 25 political, or 61 percent career.

President Johnson, in the first 9 months of 1965, made 39 nominations, 28 of them career, 11 political; in other words, 72 percent career.

President Nixon, in the first 9 months of 1969, made 70 nominations, 44 career, 26 political; in other words, 63 percent career.

President Nixon, in the first 9 months of 1973, after his reelection, made 36 nominations, 32 career, 13 political; in other words, 64 percent career.

President Carter, in the first 9 months of 1977, made 59 nominations, 36 career, 23 political, in other words, 61 percent career.

President Reagan, in the first 9 months of 1981, 57 nominations, 35 career, 22 political; in other words, 61 percent career.

President Reagan, in the first 9 months after his second election, made 37 nominations, 27 career, 11 political.

Now all of these Presidents—Kennedy through Reagan—in the first 9 months of their administrations, in no instance appointed less than 61 percent career, and in one instance went as high as 72 percent career. Political appointments, therefore, ranged between 28 and 39 percent.

President Bush, in the first 9 months of his administration, made 58 country nominations, which actually compares roughly with the figures made by others. Actually, it is in excess, in some instances, with the second term; but in the first term, 58; Reagan, 57; Carter, 59; Nixon, his first term, 70; Kennedy, 64. So it is in the same range in terms of the number of nominations.

The striking difference is that of the 58 nominations for country ambassadors, only 22 of President Bush's nominations have been from the career service. Only 22. In other words, 38 percent. The lowest previous percent of all Presidents cited, was 61 percent career. In this administration, 36 of them have been political, or 62 percent. So we have just the reverse, a precise flip in the numbers of political versus career nominations compared with all the previous Presidents beginning with Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Carter, and Reagan. That is a pretty dramatic shift.

The other issue we have to address, of course, is the qualifications and experience of the political appointees who have been named.

I want to make just a couple of observations on what some of my colleagues have said, particularly my distinguished friends from Minnesota and from Florida.

First of all, there is an effort, I think, to equate the nomination of an ambassador to a political career. We are given a comparison between someone being picked for ambassador and someone who gets elected to the U.S. Senate. But the basis of choice is very different. We run and are chosen by the people. We run against an opponent, so we have the basis of that comparison. And one can cite in a campaign any or none of a whole host of factors why we ought to come to the Senate or not come to the Senate. I am struck by the effort, in effect, to politicize this ambassadorial choice.

What are we telling the people in the career service? I think one of the most upsetting aspects of some of what has been said in the debate today is the way it denigrates the career service. We have young men and women across the country who take tests to get into the career service. They are encouraged to consider this a career. They are evaluated as they move through their career. They are sent to language school in order to learn languages. They go through an intense training period to be able to handle the compexities of the job. They have a variety of experiences out in the field and here at home.

Under modern circumstances they subject themselves to great risks. More ambassadors since the Korean war have lost their lives than admirals and generals. Fortunately, the number is not large. But, nevertheless, I think it is important to keep that in mind. Under current circumstances, they take extraordinary risks in order to serve the country.

We tell these people: You have to do a good job. You have to perform. You have to deliver in these positions. You should learn languages. You should develop experience and expertise.

Now some are belittling that effort. But the fact of the matter is that the only reason we can even contemplate sending inexperienced political ambassadors abroad without expecting catastrophe is that we can count on career people in the embassy to shepherd them through their ambassadorship.

I submit that if we start sending a message to the career people that they are never going to become ambassadors, that it does not really matter how well they do their job and serve their country it is going to be harder to attract and hold good people. The quality of the career service will run down, the people we will have there to back up political ambassadors will diminish in quality, and the whole country will pay a very high price for it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an article from the American Foreign Service Association called, "Does the State Department Respect Ambassadors?"; and an article commenting about a talk by Ambassador Elliott Richardson entitled "Richardson Rewards Frustrations of the Foreign Service."

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Foreign Service Journal, September 1989]

RICHARDSON: REWARDS, FRUSTRATIONS OF FOREIGN SERVICE

(By Richard S. Thompson, Professional Issues Coordinator)

Ambassador Elliot L. Richardson talked to a large crowd in the Foreign Service Club June 15 on "The Rewards and Frustrations of Public Service: the Case of the Foreign Service." His remarks were based on his seven years with the Department of State and his current service as a member of the National Commission on the Public Service (the Volcker Commission), which recently issued its report on "Rebuilding the Public Service."

Richardson first stressed that the Foreign Service offers important rewards: the intrinsic satisfaction of devoting oneself to the interests of the United States, and interesting and challenging work.

Frustrations, however, are mounting throughout the government, fed by declining esteem and presidential campaigning against Washington. The problem of compensation is deeper than is generally realized. In the case of the Foreign Service, Richardson asserted, the problem of the career ladder and opportunities for those of demonstrated ability is especially serious with no counterpart elsewhere in government. The possibility of becoming an ambassador, assistant secretary, or deputy assistant secretary is a legitimate goal and the fluctuating availability of such assignments owing to political appointments is a demoralizing factor. The National Commission suggests not more than 30 percent of ambassadors be non-career.

Another problem is the quality of those chosen, since the abilities of many political appointees "are not obvious." It is an illusion that modern telecommunications have reduced the role of the ambassador and country team. In fact, the increased complexity of foreign affairs means that issues that would have gone to the secretary of state in the past must now be dealt with by the country director or the embassy. In addition, the means available to achieve goals are dwindling, so Foreign Service personnel must be more clever and have a clear idea of what their goals are. Competition with representatives of other countries is more intense, so the Service needs better people—better trained and better compensated. Richardson concluded by noting the report of the National Commission on the Public Service advanced recommendations to improve awareness of the importance of public service and to better its efficiency. Vigorous follow-up action is underway to enlist support for these recommendations.

At Richardson's request, the commission's executive director, the Honorable Bruce Laingen, added a few words stressing the common goals of the Foreign Service and the Civil Service in building esteem for government service and attracting able young people.

In the question and answer session Richardson indicated he expected action on the issue of pay for senior employees before the end of this Congress. He believed the current emphasis on ethics could establish a higher standard, with the new Foley leadership in the House a positive factor. He also noted that in business circles he argues the need for able people in government; without them, problems get worse and government intervention increases, decreasing the scope for private initiative. The savings and loan crisis was a good example, he said.

Richardson commented that a president has mixed motives in making ambassadorial appointments. He wants to be successful, and knows he needs good people. The president should have an attitude of "trusteeship," toward the Foreign Service as a long-term asset, as Richardson told Secretary Baker. A president has wide discretion to establish a certain ratio of political ambassadorships and hold to it.

DOES THE STATE DEPARTMENT RESPECT AMBASSADORS?

(By Charles A. Schmitz, State Vice President)

The White House liaison staff in the office of the under secretary for management is charged with preparing the "certificates of competency" for non-career candidates to be U.S. ambassadors. The certificate is supposed to tell the Senate Foreign Relations Committee why the candidate has a "clearly demonstrated competence" to perform the duties "of the position in which he or she is to serve."

In some recent cases, the certificates say things like: "Mr. X is a member of the Republican National Committee's Team 100" [i.e., donated at least $100,000 to the committee]; and "Mr. X's impressive business background in real estate combined with his civic activities qualify him as an excellent candidate for U.S. ambassador to Y."

By producing such a certificate the White House liaison staff in the State Department manages to 1) demean the functions of a U.S. ambassador, 2) insult countries friendly to the U.S., and 3) violate U.S. law. That kind of triple score is usually associated with hostile, third world governments, not with our State Department.

The law is violated because the Foreign Service Act specifies what should be in the certificate of competency and what should not be there. What should be there is the required evidence that the candidate can do the job (e.g., maybe knows the country, speaks some of the language, understands the culture and traditions, grasps the relationships between that country and the United States, knows how to run something like an embassy, knows something about international relations, or maybe even something about the business of government).

What should not be there is recitation of political contributions. The Foreign Service Act is crystal clear in stating that political contributions should not be a factor in ambassadorial nominations.

The insult to friendly countries comes when the people of the country to which the candidate is to be sent as U.S. ambassador read the certification reported in their own newspapers, and realize that the U.S. thinks so little of their country that experience in American real estate is deemed sufficient to conduct the necessary state business. An important foreign newspaper recently said, "Relations between———and the U.S. are ill served by Washington appointing ambassadors to———who have no special insight into the workings and the importance of our alliance, the business of government or international relations."

The function of the U.S. ambassador is mightily demeaned by the State Department's certification that success in ordinary businesses demonstrates "excellent" qualifications to be an ambassador. Our argument is not with business people: many of them have made fine ambassadors; but those people had other fine qualities and related experience as well. Current certifications make it look as though success in business and a political contribution is all that is necessary.

If the State Department itself has no great respect for ambassadors, what must it think of the rest of us in the Foreign Service?

AFSA has a responsibility to the Foreign Service to help build a sense of pride in the foreign affairs profession. State Department management apparently does not share this sense of responsibility. It ought to.

In the meantime, if management could start complying with the Foreign Service Act, AFSA, the Senate, the American people, and U.S. foreign friends and allies all would very much appreciate it.

Mr. SARBANES. I might note in that article Elliot Richardson points out that the National Commission on the Public Service, the Volcker Commission, which has been studying the broad problem of how to attract and hold able people in Government service and recently issued a report entitled, "Rebuilding of the Public Service," points out that the problem of the career ladder and opportunities for those of demonstrated ability is especially serious with no counterpart elsewhere in Government. The possibility of becoming an ambassador, assistant secretary or deputy assistant secretary is a legitimate goal and the fluctuating availability of such assignments to political appointments is a demoralizing factor.

The National Commission suggests that not more than 30 percent of ambassadors be noncareer; that is, National Commission on the Public Service chaired by Paul Volcker with a very broad membership. I think it is important to underscore their conclusions.

We have all these people in the Foreign Service committed to serving their country, doing their best to meet high standards, yes, in effect, they are being told here today: It does not really matter, people can come in from the outside with no ostensible qualifications for the job and have no problem handling it.

Then, the first order of business once they get nominated is to go searching for a bright, able, and dedicated deputy chief of mission to back them up so that they do not make a major mistake.

The final point I would make is, I am really struck by the assertion that if you know Italian, you virtually know Spanish.

I do not know of any academic dean in the country who would simply pass a student through a Spanish course on the strength of that student having passed through the Italian course. It is true that there is some overlap, and the majority, in its report, tries to make a lot of it because they are related romance languages.

Nevertheless, I say again that I know of no academic program in this country that takes proficiency in Italian and simply equates it with proficiency in Spanish.

In the last analysis, it all comes back to how well will the Nation be served; how well will our interests be protected. I want, in effect, to pinpoint the differences.

No one is arguing that all Ambassadors should be from the career service. I do argue, however, that a significant percentage should be from the career service because I think otherwise we are going to demoralize the career service.

I think we all accept the possibility of bringing people in from outside of the career service. We have had some distinguished Ambassadors drawn in that way.

But their records, I think, have warranted their selection. The very people who have been named here, and names like Mansfield, Arthur Burns, David Bruce, Averell Harriman, Ed Reichauer and so on have been tossed around, constitute a very select list. In each of those instances, one could look at the record and see in it demonstrable ability and experience and qualifications to serve abroad.

What is happening too frequently with appointments by this administration is that as one looks through the record, it is clear that the reason for the nomination is large campaign contributions. In fact, Secretary Mosbacher, who is in charge of the political giving, has been quite blunt in admitting it. He complained back in February that these people have given a lot of money to the campaign and are not getting their just rewards including ambassadorships. It is to that kind of nomination that I think the Senate should now hold up its hand and say, this practice must stop.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a number of editorials which have appeared around the country with respect to this issue and this nomination be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EX-FINANCE CHAIRMAN COMPLAINS FEW JOBS GO TO BUSH FUND-RAISERS

(By Richard L. Berke)

WASHINGTON, February 19.—Robert A. Mosbacher Sr., the Commerce Secretary who was finance chairman of President Bush's campaign, says he is distressed that more campaign fundraisers have not been rewarded with political appointments.

He blamed officials in the Administration, but not Mr. Bush himself, for favoring political operatives over fundraisers for posts at all levels of Government.

"There's this perception in Washington and politics, and some degree in Government," he said in an interview this weekend, "that fund-raisers and fund-givers are nice, interesting people to be sort of patted on the head when you need them and ignored the rest of the time because they don't really understand the process."

CRITICISM OF ADMINISTRATION

"We're not trying to foist off any second-grade dummies," he said. "In truth; they are the most successful people in their communities."

Some critics counter that the fundraisers are doing well in getting appointments. In fact, some of them derided the Administration for being partial to fund-raisers.

Mr. Mosbacher said in the interview that he planned to bring the issue to the attention of White House personnel officials and that he hoped to speak directly to Mr. Bush about it.

The Commerce Secretary, who ran the Bush fund-raising effort in the primaries and the Republican Party's drive to raise millions of dollars from wealthy donors, said there were "several hundred" fund-raisers who deserved appointments to ambassadorships, sub-Cabinet posts or lower-level jobs on commissions who were being neglected. The campaign had a national finance board of some 350 people in the primaries, and for the general election, 249 individuals and corporations gave at least $100,000 apiece to the Republican Party.

"Quite a high percentage of those who have been helpful haven't gotten anything—at last 50 percent," Mr. Mosbacher said.

TOP JOBS FOR MANY

More than a dozen people who gave at least $100,000 to the Republican Party last year, or helped solicit millions of dollars more for Mr. Bush, are being tapped for jobs as ambassadors or as policy makers at sub-Cabinet levels.

In addition, what officials describe as a "'must be placed' list" is circulating in the Administration, with the names of 50 major donors who want jobs for themselves or their relatives. Many are expected to be named to part-time posts on Presidential boards and commissions.

Presidents of both parties have long rewarded their political loyalists with plum appointments. Because of changes in the Federal campaign finance law, which were made after the Watergate scandal, people no longer can give directly to a Presidential candidate in the general election. But they can give to a political party.

"There is definitely a perception problem when ambassadors and other high people are large contributors," said David M. Dorsen, a lawyer here who was assistant chief counsel in charge of campaign finance for the Senate Watergate committee.

"TERRIBLE WAY TO DO BUSINESS"

Fred Wertheimer, president of Common Cause, a public affairs lobby group, said the appointment of fundraisers was "a terrible way to do business," and he called on the Senate committees considering those appointments to "conduct rigorous inquiries about whether money played any role in the appointments."

But determining how much a donation played into an appointment would be a complicated, if not impossible undertaking.

"What really matters to George Bush is not the number of zeros after a figure in a ledger book, but the loyalty and commitment shown by a person, be it as a fundraiser or a doorbell ringer," said Charles G. Untermeyer, the White House personnel director.

Bruce S. Gelb conceded, though, that had he not helped raise $3 million for Mr. Bush's campaign last year, he might not have been nominated to head the United States Information Agency. "I may have been selected to be dog catcher," he said.

Beyond his fund-raising prowess, Mr. Gelb, who is leaving his job as vice chairman of Bristol-Myers Company in New York, contended that other factors helped him win the prestigious post: his loyalty to Mr. Bush for decades and his business acumen.

LOYALTY TO BUSH

"If you look at 10 really outstanding people and they all have great track records and you find one that has been a longtime fund-raiser, that person clearly has a real advantage," he said. "But if the person cannot represent George Bush in the way he wants to be represented, the person could give all the money in the world and it would not happen."

In the campaign, only a small minority of donors were blatant enough to say they expected an Administration post, Bush aides said. "Some people at the very beginning said, 'I'm involved in this because I want this,' " said a Republican official who asked not to be named. "The response back was, 'It's great to have you on board but there is no quid pro quo.' "

Many of the most diligent fund-raisers were friends who have known Mr. Bush for decades. Mr. Mosbacher, for instance, has known the President for 30 years. He, in turn, is doing his part to place his fund-raisers.

Mr. Mosbacher is expected to select Michael P. Galvin, a Chicago lawyer and a top Bush fund-raiser, to the highly sought post of Assistant Secretary for Exports. And officials said Mr. Mosbacher plans to pick Rockwell A. Schnabel, a major donor who is now Ambassador to Finland, to another sought after job: Under Secretary of Commerce for Trade and Tourism, a post that involves much travel and few difficult policy demands.

Another major fund-raiser, Frederick M. Bush, who is no relation to the President, worked for Mr. Bush for 10 years in many fund-raising capacities, most recently as deputy finance chairman. He has been named Ambassador to Luxembourg.

SOME OF THE APPOINTMENTS

Other $100,000 contributors and Bush fund-raisers who have been named to important posts include Walter J.P. Curely Jr., a former Ambassador to Ireland, as Ambassador to France; Joseph Zappala, a land developer from Tampa, Fla., as Ambassador to Spain; Melvin F. Sembler, another Florida developer who held that state's first fund-raising event for Mr. Bush, as Ambassador to Australia, and Henry E. Catto Jr., a longtime Republican contributor who has previously served in Government, as Ambassador to Britain.

Several other appointments of top contributors are in the works, including Joseph B. Gildenhorn, a Washington real estate executive who may be tapped for Ambassador to Switzerland, and Eric Javits, a New York Lawyer and nephew of the late Senator Jacob Javits, who is a leading contender for Ambassador to Venezuela.

Some big donors were not interested in appointments, particularly those in business who could not disentangle themselves from their companies or were not willing to have their finances scrutinized.

Even so, as Mr. Mosbacher emphasized, there are more donors interested in jobs than there are jobs available.

In one case, Republican officials are working behind the scenes to try to find a post for Joy A. Silverman of Manhattan, a diligent fund-raiser who was said to be disappointed not to be named Ambassador to Luxembourg. "By all standards she deserves something," Mr. Mosbacher said. "She raised a lot of money, worked hard."

UNTERMEYER: LOYALTY WINS AMBASSADORSHIPS

(By Judith Havemann)

Presidential personnel director Chase Untermeyer told the American Foreign Service Association yesterday that it was loyalty, not money, that enabled some large political contributors to receive ambassadorships in the Bush administration.

Ambassadorial nominees, he said, were selected for competence, loyalty and support over long periods of time. "Loyalty," he said, "can be [shown by] money . . . long service and friendship over many years."

For some people, "the degree of support was financial . . . Wealth does not serve as a disqualification for public office," he said.

The members of the professional organization for Foreign Service officers sat diplomatically as Untermeyer defended President Bush's appointments, some of which have come under strong attack by Senate Democrats as unqualified.

Speaking at an association lunch here, Untermeyer said not all the political ambassadors the White House has nominated were wealthy donors and not all loyal Bush campaign workers got jobs.

"Loyal people are pounding the bricks cursing the name of Chase Untermeyer," he said.

He said that his use of the word "loyalty" to describe the special characteristics of the political nominees does not reflect in any way on the loyalty of career Foreign Service officers.

In making political appointments, he said, "you go with the people who are your own . . . Loyalty given is loyalty returned."

Bush intends to "increase the number, weight and magnitude of the posts" to which he plans to name Foreign Service officers, Untermeyer said.

While most of the ambassadorial nominations Bush has sent to the Senate are noncareer, Untermeyer said the Bush administration's overall record on appointments of career Foreign Service officers is much better.

He said the Bush administration has kept all of President Ronald Reagan's career ambassadors in place, raising them to 65 percent of the total.

Between 60 percent and 62 percent of the ambassadorial posts under Reagan were held by career Foreign Service officers, he said. Bush wants to increase the percentage to 66 percent.

"We don't want to be judged on the numbers, although we look reasonably good here and we will get better," he said. He said that the use of political appointments makes it possible to increase the percentage of women and minorities in ambassadorships.

He said there are only six female career ambassadors out of 145 and that 10 of Bush's non-career nominees are women.

A member of the audience complained that four of five black ambassadors are in "tiny African countries." Untermeyer responded that Bush had named a black ambassador to Argentina, a prized post.

Another questioner asked whether the Bush administration would be as willing to make non-military appointments to military billets as it is to make non-career appointments to diplomatic posts.

An increasing number of people have been named to civilian positions at DOD [the Department of Defense] without military experience . . . there has been no war for 20 years," Untermeyer said. "Regrettably, they are not people who start out with the basics, who know what the ranks mean. . . ."

The Foreign Service Association, which is the bargaining agent as well as professional group for Foreign Service officers, received Untermeyer politely. Association members praised his speech, his delivery, his presence and his courage but appeared to reject his message.

"He presented his arguments well," association President Theodore S. Wilkinson said. "I don't agree with him."

EMBASSIES FOR SALE

Senator Paul S. Sarbanes has performed a public service in his guerrilla warfare against confirmation of some of the least qualified people nominated to sensitive ambassadorships.

The Maryland Democrat has suggested auctioning ambassadorships so that at least the money goes to the U.S. Treasury instead of to campaign funds. He has pointed fingers at nominees who penned identical bromides in stating their qualifications. He has ridden point for the more judiciously phrased complaints of the American Foreign Service Association. He has ridiculed State Department tongue-in-cheek certification of certain presidential nominees as qualified who aren't. Above all, Senator Sarbanes used his power as a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to delay confirmation of nominations until public debate can focus on them.

These are Joseph Zappala, a Florida developer and major Bush campaign fundraiser, as ambassador to Spain; Melvin Sembler, another one, as ambassador to Australia; and Della Newman, a Seattle real estate broker and fund-raiser, as ambassador to New Zealand. These people have no known qualifications other than donations above $100,000, and can do the national interest harm in Spain, which is pushing out U.S. bases; in Australia, which welcomes U.S. nuclear ships and New Zealand, which doesn't. Each of those countries, and U.S. interests in each, deserve better.

One of this ilk who got through is Peter Secchia, a Michigan millionaire known principally for crudity of speech, who has presented his credentials as ambassador to Italy. The Italian press and left are having a field day. There is a pattern here. Look at the choice of the hapless one-term Nevada senator, Chic Hecht, confirmed to be ambassador to the Bahamas, supposedly qualified by his love of golf and interest in casinos.

What President Bush and Secretary of State James A. Baker III seem to be saying is that ambassadors don't matter, the bureaucracy can do the job. But such appointments insult the countries and diminish U.S. influence.

Politically appointed ambassadors can do excellent work. All modern administrations have sinned in selling some embassies. The Bush administration is overdoing it. The Foreign Service Act of 1980 stipulates that "contributions to political campaigns should not be a factor in appointment." In some nominations, it is the only factor. Senator Sarbanes cannot stem the tide. But he is making the squalid practice a political issue, which it should be.

[From the St. Petersburg Times, Feb. 18, 1989]

THE INTERNATIONAL LANGUAGE

According to U.S. Rep. C. W. Bill Young, St. Petersburg developers Mel Sember and Joseph Zappala have all sorts of qualifications for their new jobs as U.S. ambassadors to Australia and Spain, respectively.

"Australia is so much like the United States, and Mel Sembler certainly knows his way around the United States," Young said. "He is certainly able to communicate, which is one of the essential requirements of diplomacy." Young had similar praise for the diplomatic skills of Zappala, who he said "has handled a lot of touchy situations in his business life."

Sembler and Zappala may turn out to be excellent ambassadors, and their appointments by President Bush undoubtedly bring prominence to St. Petersburg. However, their selections had nothing whatsoever to do with their ability to find their way around, or to communicate, or to handle touchy situations.

Actually, that's not entirely true. Sembler and Zappala know their way around the power structure of the national Republican Party, and they know how to communicate in the international language: money. They were members of "Team 100," a group of donors who contributed at least $100,000 each to the Republican Party during last fall's campaign. They also served as co-chairmen of the national committee that raised $20-million to help pay for the Bush inaugural. The services rendered by Sember and Zappala add up to serious qualifications for political appointment.

The practice of making ambassadorial appointments based on politics is neither new nor necessarily bad. Some political appointees with no previous diplomatic experience turn out to be excellent ambassadors. For example, former U.S. Sen. Mike Mansfield turned out to be an inspired choice as ambassador to Japan.

On the other hand, some career Foreign Service officers turn out to be inappropiate choices for particular assignments. John Negroponte, most recently U.S. ambassador to Honduras, has become a controversial choice as our new ambassador to Mexico because of his previous involvement with the Contra guerrillas fighting the government of Nicaragua. His predecessor in Mexico City, John Gavin, an old Hollywood friend of President Reagan's, won generally high marks for his diplomatic performance.

However, an overbundance of politically based ambassadorial appointments can cause problems. First, an influx of political appointees can harm the morale of career Foreign Service officers better qualified for diplomatic duty. The percentage of political appointments rose from about 25 percent to 40 percent during the Reagan years, with a concomitant decline in ambassadorships aswarded on merit. That percentage may go even higher with President Bush's new appointments.

Of course, the real risk is that some political appointees can harm American interests because they lack the backgrounds and abilities needed to articulate and implement U.S. policy. Our new ambassador to Italy, another political ally of the new president, does not speak fluent Italian. Zappala, whose Spanish is similarly rudimentary, does not claim to be particularly familiar with the recent history of Spain's ambivalent political and military relationship with the United States and the rest of Western Europe.

In the past, some new ambassadors' lack of preparation for their jobs has been offensive to host countries and has prevented our government from taking advantage of important diplomatic opportunities. Whether political appointees or career diplomats, our ambassadors should possess the same qualifications that we have come to expect of foreign diplomats serving in this country. Otherwise, we run the risk of creating touchy situations that even successful St. Petersburg developers aren't capable of getting us out of.

[From the Washington Post, June 23, 1989]

THE AMBASSADORS

We have been thinking of establishing yet another great public service honor: the Mrs. Farkas Award for the most exotic, not to say improbable, campaign-contributor appointee to the American diplomatic corps. Ruth Farkas, for those of you who may not remember, was the very rich woman who became famous when Richard Nixon's lawyer reported that she had complained about price-gouging in the dispensation of Nixon administration ambassadorships (". . . isn't $250,000 an awful lot of money for Costa Rica?"). Now, before you get us wrong, it is not our view that all ambassadorships need to go to Foreign Service officers or that campaign contributions should actually be disqualifying. There have been plenty of first-rate non-foreign service ambassadors over the years.

But in truth there have also been a lot more turkeys—incompetents, bad jokes, envoys who would more aptly be called the American embarrassador than the American ambassador. Nor is it as if these were always harmless appointments; real damage can be done and has been by some of he unsuited types and downright nitwits that this country has proudly sent overseas at the behest of Democratic as well as Republican administrations.

All this is background to the jousting now going on in the Senate, where Democrat Paul Sarbanes of Maryland has stalled Senate Foreign Relations Committee action on three administration appointees, putting off a final determination until after the July 4 recess. The embassies at issue are Spain, Australia and New Zealand. The nominees are a land developer, a businessman and a real estate broker. For all we know they may be well gualified, though Mr. Sarbanes thinks they are not and has pointed, among other things, to a rather discouraging aspect of their self-presentations before the committee. At the place on the resume form where would-be ambassadors are asked what special qualifications they have that were not previously mentioned by them, one wrote: "I have been known as a coalition builder, able to organize my colleagues and peers to action in support of worthy civic, charitale and political causes." Another wrote—guess what?—"I am known as a coalition builder. I am able to organize my colleagues and peers to action in support of worthwhile civic, charitable and political causes."

Modular testimony. Pre-fab (by someone else) self-description. It doesn't inspire a whole lot of confidence. Can the would-be ambassadors be trusted to enter into dialogue with their host governments if they, apparently, cannot be trusted to write a few lines on their own qualifications? Guidance only gets you so far. We await with interest the next phase of the committee's hearing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ].

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I will also close my argument and respond briefly to my friend from Maryland and read the entirety of the paragraph regarding Mr. Zappala's ability to speak Spanish. I will read the entirety of the paragraph that my friend from Maryland read only in part:

Mr. Zappala readily acknowledged his deficiency in Spanish, and has already been enrolled in Spanish language training courses. However, Mr. Zappala has been totally fluent in Italian all of his life. Since Spanish and Italian are related romance languages with similar grammatical and rhetorical structures, with the common bond of a broadly cognate vocabulary and transferable language skills, the committee sees no reason to believe that Mr. Zappala will not be reasonably proficient in Spanish by the time that he takes up residence in Madrid.

So I think that Mr. Zappala will be doing just fine in Spanish.

My friend from Maryland refers to a table on page 12 of the report. I refer to a table on page 7 which gives figures that show this President, as have other Presidents before him, has stuck approximately to a 2-to-1 ratio, two careerists for one noncareerist, as the National Commission had recommended, 70 percent. So this President has said on a number of occasions that a 2-to-1 ratio will be continued.

Finally, Mr. President, I certainly accept as a correction the statement of my friend from Maryland that Mr. Flanigan did not go there. The research that was done for me was apparently incorrect in that instance.

Let me read, finally, Mr. President, a letter that I received from Mr. Zappala in which he expresses his gratitude for my support of his nomination. He continues after expressing that gratitude by saying:

It is true that I have little, if any experience in the field of foreign policy, but, since my nomination I have devoted myself to education, not only with regard to the country and its issues, but to the Spanish language as well.

As you know better than most, those of us who come out of the business sector also bring unique talents and new energies and make intelligent decisions.

I come to serve out of love of my country, and yes, honor! You know the personal sacrifice of being away from loved ones and the loss of opportunity. I am committed to apply all my energy and talent as Ambassador, if approved, and will make my country proud.

I believe, Mr. President, Joseph Zappala will achieve just that: He will make his country proud. I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES].

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I want to be very accurate and precise here. Apparently Elliot Richardson chaired, within the Commission on Public Service chaired by Paul Volcker, a task force on career/noncareer questions that suggested that not more than 30 percent of ambassadors be noncareer. The commission itself, in its report, apparently did not specifically address the issue of percentages in the State Department or any other agency. So that the point I make earlier should really refer back to a task force of the Commission. I elevated what was done at the task force level into a commission report, and I want to make sure that the record is clear in this regard.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of no quorum having been raised, the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I made reference earlier to the treatment of this issue when the ex-Finance chairman complained in February that few jobs were going to Bush campaign fund-raisers. In this context I want to point out that last December, the American Foreign Service Association sent an open letter to the State Department transition team supporting, in principle, the appointment of a judicious number of noncareer ambassadorships.

It is interesting to note that the career service itself accepts this proposition. They did not argue for 100 percent career ambassadors, but suggested in that letter as a practical matter that the new administration might want to avoid the embarrassment of Senate challenges by screening its nominations carefully beforehand.

The transition team declined to meet with the representatives of the Foreign Service, but the Foreign Service people were encouraged early in the administration by the nomination of career offices to several key posts, including, for instance, the Ambassador to the United Nations.

Then came the spring and the surge of political nominations, which left the career service stunned and, they assert, left even friends of the President stunned. We have already gone through the statistics.

We have to ask what happened between the start of the administration and the rash of political appointments that followed. I submit perhaps what happened is reflected in the complaint widely reported in newspaper articles that "few jobs go to Bush fund-raisers." Ambassadorial appointments were used to help balance the ledger of political obligations. That, of course, has helped to provoke the controversy we have today with respect to this nominee, which of course reflects more broadly what has been happening with respect to other nominees as well.

It was added to the argument made for political appointees that they are loyal to the President, as though somehow the career service is not loyal to the President, and indeed to the Nation. In fact, one of the questions I put to nominees in the committee—and I should have started it earlier—has to do with this question of loyalty. We have nominees who come before us and say: I am very eager to go. This is wonderful; the President has really shown his confidence in me, and I am a personal friend of the President's, and very loyal. I want to go overseas in order to carry out the President's policies.

The question I put to them is, where first do one's loyalties lie?

A noncareer nominee the other day gave the right answer to that question. She said, "The Constitution of the United States." And then subsequently, under questioning, we defined that further to include the statutes of the United States passed pursuant to that Constitution. A President who asks an ambassador or anyone else to do something contrary to a statute is in effect asking him or her to violate our constitutional process.

So it is true the President has a tremendous scope to direct our foreign policy, and in one respect our ambassadors are the personal representatives of the President. But the ambassadors are confirmed by the Senate. They are officials of the United States, and they have obligations that transcend "loyalty" only to the President.

The loyalty that is being talked about in these cases is really political giving. The Foreign Service is characterized by people who have given loyal service over decades, trying to serve the Nation. We are then told that political nominees can pick up the phone and call the President."

How much of that is going to happen? What one ought to do is let them go out and after a year or 18 months ask them, "How many times in the last year did you call up the President?" And if the number is large, one would then say, "Well, why are you harassing the President? Why are you calling him up all the time? Don't you think the President has other important things to do than to be constantly receiving phone calls?"

We have 130-some ambassadors overseas. Just think of the number of phone calls the President would have to handle if all these people are going to call him.

In fact they are not going to be calling the President. I do not know why that argument is being advanced on their behalf.

That fact is, it is time for us to get serious about these matters. I do not think the United States today continues to enjoy the same luxury in the way we conduct our political and security affairs abroad that we might have at an earlier time, when our power was much more transcendent. We are now much more dependent, I think, on having able, skillful people to represent us, just as other countries send able, skillful representatives to the United States.

Before he came here, the current Soviet Ambassador in Washington served in Spain. He moved from that assisgnment first to the United Nations, but then very quickly to Washington.

That gives you some sense of the importance they attach to that diplomatic post. The Soviet Ambassador is an experienced career person.

The United States has to start doing business in a serious way. It is for that reason, because it will send as strong and clear a message as can be sent on this issue, that the Senate should reject this nomination.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Joseph Zappala to be Ambassador to Spain. Mr. Zappala's nomination was reported by the Foreign Relations Committee in July, and I am pleased that we have finally turned to this matter.

There are other nominees who also await confirmation, and it is high time that we moved forward on those as well.

The President has nominated people who he feels to be qualified, responsible, and able to represent this great Nation abroad. The Senate has a role to play, and the ability to reject nominees that are unfit in the judgment of the Senate.

But we do no one a service when we hold up nominations on the basis of pure politics.

Presidents—both Democratic and Republican—have made ambassadorial appointments to both career foreign service officers and political appointees. The amount of criticism leveled at this President for political appointees is unseemly. Senator HELMS has covered all of that very skillfully and completely.

Many fine Ambassadors throughout our history have been political appointees, including the recently returned Ambassasdor to Japan, Mike Mansfield, who served with singular distinction and great honor.

I am a little puzzled at the ire directed at those who happened to have the temerity to be Republican campaign contributors and successful business persons.

Those are surely not characteristics that ought to disqualify any fine person from serving most ably as Ambassador for the United States.

Enough of this sophistry of thought and reason. I trust we will get on with the business at hand, and I urge my colleagues to vote favorably on this nomination.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, as I understand it, the Senate is in executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. I wish to ask unanimous consent that the Senate then proceed to consider the following nominations:

Calendar No. 372, Claire E. Freeman, to be an Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

Calendar No. 373, Eugene K. Lawson, to be First Vice President of the Export-Import Bank of the United States, and Calendar No. 374, Richard Schmalensee, to be a member of the Council of Economic Advisers.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominees be confirmed, en bloc, that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read, that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, en bloc, that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the several nominations are considered en bloc, confirmed en bloc and the motion to reconsider en bloc is laid on the table. The President is immediately notified of the confirmation of the nominees.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

Claire E. Freeman, of Virginia, to be an Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF THE UNITED STATES

Eugene Kistler Lawson, of the District of Columbia, to be First Vice President of the Export-Import Bank of the United States for a term of four years expiring January 20, 1993.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Richard Schmalensee, of Massachusetts, to be a Member of the Council of Economic Advisers.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. There will now be a period for the transaction of morning business.

COAL INDUSTRY HEALTH BENEFIT STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I want to speak in support of the legislation that the President pro tempore and Senator ROCKEFELLER of West Virginia have introduced, the Coal Industry Health Benefit Stabilization Act. For those States whose economies have historically not been tied to the coal industry, as ours have, the situation emerging in the bowels of the coal mine may not seem of very great concern, but if our colleagues are not now concerned, I would like to deliver a serious message. We have an extremely volatile situation on our hands in our coal fields which, if not resolved quickly may toll the demise of the coal industry as we know it.

After nearly a decade of labor peace, our nation's coal fields once again are echoing with violence. Neither unsafe working conditions nor inadequate wages are the cause of this very grave unrest. No, it is the impetus that is derived from the cancellation of critical health benefits from retirees.

Mr. President, for some more than 133,000 retired miners and their children, health insurance in the UMW health program ranks as the most important benefit they now receive.

And now those very retirees who spent a lifetime below ground with pick and shovel working to heat our homes, fuel our industries, find that at least one and maybe more of their old employers are forsaking them.

Mr. President, coal mining, as I know the Chair knows, is a physically dangerous and risk-laden profession, the most dangerous in this country. With each descent into the pit, our miners face the probability of disease, black lung, or injury. And these illnesses or injuries too often affect the miners not just for a week or a month or a few years but for a lifetime and into retirement years as well.

One constituent of mine worked 28 years in a Smithfield, PA mine. He recently wrote that he never expected anything in return except pension and health benefits in retirement. Mr. President, this is a disabled veteran. He has had open heart surgery. And in June, his company cut off his health benefits. And he writes "I am being forced into poverty."

Mr. President, for somebody who has worked all their life, who has endeavored to stay off the dole, out of welfare, to retain all that pride, that is a terrible admission, a terrible fate to contemplate.

So we are sitting on a time bomb and already 16 coal compaines have gone back on the promises made to miners by ending all contributions to the United Mine Workers and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association health benefit funds.

Abandoning health benefits to retirees is not, I am sorry to say, a new experience. We have had to go through this before. Just 2 years ago my friend and colleague from Ohio, Senator METZENBAUM, and I fought to protect some 78,000 LTV retirees from losing their health care benefits when LTV in bankruptcy tried to terminate their retirees' health plan. We were fortunate that we won that battle. That war really continues today.

Congressional commitment to this special group of retirees, a commitment I might add that is very strongly rooted in history, must continue. The bill we have introduced would force coal companies to honor that very historic commitment to retiree health benefits and to penalize those who irresponsibly seek to dump it.

Specifically, the bill would permit the transfer of surplus dollars from pensoin funds covering United Mine Worker miners in Appalachia, such as the greatly overfunded 1950 pension plan, to the health benefit trust. And, the bill makes clear that health benefits must be treated like pension benefits with appropriate sanctions for fund withdrawals.

Mr. President, the issue before us today is one of fundamental decency—both acknowledging a truly national debt and honoring a promise. Our debt is to those who dedicated their lives and limbs to mining black coal. Our promise is to protect those laborers at a time of greatest vulnerbility, with adequate health benefits in retirement.

I urge our colleagues to join in that effort.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DOLE:

S. 1711. A bill to implement the President's 1989 national drug control strategy; ordered placed on the Calendar.

IMPLEMENTING THE PRESIDENT'S 1989 NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last week, the Senate approved the Department of Transportation appropriation bill which fully funded the President's national drug control strategy and crime bill. Also contained in the bill were four legislative initiatives which were proposed in the strategy. Leaving just one remaining item for consideration by this body.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement that controlled consideration of the appropriation bill, the Senate agreed to consider the remaining initiative as a free standing bill. Today, I am introducing that bill, which requires drug testing by State and local governments of those arrested, incarcerated or on probation or parole.

There has been a fair amount of controversy concerning this provision. It has been suggested that the cost of requiring State and local officials to drug test everyone falling into these categories would be prohibitive. I admit that, if the requirement were that extensive, the administration estimated cost of $800 million would be beyond the ability of State and local governments to pay.

However, that is not contemplated by the bill. It merely requires that each State, within its own drug strategy, must include drug testing of some of those arrested, some incarcerated and some of those on probation or parole.

Therefore, the $800 million estimate is not valid in the discussion of this bill, since no requirement to test all individuals in those classes is contained in the bill.

But, we do need the information which would result from this testing. We need to know how much drug use contributes to crime, how much drug use exists in prisons and jails, and whether drug use is prevalent among those who are released on probation or parole. And, quite frankly, we should take action against those who test negative, as is required by the bill. For example, if a convicted felon is found to be using drugs while in prison, I would suggest that he is probably not the best candidate for parole.

I do not think anyone can disagree that this provision is an essential component in our coordinated efforts to fight drug supply and abuse. The Congress called for the drug strategy, the administration provided a solid blueprint for the war on drugs, and it's now time for the Congress to complete the circle by approving the remaining legislative initiative from the strategy—now.

Finally, Mr. President, the agreement entered on the Transportation appropriation bill also provides for consideration of the President's crime bill before we adjourn. As with this provision, if we are serious about combating drug abuse and other crime in our country, we must give the police, prosecutors and the courts the necessary nonmoney tools they are demanding—the death penalty, habeas corpus reform and a good faith exemption to the exclusionary rule. We have proven that we can spend money on the problem, it is now time to prove that we can address the other parts of the package.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1711

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end of part E (42 U.S.C. 3750-3766b) the following:

"DRUG TESTING PROGRAMS

"SEC. 523. (a) PROGRAM REQUIRED.—No funding shall be provided under this part, whether by direct grant, cooperative agreement, or assistance in any form, to any State or to any political subdivision or instrumentality of a State that has not formulated and implemented a drug testing program, subject to periodic review by the Attorney General, as specified in the regulations described in subsection (b), for targeted classes of arrestees, individuals in jails, prisons, and other correctional facilities, and persons on conditional or supervised release before or after conviction, including probationers, parolees, and persons released on bail.

"(b) REGULATIONS.—The Attorney General shall, not later than six months after the enactment of this section, promulgate regulations for drug testing programs under this section, which shall be based in part on scientific and technical standards determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to ensure reliability and accuracy of drug test results. In addition to specifying acceptable methods and procedures for carrying our drug testing, the regulations may include guidelines or specifications concerning—

(1) the classes of persons to be targeted for testing;

(2) the drugs to be tested for;

(3) the frequency and duration of testing; and

(4) the effect of test results in decisions concerning the sentence, the conditions to be imposed on release before or after conviction, and the granting, continuation, or termination of such release.

"(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall take effect with respect to any State, subdivisions, or instrumentality receiving or seeking funding under this subchapter at a time specified by the Attorney General, but no earlier than the promulgation of the regulations required under subsection (b).".

(b) AMENDMENT TO TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of Title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by inserting at the end of the item relating to part E the following:

"Sec. 523. Drug Testing Programs.".

By Mr. DOLE:

S. 1713. A bill to temporarily suspend the duty on p-hydroxybenzaldehyde; to the Committee on Finance.

TEMPORARY SUSPENSION OF DUTY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation which will temporarily suspend U.S. duty on a chemical, p-hydroxybenzaldehyde, which is not currently imported into the United States and which does not compete with any product made in the United States. Accordingly, I believe that this legislation is noncontroversial and will have no impact on Government reveneus.

By Mr. SIMON:

S. 1714. A bill to reestablish the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS AMENDMENT ACT

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, authorization of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is set to expire on November 30, 1989. The Subcommittee on the Constitution, which I chair, has jurisdiction over reauthorization. Today I am introducing a bill that would reestablish a revitalized Civil Rights Commission after the current authority expires. My bill would enable the Commission to start with a clean slate, without the political acrimony and charges of bad faith that have marred the credibility of the Commission in the past several years.

Since 1957, when the Civil Rights Commission was established, our country has made tremendous progress in fulfilling the promise of equal rights. But the problems of discrimination have not been solved; indeed, they have grown more complex. I believe the mission of the Commission is too important to let it die, or to let it continue with as little credibility as it has had in recent years. We need a Civil Rights Commission that is true to its original purpose as an "independent, bipartisan, fact-finding agency."

Under my bill, the Commission would continue to have eight members. The President would appoint four to staggered terms; the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House would each have two appointments. To protect the independence of the Commission, members could be removed from office by the President only for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. There are limits on compensation and travel expenses, to avoid problems experienced in the past.

The legislation expands the scope of the Commission's charge to study and report on discrimination based on color, race, religion, sex, age, or disability by adding discrimination based on language. Annual reports to Congress are required, in addition to other reports the Commission might publish. In recognition of its special expertise and independence, the new Commission is also given the authority to file amicus curiae briefs before the U.S. Supreme Court, when appropriate.

Mr. President, in drafting my bill I have relied on the advice of many of my colleagues, as well as many civil rights leaders, with whom I shared earlier drafts. Many have given me detailed suggestions that I have incorporated in this legislation. Almost all have supported the concept of a new, revitalized Commission.

These can perhaps best be expressed in the words of Dr. Arthur Flemming, former Chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights:

I believe that if the principal components of your draft bill were enacted into law, Congress would have laid the foundation for the achievement of * * * an autonomous, bipartisan agency with members who are both independent and of unquestioned ability. We hope that * * * the Congress will act soon to give the Nation once again the services of a bipartisan, independent U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me by cosponsoring this historic legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the complete text of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. Res. 213. Joint resolution to designate October 22 through October 29, 1989, as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL RED RIBBON WEEK FOR A DRUG FREE AMERICA

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President. I rise today with my colleagues Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. BURNS, Mr. BOND, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. WILSON, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. GORTON, Mr. COATS, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. GARN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. REID, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. SASSER, Mr. GORE, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. KERRY, Mr. KERREY, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. NUNN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. PELL, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. ROBB, and Mr. GLENN to introduce a resolution declaring October 22 through October 29, 1989, as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America".

Mr. President, drug and alcohol abuse in the United States has reached epidemic proportions and many Americans are deeply concerned. And they have a right to be. The facts are frightening.

Twenty-three million Americans age 12 and over currently use illicit drugs.

A nationwide Weekly Reader survey revealed that of the 68,000 fourth-graders polled, 34 percent reported peer pressure to try wine coolers, 41 percent to smoke, and 24 percent to use crack or cocaine.

The 15- to 24-year-old age group is dying at a faster rate than any other age group because of accidents, homicides, and suicides, much of which is related to drug and alcohol abuse.

Together with the National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth and the Honorary Chairperson President and Mrs. Bush, "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America" is a comprehensive public awareness and prevention education program involving thousands of parent and community groups from across the country. The National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth has organizations in every State promoting healthy drug-free lives, and I believe it's important that the U.S. Senate show our support for what this fine organization is doing for this country.

You're probably wondering, where does the red ribbon fit into all this about drugs and alcohol? It's simple. Every American is encouraged to wear or display red ribbons during "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America" to present a visible commitment to a healthy, drug-free life style, and to develop an attitude of intolerance to the use of drugs.

Mr. President, my resolution is the Senate companion to House Resolution 373. Today I urge my colleagues to join me in designating October 22 to 29 as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America."●

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

IMPLEMENTATION OF PRESIDENT'S DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

DOLE AMENDMENT NO. 910

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. DOLE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1711) to implement the President's 1989 National Drug Control Strategy, as follows:

Add at the end thereof the following:

"(d) In issuing regulations pursuant to subsection (b) of this Act, the Attorney General shall also take into account the ability to pay for drug testing programs to be undertaken by the State and local governments."

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the amendment I am filing today, to S. 1711, will clearly provide that the attorney general must take into account a State of local government's ability to pay for drug testing when promulgating regulations under the bill.

While we have been given guarantees by the administration that it will not impose costly requirements on the State local governments which will be required to test some of those arrested, incarcerated, or on probation or parole, concerns continue that the cost to these governments could be excessive.

This amendment will put an end to those concerns once and for all. It does nothing more than is being sought by the administration, and will allow the debate to be focused on the essential need to drug test at least a portion of these individuals.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

"PARENT POWER" IN EDUCATION

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, recently the national spotlight has focused on one of America's top priorities—education. President Bush convened his education summit with the Nation's Governors. The last time we had such a summit was in 1933, when President Franklin Roosevelt called all the Governors together to discuss his plans for dealing with the Great Depression.

Earlier this month, leaders in the Democratic Party announced national goals for educational excellence. Hopefully, these events will prove to be significant steps in improving America's schools and the performance of our students.

Six years ago this Nation was rocked by the watershed report issued by the National Commission on Excellence in Education, "A Nation at Risk." In the past, the report stated:

> Each generation of Americans has outstripped its parents in education, in literacy, and in economic attainment. For the first time in the history of our country, the educational skills of one generation will not surpass, will not equal, will not even approach, those of their parents.

The figures were staggering. One million teenagers in this country cannot read above the third grade level. One-fourth of our Nation's youth never graduate from high school. One-third of all adults are to some degree illiterate.

Education is critically important. It determines our children's future—and it determines the future of this country. According to Ben Franklin, education is just about the best investment there is. "If a man empties his purse into his head," Franklin said, "no man can take it away from him. An investment in knowledge always pays the best interest."

Following the 1983 landmark report, we saw a nationwide effort to improve education. Course requirements were stiffened. Teachers' salaries were raised. And new standards were put in place in most of America's 50 States. Progress was made. Unfortunately, there is evidence that the reform movement has run out of steam.

A National Geographic study released last year found that 75 percent of the young Americans surveyed could not locate the Persian Gulf on a map. One out of seven could not identify the United States on a world map.

A 1987 study of 17-year-olds by the National Endowment for the Humanities found startling gaps in their knowledge of history and literature. Over two-thirds could not place the Civil War within the correct half century. Nearly a third placed Columbus' discovery of America after 1750.

Then there was the 1988 study by the Educational Testing Service comparing the performance of U.S. students in science and math with that of students from 11 other countries and Canadian provinces. The result? In international math and science tests, the United States comes out rock bottom.

These results are simply not acceptable. They underscore the need for a new national effort to reverse the decline in America's system of education. This need has resulted in the first U.S. summit in 56 years and the Democrats' announcement of national educational goals.

The recommendations we are hearing all stress the responsibility of educators and Government to tackle the education crisis. There is an emphasis on accountability—on holding teachers, students, and schools to standards of quality in education.

But educators do not have all of the answers, and neither does Government. Parents also have a role—a very important role—in their children's education. Significantly, "A Nation at Risk" concludes with recommendations to parents on specific ways they can ensure their children's success in school. It ends with the message to parents that "your child's ideas about education and its significance begin with you."

Two educators from Pinal County, AZ—Sherry Ferguson and Lawrence Mazin—have written a book on the importance of the parent's role in education. "Parent Power: A Guide to Your Child's Success in School" is predicated on the belief that "parents are the first and most important of their children's educators." If American education is to survive, it states, there must be cooperation among school, community, and most important—family.

"Parent Power" encourages parents to get actively involved in their children's education. The book contains checklists with questions for parents to ask themselves: Do you enhance your home environment to support learning? If your child cannot explain or understand the homework, do you find out why? does your family make a commitment to limit all TV watching by everyone? The book cites a shocking study by Michigan State University. That study gave 4- and 5-year-olds a hypothetical choice between giving up television or their fathers. One third chose to keep the TV.

"Parent Power" also encourages parents to shape their child's values and to show caring and compassion, especially when the child fails at a task. It encourages parents to spend time together as a family. Above all, it encourages parents to build their child's self-image, and quotes nationally acclaimed teacher Marva Collins: "What a person thinks of himself will determine his destiny."

In America today one out of every four students will drop out of school. As "Parent Power" suggests, the difference between these students and those who stay in school may very well be a parent who gives encouragement, love, and support.●

TRIBUTE TO RETIRING CHIEF OF THE JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF, ADM. WILLIAM J. CROWE, JR.

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, on Friday my good friend and fellow Oklahoman Adm. William Crowe retired as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He has earned the respect and appreciation of all Americans and has brought special pride to all of us in his home State. We all feel a sense of loss in his retirement as we have welcomed the opportunity to work regularly with such an experienced and qualified officer. However, I hope to continue to consult with Admiral Crowe as an expert on military and foreign affairs. His insights will always be valuable in such matters due to his proven reputation as a capable decisionmaker. He will undoubtedly remain an important, unofficial adviser to many Members of Congress and government officials.

During his tenure as the chief officer in the military, William Crowe has set a standard by which all future chairmen will be measured. His expertise on the relationships between the Congress, the White House and the military is unsurpassed by any other Chairman. The Chairman has understood the need to harmonize military capabilities with the ever changing political atmosphere. Thanks to Admiral Crowe, we have a model for the skills needed by the military officers of the 1990's and beyond.

No recent American military leader has done more to pool the resources of the military services for maximum efficiency in several ways including giving real support from the Joint Chiefs to unified commands. His insights on many matters faced by the Intelligence Committee have been of tremendous help. He understands the use of intelligence as a force multiplier in times of tight military budgets. He was the first Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to take a trip inside the Soviet Union. He was also a force in the advancement of arms negotiations because he was able to form a personal relationship with the leader of the Soviet military. Admiral Crowe has as clear an understanding as any American of the likely evolution of our relationship with that military superpower in the future.

Crowe has a broad background, strong in both the civilian and military areas. After he graduated from the Naval Academy, he did not ascend the ladder of naval hierarchy in orthodox succession. Instead of taking the route to leadership positions, he took the academic-political route. In 1956 he took a year to earn his masters of arts in education from Stanford University. He received his doctorate in politics from Princeton in 1965. He then ascended to admiral through a series of challenging assignments included serving as head of Naval Office of Plans and Policy, Commander of the Allied Forces Southern Europe and Commander of the U.S. Forces in the Pacific. While at each of these positions he established himself as a capable leader and skilled diplomat. In many of the areas he formed relationships that would benefit him throughout his career.

Admiral Crowe has become a symbol of the modern military and its evolving role in today's society. He is just as at home attending a Washington political gathering as when he is skippering a Navy submarine. The diversity of his knowledge and his resourcefulness have allowed him to make a great contribution to our national security effort.

Crowe is not only a qualified leader, but he is a fine human being who values the constant struggle for the advancement of mankind. Let me share a few examples of his dedication. For the past 4 years he has served as an active member of the selection committee for the Oklahoma Foundation for Excellence, which is a program in Oklahoma that picks the top 100 high school scholars and the top 4 teachers to be honored as Academic All-Staters. Crowe's membership on the committee is not just an honorary position; he has spent hours pouring over academic records in order to evaluate which Oklahoma students and teachers deserve to be picked as "cream of the crop."

One of my favorite stories about Admiral Crowe and his caring personality occurred last Christmas. A young Oklahoman named Jason Brady who was inflicted with a rare form of cancer and had been diagnosed to live only a few more weeks was given a trip to Washington. The trip was provided by a nonprofit organization which tries to fulfill one special wish of terminally ill children. Even with his busy schedule Crowe put everything on hold to spend time with young Jason. The Admiral even showed Jason his world famous hat collection, souvenirs of his life's travels and experiences. Bill Crowe's sincere concern for others, his kindness and thoughtfulness have made him a leader that others want to follow.

While all of us are sorry to see Admiral Crowe retire, for Oklahomans at least, there is a silver lining. He will soon become a distinguished visiting professor at the University of Oklahoma. Young Oklahomans will have the chance to learn from him as he shares his experience and expertise with them. It is typical of Bill Crowe as it is of his fine wife, Shirley, who has been a true partner in public service, that he wanted to give back to his home State and to the next generation in such a special way.

To Adm. Bill Crowe, and to Mrs. Shirley Crowe, we all say thank you for your service to our country. We salute you.●

THOMAS MEREDITH, PRESIDENT OF WESTERN KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to insert into the RECORD a copy of an article that appeared in Monday's Louisville Courier-Journal about Mr. Thomas Meredith, the president of Western Kentucky University. Mr. Meredith's first year as president has been filled with engagements that have not only boosted the image of Western Kentucky University, but also the image of himself as an advocate for an improved educational system for the State of Kentucky.

Mr. Meredith, "has come home to make a difference." This native of Owensboro served as a vice chancellor at the University of Mississippi during his 19-year stay in Mississippi. Meredith is not only determined to improve his university, Western Kentucky University, but he plans to help in the long process of developing a new Kentucky educational system.

Mr. Meredith can only prove to be a great asset to the State of Kentucky. He is a man truly dedicated to education and the overall betterment of Kentucky's people. I hope, Mr. President, that you and my fellow colleagues will take the time to note the outstanding achievements of my constituent.

The article follows:

MEREDITH'S FIRST YEAR IN REVIEW: WKU PRESIDENT WANTS SCHOOL AT FOREFRONT OF EDUCATION

(By Cynthia Crossley)

BOWLING GREEN, KY.—In his first year as Western Kentucky University's president, Thomas Meredith worked on cultivating an image.

Two images, in fact—his own and the university's.

The more than 100 civic groups, high school students and alumni groups who Meredith visited in the past year heard about Western's accomplishments and how he wants to put the school on the cutting edge of education.

If he touched at all on conflicts within the university, it was to say he was studying the issues and using his first year to observe things.

Meredith, an Owensboro native who spent 19 years in Mississippi, including a stint as a vice chancellor at the University of Mississippi, also has been saying that he came to Western "to make a difference."

"I didn't come back just to sit in the president's chair," Meredith said recently. "This state can't be all I want it to be until we have a first-rate education system."

Meredith formally took over as president Sept. 15, 1988. He succeeded Kern Alexander, who had become embroiled in several controversies during his 2½ years as president, including an attempt to reorganize student publications that was denounced by many as censorship and plans—eventually dropped—to buy and move the birthplace of poet Robert Penn Warren from Guthrie, Ky., to the Western campus.

Since taking over, Meredith has devoted much of his time to giving speeches and boosting Western's image, but he has carried out a few initiatives too. He streamlined transfers for community-college students interested in four-year degrees, and he's planning to appoint a committee soon to study what Western's priorities should be in the next 10 years. He's also proposed the creation of two development centers, to serve the state's teachers and businesses.

He's also increased Western's efforts to attract and retain minority professors and minority students and to attract more top students in general.

While education leaders praised those efforts—particularly the new transfer process—it has been Meredith's talks around the state that have won him rave reviews.

"I think he's wonderful," said Mike Harreld, a Louisville banker who is chairman of the state Council on Higher Education and a former Western regent. "He brings very strong communication skills and a sense of focus and vision."

"I think he's a forceful and persuasive advocate for Western Kentucky University," said University of Louisville President Donald Swain.

But some people at Western—specifically members of the faculty senate—think Meredith has indeed done little more than sit in the president's chair when he is in town. They point to several things they think he should have acted on in the past year.

"He's been a good (Western) president for the rest of the state, but he's not followed up on resolutions from the faculty senate," said senate President Bart White, an associate professor of communications and broadcasting. "We didn't hire him to be public relations chairman; we hired him to be a president. You can't be head of an organization and not listen to the people within it."

Meredith says he is listening to his faculty but that his first year in office has been an unusual one because he was away so much introducing himself.

Meredith also said some people want him to act faster—to react, instead of studying their requests.

"Some administrators like to react as soon as a little smoke appears," Meredith said. "I typically like to massage things a little bit (and) make sure we understand the situation, to make sure we have all the sides of an issue."

Last week he began responding to some of the faculty's requests. He plans to decide in the next week or so on whether Western will have department heads or department chairs, and what responsibilities the title will bring. Western now has department heads; professors say department chairs would better represent their needs. The faculty senate asked him for a decision on the matter a year ago.

Meredith also said last week that he will probably appoint a committee to study a faculty report on athletic spending, although he declined to set a timetable. The report, released in March, found that Western's athletic spending has risen 141 percent in 10 years, creating a deficit that had grown to $1.5 million in 1987-88, and it suggested that Western cut back its athletic spending.

The three Western professors who wrote the report recommended that Meredith appoint an objective committee of representatives from Western's athletic programs, the faculuty and the surrounding community to study athletic spending at Western, said Arvin Vos, a professor of philosophy and religion and one of the report's authors.

In August, when Meredith had not taken any noticeable action on the report, the professors submitted an essay based on the report to editorial pages around the state. It appeared in several newspapers, including the Courier-Journal.

Not all faculty members, however, agree with the report. Some older professors recall a similar controversy about athletics in the early 1980s and said the latest report had overlooked many ways athletics serve the university.

Last week, a rebuttal to the essay by a trio of Western economics professors was published in the Courier-Journal; it said the three professors who wrote the report had used inflated cost figures and had overlooked some indirect revenues in reaching their conclusions.

And Meredith, who attended college on a basketball scholarship, said he had heard nothing but "100 percent support" for Western's athletic programs from the surrounding community.

The athletic-spending report is probably the university's most divisive issue, but professors and administrators interviewed for this story agreed that the report—and Meredith—may be the focal point for long-term frustrations over historically low funding for higher education in Kentucky.

Like other schools, Western is facing several problems stemming from a lack of money.

A 30 percent increase in enrollment over the past four years is straining Western's faculty and buildings. In an interview, Meredith said this fall's preliminary enrollment of 14,694 may mark the limit to which the university can expand without significant funding increases.

That means Western may have to set earlier application deadlines or demand higher high school grades and admission-test scores, Meredith said.

"We don't want to cap enrollment in a state where one out of every nine residents is a college graduate," Meredith said. "We should be trying to educate everyone we can. I don't know of a state that has developed economically, as we want to, that hasn't first improved its education system."

In addition, Western has had to defer building repairs.

For example, faculty members talked about pianos and books ruined by moisture, of bricks falling off buildings, of floors separating from walls.

Low faculty salaries are also a problem. Some observers say the salaries are driving away the next generation of talented professors, as well as making current teachers less inclined to go the extra step.

Surveys have shown that Kentucky's professors are earning an average of $5,455 less per year than their counterparts across the nation and nearly $3,000 less than colleagues within the region.

Meredith's answer is to ask the state for more money and to improve Western's ability to raise money from private sources. Some of his talks last year set the stage to do just that, he said.

Western's board of regents resolved in July to ask next year's legislature for an extra $3.9 million to raise faculty and staff salaries, and an extra $2.83 million to add instructional staff to handle the additional enrollment. It also wants $43.4 million for building improvements—and that doesn't include money needed for a new residence hall and a new classroom building.

Funding for higher education will be running up against proposals to revise spending on Kentucky's elementary and secondary schools. While Meredith argues that the state should look at the total educational picture—kindergarten through college—the Kentucky Supreme Court ruling earlier this year ordering the revamping of the public-education system covers only kindergarten through 12th grade. So far most of the public discussion on the issue has left out higher education.

The faculty senate doubts the state will give Western more money. Western is getting only 84 percent of the money that the state's funding formula says it should get, university officials said. The faculty believes Western's only recourse is to reallocate its budget, including changing its spending on athletics.

Meredith may be more successful in raising private money. While he was a top administrator at the University of Mississippi, the school raised $61 million in private funds.

"I think he would be very successful. He has a natural ability to be a fund-raiser and to sell his agenda," said Owensboro Mayor David Adkisson, who's also chairman of Kentucky Advocates for Higher Education. "He's very articulate and presents a great case."●

RELEASE OF RESTRICTIONS ON CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 218, H.R. 838, a bill authorizing the release of airport restrictions in Newport News, VA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 838) to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to release restrictions on the use of certain property conveyed to the Peninsula Airport Commission for airport purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, with an amendment.

On page 2, after line 5, insert the following:

SEC. 2. Section 511(a)(12) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 App. U.S.C. 2210(a)(12)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "and except further that this limitation on the use of all other revenues generated by the airport shall not apply to revenues generated from a contract between the State of Hawaii and a commercial licensee permitting the display and sale of in-bond merchandise at a location both on and off airport properties within that State, and revenues so generated may be expended for any transportation purpose, including, but not limited to, airports, harbors, and highways of that State only if (A) the revenues which may be so used are limited to revenues attributable to sales of in-bond merchandise from other than airport properties; (B) the revenues which may be so used are in excess of 150 percent of the requirements of the airport revenue fund for a period of 12 months following the State's annual estimate of the airport's requirements; and (C) the revenues described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph are not available for transportation expenses other than those related to air transportation after December 31, 1995;".

So as to make the bill read:

H.R. 838

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (b) of the first section of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to release restrictions on the use of certain property conveyed to the Peninsula Airport Commission, Virgina, for airport purposes", approved November 6, 1986 (Public Law 99-618; 100 Stat. 3490), is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3) by striking "7.5 acres" and inserting "20.5 acres"; and

(2) by striking paragraph (4).

SEC. 2. Section 511(a)(12) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 App. U.S.C. 2210(a)(12)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "and except further that this limitation on the use of all other revenues generated by the airport shall not apply to revenues generated from a contract between the State of Hawaii and a commercial licensee permitting the display and sale of in-bond merchandise at a location both on and off airport properties within that State, and revenues so generated may be expended for any transportation purpose, including, but not limited to, airports, harbors, and highways of that State only if (A) the revenues which may be so used are limited to revenues attributable to sales of in-bond merchandise from other than airport properties; (B) the revenues which may be so used are in excess of 150 percent of the requirements of the airport revenue fund for a period of 12 months following the State's annual estimate of the airport's requirements; and (C) the revenues described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph are not available for transportation expenses other than those related to air transportation after December 31, 1995;".

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I am pleased to bring before the Senate, H.R. 838, legislation critical to the advancement of aviation and transportation in the States of Virginia and Hawaii. It is a bill that was unanimously approved by the Commerce Committee before the August recess, and I hope that it will be approved by the Senate today.

Very simply, the bill attempts to address longstanding issues affecting two airports. First, at Newport News, VA, legislation is needed to allow the limited release of deed restrictions on property originally conveyed to the Peninsula Airport Commission, which operates the Patrick Henry Airport. Legislation similar to this was enacted during the 99th Congress, but Public Law 99-618 did not allow for the release of the 13 acres specified by this bill, or the transfer of land to private entities.

The Federal Aviation Administration has stated that it has no objection to this provision, as the property involved will not affect the operation or development of the airport in Newport News. Additionally, attorneys for the Peninsula Airport Commission have provided their assurances that the proceeds from the sale of this land have been used for the development, improvement, operation, and maintenance of the airport.

Mr. President, H.R. 838 will also address a situation in the State of Hawaii to ensure the efficient use of funds generated at the off-airport duty-free facility in Honolulu for aviation and other transportation needs.

The State of Hawaii has estimated that the combined operation of the on-airport and off-airport duty-free facilities will generate $1.15 billion over a 5-year period. Given the funding needs for Hawaii's system of airports, the revenues derived from the off-airport facility are therefore expected to create a substantial surplus in the State's airport revenue fund. However, under current law, funds derived from such an off-airport duty-free facility must be dedicated solely to air transportation development and operations.

This legislation would resolve this situation by permitting the use of certain revenues generated by the off-airport duty-free facility in Hawaii for any transportation purpose, such as airport development, highway construction, and harbor development. To protect funding for the Honolulu International Airport, as well as the other airports in Hawaii, the bill provides that only those revenues in excess of 150 percent of their funding requirements be transferred for other transportation purposes. Additionally, this provision, which is limited to this single facility in the State of Hawaii, is designed to sunset at the end of 1995, a further safeguard that will ensure adequate review in the future.

Mr. President, I believe that this bill is a balanced effort to resolve two problems very unique to two airports. I urge its passage today and hope that my colleagues will join me in supporting the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there amendments to the committee substitute?

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the committee amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read the third time, the question is on the passage of the bill.

So the bill (H.R 838) was passed.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

URGING THE AWARD OF A NOBEL PRIZE FOR PRESERVATION OF THE WORLD ENVIRONMENT

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 252, Senate Joint Resolution 162, a joint resolution urging the Nobel Commission to consider awarding a prize for achievements in preserving the world environment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 162) to urge the Nobel Commission to consider awarding Nobel Prize recognition for achievements in preservation of the world environment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read the third time and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 162) was passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 162

Whereas the world's environmental problems are no longer confined within the borders of a single nation, but affect the citizens of all nations;

Whereas the world must act in the next decade to ward off a grave and growing danger to the global ecological system that sustains life as we know it;

Whereas the science of global environmental studies is expanding dramatically both in academic stature and in political importance;

Whereas the findings of environmental scientists in areas such as stratospheric ozone depletion, the greenhouse effect, deforestation, and acid rain are already leading to a profound change in public consciousness and in the agendas of all governments;

Whereas the work of these outstanding individuals should be recognized on a global scale, not only to reward their accomplishments, but to increase worldwide awareness of the environmental peril and underscore the urgency of environmental protection; and

Whereas humankind's pursuit of progress in the sciences, literature, economics, and world peace will falter if we do not also work to save the planet on which we live: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States urges the Nobel Commission to consider awarding Nobel Prize recognition for achievements in preservation of the world environment. Such a prize would recognize outstanding individuals who have made signal contributions to our awareness of and responsibility for the environment.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ELIMINATION OF PREVENTABLE DEATHS AND DISABLING ILLNESS

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 253, Senate Resolution 122, expressing the sense of the Senate in support of actions to eliminate preventable deaths and disabling illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 122) expressing the sense of the Senate in support of actions to eliminate preventable deaths and disabling illness, especially among children, through intensified international collaboration to attain the United Nations goals of Universal Childhood Immunization by 1990 and Health for All by the Year 2000, and through the convening of a World Summit on Children.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the regulation?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S. RES. 122

Whereas in 1982 the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) launched the "Child Survival and Development Revolution", to reduce by one-half by the end of this century the then daily toll of 45,000 deaths of young children attributable to preventable disease and malnutrion;

Whereas such "Child Survival and Development Revolution" has achieved impressive results, despite the extreme economic and developmental difficulties that have afflicted developing countries in this decade;

Whereas in 1983 Congress approved a joint resolution (Public Law 98-198) that was the first piece of national legislation to endorse formally the Child Survival and Development Revolution;

Whereas low-cost, high-impact, health and nutrition interventions form the core of child survival programs;

Whereas most notably, oral rehydration therapy and immunization are already by 1989 saving the lives of over 2,500,000 children per year who would have died if the death rates of 1982 still prevailed;

Whereas UNICEF, the World Health Organization (WHO), the governments of developing countries, the World Bank, and other multilateral and bilateral development assistance agencies (including the Agency for International Development in the United States) have identified additional low-cost opportunities for dramatically improving the survival, health, and development of the children of the world;

Whereas such low-cost opportunities could, with increased international coordination, political commitment, and institutional innovation, increase the number of children saved to over 5,000,000 within 2 years and to over 10,000,000 annually on a permanent and sustainable basis by 2000;

Whereas fewer than 5 percent of children in the developing world were immunized against the six major childhood diseases when the United Nations' goal of "Universal Child Immunization of 1990" was initiated in 1977;

Whereas now more than 50 percent of children worldwide are immunized and the Universal Child Immunization target of at least 80 percent immunization by 1990 is within reach for a majority of developing countries;

Whereas the Child Survival and Development Revolution requires integrated action to meet the goals of providing the following basic needs: nutrition, primary health care, environmental sanitation, water, and basic shelter, and basic education, especially for women and girls;

Whereas many governments, including the United States Government, have endorsed the attainment of these goals by the year 2000 as part of the WHO program of "Health for All";

Whereas a "Grand Alliance for Children" composed of a vast array of critically important private organizations, including voluntary associations, private businesses, the media, religious groups and other institutions, as well as governments, intergovernmental agencies and international organizations, is advancing child survival and development programs;

Whereas the emerging global concern for children, reflects a new international political commitment to future generations;

Whereas such political commitment has been evident at the highest levels of international discourse, such as the Joint Statement issued on June 2, 1988, following a Summit Meeting in Moscow between the United States and the Soviet Union;

Whereas at such Summit Meeting President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev reaffirmed support for the goal of UNICEF and WHO of reducing the sale of preventable childhood death and urged other countries and the international community to intensify efforts to achieve such goals;

Whereas a general surge in concern for the welfare of children has formed the moral, legal, and political basis for the International Convention on the Rights of the Child;

Whereas such International Convention on the Rights of the Child would define the rights of children with regard to survival, protection, and development, and is expected to be approved by the United Nations Assembly in 1989;

Whereas Secretary of State James Baker has indicated that the United States should take a leadership role in the initiative to develop a plan to get to the core of the poverty problem in order to achieve a healthy world by 2000;

Whereas the United States has consistently led the world in the provision of financial, operational, research, and advocacy support for child survival initiatives; and

Whereas the Executive Director of UNICEF, with the current endorsement of over a score of national leaders from developed and developing countries, East and West, has proposed a "World Summit on Children" to promote international plans for achieving the goals of child survival, health, and development of all children: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That—

(1) it is the sense of the Senate that the child survival and development programs implemented collaboratively by national governments, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Health Organization (WHO), the Agency for International Development, and many other governmental and nongovernmental organizations are to be commended and have the full support and encouragement of the Senate.

(2) the Senate reaffirms a commitment on the part of the Senate to the goal of permanent improvement in the survival rates, health, and development of people in all countries, especially children, by 2000, and urges the President to adopt such goals as a major priority of the executive branch and to lead the world community in proposing concrete actions to achieve such goal;

(3) the Senate urges the President, on behalf of the people and Government of the United States, to propose to the Secretary General of the United Nations that the Secretary General establish an independent advisory commission to provide strategic planning, leadership, and advice to the world community on collaborative actions and programs in primary health care, nutrition, basic education, and environment by all members of the Grand Alliance for Children in order to eliminate easily preventable death and disabling illness in all countries by 2000;

(4) the Senate endorses the call for a representative World Summit on Children at the earliest opportunity to provide a forum for governmental leaders, including the President of the United States, to commit to concrete plans of national action and international cooperation to reduce the scale of preventable childhood deaths nationally and globally;

(5) the Senate endorses, in particular, a commitment for such governmental leaders to attain the goals of Universal Childhood Immunization by 1990 and Health for All by 2000; and

(6) the Senate encourages the President of the United States to take a leading role in ensuring the convening of a World Summit on Children at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Resolved, That, not later than 6 months after this resolution is agreed to, the Architect of the Capitol shall establish and implement a voluntary program for recycling paper that is disposed of in the operation of the Senate. Such program shall be designed to encourage separation of paper by type at the sources of generation (including offices of Members of the Senate) and to sell such paper for the purpose of recycling.

PRINTING OF REGULATIONS GOVERNING THE USE OF THE MAILING FRANK

The resolution (S. Res. 181) to authorize printing of the regulations governing the use of the mailing frank, was considered, and agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 181

Resolved, That, the regulations governing the use of the mailing frank by Members and officers of the United States Senate, together with related materials, be printed as a Senate document, and that there be printed two thousand additional copies of such document for the use of the Select Committee on Ethics.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE CIVIC ACHIEVEMENT AWARD PROGRAM IN HONOR OF THE OFFICE OF SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The bill (H.R. 2358) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for the Civic Achievement Award Program in Honor of the Office of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, was considered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, the Civic Achievement Award Program in honor of the Office of Speaker of the House of Representatives [CAAP] was first authorized in 1987 in response to widespread recognition of the problem of civic illiteracy among our Nation's young people. It was developed and is administered by the Close Up Foundation, widely recognized for its innovative government studies programs, in conjunction with the National Association of Elementary School Principals.

The Civic Achievement Award Program [CAAP] targets the fifth through the eighth grade which experts view as a most critical stage in students' educational and social development. The program consists of three basic components: First, requiring students to master information about government, history, economics, geography, American culture, and current events; second, developing library research skills and helping students to enhance their critical thinking abilities; and third, volunteering service to the community and civic action. Following completion of the three projects, students, their teachers, and participating schools receive congressional award certificates in recognition of their accomplishments.

Mr. President, a report was recently released by the Carnegie Council on Adolescent Development after a 2-year study. It is interesting to note that this study was initiated at the same time this program was implemented. The study cites ages 10 to 15 as a period of "extreme vulnerability," calling for an academic program that promotes critical reasoning, including service to the community—essentially an outline of the CAAP. After 2 years of experience with the Civic Achievement Award Program, it is heartening to know that the demand for CAAP has grown and that studies are now available which validate the need for a meaningful program.

The program was originally conceived as a congressional one, administered by the legislative branch and fully funded by Congress. The response has been so positive and the demand so great that it is now clear that budgetary constraints necessitate that the funding and administration be reconsidered. The legislation before us extends the program for 1 year and authorizes a very modest funding increase. While an increase from $680,000 to $1,033,785 is authorized, this program could grow from 25,000 students to 60,000 students if additional funds were available. The demand is such that next year's national launch could easily—and without solicitation—involve three or four times this number of participants.

During the next few months, the program likely will be moved from the jurisdiction of the Library of Congress, and the Close Up Foundation has been encouraged to engage in outside fundraising. Close Up has a long history of establishing effective public-private partnerships for its high school program. As public awareness of the need for such programs as CAAP grows, it is appropriate that private institutions become involved. Private dollars will enable us to significantly increase the outreach of this program and broaden substantially the reach of the Federal investment.

I wish to commend the Close Up Foundation and the National Association of Elementary School Principals for their work on this program. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

The bill (H.R. 2358) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD FOR FISCAL YEAR 1988—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Ways and Means.

TRIBUTE TO GREGG OLSON, A FELLOW ROOKIE

(Mr. HOAGLAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOAGLAND. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I am a rookie in this institution, and it is my first year, and it is with a special sense of honor and pride that I rise to honor another rookie, Gregg Olson of the Baltimore Orioles.

Mr. Speaker, Gregg Olson is a product of Omaha, of my congressional district, a graduate of Northwest High School in Omaha, and he significantly contributed to the success of the Baltimore Orioles this season.

What a year it was for Gregg. His 5-3 record belies the importance of what he really did, which was to set a rookie record of 27 saves with an incredible earned run average of 1.69.

Mr. Speaker, Gregg Olson is my candidate for rookie of the year. In a time when we focus on bad kids, I want to take just a moment to honor this 22-year-old, and to honor also his parents, Bill Olson, a teacher at Northwest High School in Omaha, and Sandra Olson, a planning manager with Immanuel Hospital in Omaha.

Gregg has made all of us in Omaha proud.

CURRENT EVENTS IN PANAMA

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, events in Panama over the past weekend once again underscore what has been clear to most of us for some time: The illegitimate regime of the dictator Noriega must go.

Yesterday at a peaceful protest in one of the western provinces in Panama, Ricardo Arias Calderon, the former opposition candidate for Vice President in Panama's May elections was arrested along with a number of his supporters for calling for the ouster of Noriega.

As we speak, reports from Panama indicate that supporters of the civic democratic opposition alliance, which as we all recall swept to victory by a 3-to-1 margin in the elections that Noriega later annulled, are marching in the streets with signs and placards proclaiming "Free Arias Calderon."

The arrest of the former Vice-Presidential candidate followed on the footsteps of a raid by Noriega thugs on an opposition printing press on Saturday.

Noriega should well understand that despicable and cowardly actions of this sort only serve to strengthen the resolve of the United States to do all it can to oust him from power.

PASS THE BEST CHILD CARE PROPOSAL

(Mr. JONTZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JONTZ. Mr. Speaker, later this week the House will take up the important subject of child care. I rise today to address two aspects of the legislation that has been approved by the Committee on Education and Labor as H.R. 3, which will be coming before us soon as part of the Budget Reconciliation bill.

First, the Education and Labor Committee bill does allow church-based child care. If a church wants to operate a sectarian child care program as part of their ministry, of course it would not be proper for the program to receive Federal funds, given the church-state separation provisions of the Constitution; but if a church wishes to operate a non-sectarian child care program as a Social Service, they can qualify for assistance under the Hawkins-Downey proposal.

The second point about the committee bill I want to emphasize is that it does provide for parental choice. Expanded Head Start, school-based care, family care, center-based care, these are all options under Hawkins-Downey. By making quality child care affordable, the committee bill will succeed in giving parents many more choices than they have now.

Let us pass the best child care proposal, Mr. Speaker. The House should endorse the committee proposal this Wednesday.

ELECTIONS IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, under the extraordinarily able leadership of our colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss], my friends, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE], and I had the opportunity to witness yesterday in Managua, Nicaragua, the first of 4 Sundays during which registration of voters will take place. We have some encouraging news, and I am saddened to say, some very discouraging news about the process.

We have found that the 14-member alliance, the United Nicaragua Opposition known as UNO, has had hurdle after hurdle imposed on them by the totalitarian Communist regime of Daniel Ortega and the Sandinistas.

It is an uphill battle, Mr. Speaker. It is one which we will have to fight valiantly to overcome. The United States of America and people who love freedom around the world have a very simple choice to make, Mr. Speaker. Are we going to support those who believe in democracy and freedom, or are we going to stand by and allow that repression to continue.

This afternoon we will all be joining in a special order in which we will give a full account of our experiences in El Salvador, during the registration process in Nicaragua and our meeting with Tomas Borge and the tour of two prisons, Tipitapa and La Zona Franca. I hope our colleagues will listen to this full report which we will give at the end of the legislative business today.

THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF COMMUNIST PARTY IN CHINA

(Mr. APPLEGATE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, October 1, was the 40th anniversary of the Communist party in China. The big celebration was in Tiananmen Square. There were hundreds and hundreds of thousands of people there. It is the famous square that students rallying for freedom and democracy were put down and killed.

Well, the United States did what it does best, decided to boycott it, which it should have, but while the United States is boycotting that big celebration, we are allowing Chinese productivity, Chinese goods, to come into the country. We are exchanging scientific knowledge with them. We are selling them very important technology. We are sending our industries into China to take advantage of the low wages, and this is hypocrisy. If the United States wants to show support for democracy, then let us cut them off. Let us not play games.

ELECTIONS IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. GOSS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr.

DREIER] for his kind remarks about my leadership on a trip to Nicaragua with the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], and the gentlemen from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER] and [Mr. COBLE], that we just completed to observe the election efforts under way down there. We traveled to the region as part of a bipartisan effort, which is supported by our Department of State, to have congressional observers in the country during the pre-election period, particularly the critical registration.

We found the people in Nicaragua ready to return, anxious to return, to the democratic fold, but we found a government very unsteady in its pursuant of free and fair elections. Just yesterday, we watched the first of four days of national voter registration, which will be required of all Nicaraguans before they can vote in the February elections.

Mr. Speaker, voter registration is absolutely vital to this election process, and the people are turning out to sign up. We saw it with our own eyes. But the registration process is extremely complicated. The government has already reportedly turned away some of the poll watchers who are observing this merely because their documents are incomplete.

This is a troubling problem for today. We are sure there will be troubling problems tomorrow of the same nature.

One thing would help. We have heard from both sides that they need funds desperately; but right now there is a very uneven playing field in Nicaragua. The democratic opposition that started later, has virtually no resources. They do not even have a workable phone in their headquarters. They will be the ones who gain the most from any U.S. funding that we are able to get to that country for the fair election process.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to fully support the administration's package for free and fair elections and to support it with funds.

ELECTIONS IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, along with Congressmen Goss, DREIER, and COBLE, I participated in a trip to Nicaragua over this past weekend. As a politician examining the situation there, I just say that free elections need our help in Nicaragua. When you stop and think that the Sandinistas own the radio stations, they own the newspapers; on television at their national convention where they chose their presidential candidate, Mr. Ortega, they were covered by television for 12 hours. The opposition party, UNO, is allowed to use the television for 20 minutes each week.

When you have arrangements like this, it is almost impossible to have what I consider a fair election.

One thing more. All the rules and regulations of this election are run by the Supreme Electorate. The Supreme Electorate is 4 to 1 in favor of the Sandinistas.

Mr. Speaker, there were banners every 50 yards in Managua and every 50 yards there was an advertisement for the FSLN and Daniel Ortega. There were no advertisements for UNO. They have no money. They have no assistance. We need to help democracy. We need to help the people in Nicaragua.

ELECTIONS IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, one reason for assisting UNO, a combination of free enterprisers, little people, unions, housewives, and families of prisoners in Nicaragua, is on the front page of the El Nuevo Diario, which shows one of our esteemed colleagues, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] in the same cell with Tomas Borge, Minister of the Interior. It is the cell that Borge occupied in the same prison of the previous administration; but this picture is really a sham. The Sandinistas have made no major prison reforms. We still do not know how many prisoners this Sandinista administration has down there. It could be 8,000 or 10,000. They have never made an accounting to the free world, except through their selected and slanted mouthpieces.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for a change in Nicaragua, and it will not come about unless this body and this country decides to fund UNO, the domestic United Nicaragua Opposition, against the Marxist-Sandinista regime, with every moral assistance, every financial assistance, and political education assistance that we can, within the limits of freedom and democracy. The oppressed people deserve a better chance in Nicaragua than to exist for 10 more years under a regime with 20,000 percent inflation and very little human rights.

It is time to act, Mr. Speaker. I would hope that we not be lulled into a false sense of security by such one-sided promotion as the Marxist regime and newspaper, El Nuevo Diario, uses.

THE WESTERN SHOSHONE CLAIMS DISTRIBUTION ACT

(Mrs. VUCANOVICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, last week I introduced a bill, H.R. 3384, entitled "The Western Shoshone Claims Distribution Act" to resolve a longstanding dispute among the Western Shoshone Indians residing in and near my district.

Under the Indian Claims Act, judgment was entered in favor of the Western Shoshones for nearly $27 million and Congress appropriated these funds in 1979. With interest, the amount has grown to about $60 million today. A large number of Western Shoshones, some of whom are aged, would like to see the distribution of these funds begin. However, there are some outspoken Western Shoshones who consider acceptance of these funds as the sale of their aboriginal lands, which they feel would be morally wrong. Efforts to negotiate a resolution have proved frustrating and futile. Attempts by the Bureau of Indian Affairs to resolve the disagreements have also been unsuccessful. In addition, litigation regarding the aboriginal lands issue failed with a definitive decision by the Supreme Court.

Legislation appears to be the only way to provide an answer. My bill will provide relief to those who want it but not interfere with the hopes and plans of others. It is a fair and reasonable solution to an extremely perplexing problem. I ask for the support of my colleagues on this measure and urge its prompt passage.

CONGRESS IS A REPEAT OFFENDER

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States is a repeat offender. Every year it seems the Congress violates its own fiscal deadline, October 1, and resorts to a probation period under the continuing resolution to allow more time to put together a budget for these United States.

Once again, we are going to be facing a similar deadline whenever this particular resolution wears out. Are we going to be placed in a position again to repeat our previous offenses and allow a last-minute, Christmas Eve, 3 a.m. package of bills to be presented to the President of the United States, who will have no choice unless the Government cranks down to a standstill to sign that bill with all the mischief that it includes?

Mr. Speaker, we ought to be looking very seriously at never allowing this to happen again. We see it every year, and we do nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I have proposed a bill that would say that by October 1 if the Congress of the United States has failed to meet its own fiscal deadline that it ought to revert back automatically to the previous year's budget so that we will not have these temporary probation periods to do the work that we should have done before October 1.

THE FUTURE FOR AMERICA LOOKS VERY BRIGHT

(Mr. McEWEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, the leading economic indicators just came out that once again the future looks very optimistic for America.

It is appropriate that we periodically just take stock, because we hear those who attempt to further their political career by telling how bad things are in this country.

We recognize again that last month 300,000 new jobs were created. That is over 20 million new jobs since 1982, but the fact of the matter is that more than 6 out of every 10 jobs created on this planet since 1982 have been created in one country, the United States of America. If one is a Japanese businessman or a German businessman or an Alabama businessman, they do not build a factory in Mexico, Brazil, or Taiwan. They build it in the United States of America. That is why we still have the largest percentage of people involved in manufacturing, long-term manufacturing, ever in the history of our country.

Mr. Speaker, we also have the same percentage of world trade that we had 25 years ago. I repeat, the future for America looks very, very bright as we enter the 1990's.

DEFERRALS OF BUDGET AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 101-97)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Monday, October 2, 1989.)

EXTENDING CERTAIN PROGRAMS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1709) to provide interim extensions of Department of Veterans Affairs programs of respite care for certain veterans, community-based residential care for homeless, chronically mentally ill veterans, State home construction grants, and leave transfers for certain health-care professionals, and of Department of Veterans Affairs home-loan fees, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the committee chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], for an explanation of his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, authority for the Department of Veterans Affairs to conduct certain programs for veterans expired on September 30. Several months ago, the House passed legislation to grant the Department authority to continue these existing programs. Unfortunately, the other body has failed to act on bills we have sent over and we are faced with emergency legislation.

S. 1709 would extend expiring authorities through November 30. Hopefully, by that time, the other body will have acted on several House-passed bills.

This bill would extend temporary authority for the VA to:

First, continue to collect a 1-percent fee on VA-guaranteed loans;

Second, contract for care for homeless veterans who suffer from chronic mental illnesses;

Third, provide respite care to seriously ill veterans;

Fourth, appropriate funds for the State Home Grant Program; and Fifth, operate a leave transfer program for medical employees.

In short, the bill would allow VA to continue these programs for 60 days until the Senate can consider bills already passed by the House.

The administration supports the bill and I urge adoption of the measure.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for his explanation. We are in agreement in this side, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous material, on the bill under consideration and the next five veterans' bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1335, as amended, would increase the rates of compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and for the survivors of such veterans. There are approximately 2.2 million veterans receiving disability compensation today. In addition, some 272,000 spouses and 41,000 children of veterans who either died in service or who died of service-connected disabilities receive dependency and indemnity compensation. The annual cost of benefits paid in the next fiscal year is estimated to be about $11 billion.

The bill also addresses the important issue of colocating VA regional offices on the grounds of medical centers where there is sufficient land to do so. We think the VA will realize substantial savings by colocating regional offices on hospital grounds where it is feasible to do so.

Before yielding to the very able chairman of the Subcommittee on Compensation, Pension, and Insurance, Mr. APPLEGATE, for a more detailed explanation of the bill, I want to thank him for his leadership during this session of the Congress. His subcommittee has held several oversight and legislative hearings on compensation, pension, and insurance issues.

I also want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MCEWEN] the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, for the work he has done on this bill. The two gentleman from Ohio continue to work together in a bipartisan manner and I commend them for their efforts.

Of course, I want to thank my good friend BOB STUMP, the very able ranking minority member of the full committee, for the cooperation he gives me day in and day out. He has been a great help in getting this bill, and the others that follow, to the floor of the House today.

□ 1230

Mr. Speaker, I yield as much time as he would like to consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. APPLEGATE], chairman of the Subcommittee on Compensation, Pension and Insurance.

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, before I explain the provisions of the bill, let me express my sincere thanks to the distinguished chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, Mr. MONTGOMERY, for his excellent leadership in bringing this important bill to the floor in such a timely manner. Both the chairman and the committee's distinguished ranking minority member, Mr. STUMP, deserve the thanks of our Nation's veterans for their tireless efforts on their behalf.

Of course, I would like to also pay high commendations and thanks to the distinguished vice chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN], who has exemplified himself in leadership on the subcommittee and helped in formulating this bill. He is a true friend of the veterans.

The 4.9-percent increase represents the Congressional Budget Office baseline estimate of what the change in the Consumer Price Index will be for the 12-month period ending on September 30, 1989. Current CBO projections indicate that this figure is a close estimate of what the actual figure will be. While we won't know the actual figure until the last week in October, we will strive to ensure that whatever COLA we ultimately enact will meet or exceed the change in the CPI.

Another provision in the bill adopted by the subcommittee would increase the special monthly compensation payable for anatomical loss, or loss of use, of various organs and portions of the body, which is known as the "K" award by the same 4.9 percent as the other rates of compensation. The "K" award would be increased from $63 per month per loss to $66 per month per loss. This rate was last increased in 1986 by Public Law 99-576 from $62 to $63. Prior to that time it was increased in 1979 from $56 to $62 by Public Law 96-128 so Members can see there is not a large increase from time to time.

Lastly and very importantly, adopted by the subcommittee is a provision which would require the collocation of Department of Veterans Affairs regional offices onto DVA-owned properties on which medical centers are presently located. It would require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to take action to colocate at least three but not more than seven of these regional offices. Not only would it be cost-effective for the Department to build its own regional offices to its own specs, it would also be in the best interests of veterans to have regional offices located as near as possible to the medical centers.

Over the years, some 27 feasible locations have been identified by the Department for colocation.

We have legislated in this area before. In 1986 we required the development of a plan to locate at least seven of these regional offices.

However, the Administrator of Veterans Affairs submitted a plan to the full committee to colocate only the five regional offices in Little Rock, Montgomery, Newark, New York, and Wichita. Thus far only the Little Rock office has been colocated.

On May 14, 1987, Mr. EVANS, chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigation, held a hearing on this issue during which a VA representative testified that good progress was being made on colocation. But, as of this date, very little action has been taken, nor is action likely to be taken in the future. For example, funds for only one project were requested for fiscal year 1989 and no funds for colocation were requested in the 1990 budget. Finally, we do not anticipate that the 1991 budget request will contain any funds for colocation.

This amendment differs from the approach taken by Public Law 99-576 in that it authorizes the Secretary to enter into long-term lease/purchase agreements with private contractors to construct the regional offices on DVA property to the Department's specifications. At the end of the lease period, ownership of the building would vest in the United States. This approach will obviate the need for the up-front appropriation of the cost of construction of these offices and also will enable the Department to escape from the grip the GSA has on it largely due to alleged back-fill difficulties.

The one thing Members have to take a look at is this will not add to the Federal deficit. It will save taxpayers, in the long run, tens of millions of dollars, and it will add convenience for the veterans. So it is a long-range plan that is advantageous and one that is long overdue.

I would just like to take this moment to commend the gentleman from Mississippi, chairman of the committee, Mr. SONNY MONTGOMERY, for initiating this because he was the one who came to the forefront to say that we need to do this colocation, and the fact that it would save so much money. But with the strong support of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS], and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] it has all come together and worked.

A complete discussion of the bill's provisions, as well as a discussion of the pertinent programs, follows:

BACKGROUND OF THE COMPENSATION AND DEPENDENCY AND INDEMNITY COMPENSATION PROGRAMS

There were 2,191,664 veterans receiving disability compensation as of June 1, 1989. The Department of Veterans Affairs expenditures for disability compensation for fiscal year 1990 are expected to be $8.9 billion.

The basic purpose of the disability compensation program, throughout its history, has been one of providing a measure of relief from the impaired earning capacity of veterans disabled as the result of their military service. The amount of compensation payable varies according to the degree of disability, which, in turn, is required by law to represent, to the extent practicable, the average impairment in earning capacity resulting from such disability or combination of disabilities in civil occupations.

To be eligible to receive disability compensation a veteran must have contracted a disease, suffered an injury which is not the result of willful misconduct, or aggravated an existing disease or injury in the line of duty during active duty service and have been discharged under other than dishonorable conditions.

The responsibility for determining a veteran's entitlement to service connection for a disability rests solely with the Department of Veterans Affairs. This determination is based upon the service medical records or other evidence which may be presented to the Department by the veteran. The law provides that if a veteran had service of 90 days or more during time of war or after December 31, 1946, and develops a chronic or tropical disease to a degree of ten percent or more within one year of his discharge from such service, service connection may be granted by presumption. Service connection may be granted by presumption for active tuberculosis or Hansen's disease (leprosy) which becomes manifest to a degree of 10 percent or more within three years of a veteran's discharge from such service and for multiple sclerosis becoming manifest to a 10-percent degree within seven years of a veteran's discharge from such service. In cases of prisoners of war, diseases related to nutritional deficiencies or anxiety states or psychosis which become manifest to a degree of 10 percent or more at any time after service may be granted service connection on a presumptive basis.

When a claim for service-connected disability benefits is received from a veteran, the Department obtains the service medical records and the issue of service connection is generally decided based upon such records. If the service medical records do not establish that the disability was incurred in service, the veteran may submit evidence to substantiate the contention. Generally, this may be by statements from persons with whom the veteran served relating knowledge of the veteran's injury or disease. The Department also would consider the question of entitlement to service connection by presumption if the disability is a chronic disease becoming manifest within the prescribed period of time. If a veteran is granted service connection, the percentage of disability is generally based upon the findings of a DVA examination. If a veteran with a service-connected disability should feel in some later year that the disability has increased in severity, evidence of this, usually a statement of recent medical treatment, may be presented to request re-evaluation of the disability. Should the Department deny service connection or deny a request for an increased rating, the veteran may appeal the denial decision to the Board of Veterans' Appeals (BVA), provided the veteran notifies the Department of his or her disagreement with the decision within one year of the date of notification of the decision. (The enactment of Division A of Public Law 100-687, the "Veterans' Judicial Review Act," created a further avenue of appeal of final decisions of the BVA to the newly created Court of Veterans Appeals.)

The law provides that a case involving a complex or controversial medical issue may be referred to a medical specialist outside of the Department of Veterans Affairs for an advisory opinion. The law also provides that, if service connection for a veteran's disability has been in existence for 10 or more years, service connection may not be severed except in the case of fraud. The law further provides that a disability rated continuously at or above an evaluation for 20 or more years shall not thereafter be rated at a lesser evaluation.

The percentage of disability for a specific disability is assigned in accordance with a "Schedule for Rating Disabilities" which is used as the guideline for measuring the degree of disability. Compensation is paid for disabilities at ratings of 10 percent, 20 percent, 30 percent, and so forth up to 100 percent. The amount of compensation payable for each percentage of disability is established by law. Additional compensation is payable for the loss of a limb, blindness, and other severe disabilities. Additional dependency allowance is payable to veterans with a rating of 30 percent or more for a spouse, minor children, or dependent parents.

DEPENDENCY AND INDEMNITY COMPENSATION FOR SURVIVORS OF VETERANS WHO HAVE DIED OF SERVICE-CONNECTED CAUSES

As of June 1, 1989, there were 272,386 spouses and 41,867 children receiving dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC). These are the survivors of more than 300,000 veterans who either died in service or who died of service-incurred causes. About $2.33 billion is expected to be paid in fiscal year 1990 to the survivors. Widows and children of veterans who died of causes determined to be service-connected are entitled to receive monthly DIC.

The purpose of this benefit is to provide partial compensation to the designated survivors for the loss in financial support sustained as the result of the service-connected death. Income and need are not factors in determining a surviving spouse's or child's entitlement since the Nation assumes, in part, the legal and moral obligation of the veteran to support the spouse and children. Payments of DIC for surviving spouses are determined on the basis of the veteran's service pay-grade and range from $539 for the surviving spouse of an E-1 to $1,381 for the surviving spouse of an O-10. Surviving spouses are entitled to an additional $62 for each child.

There is an additional allowance of $161 monthly which is payable to eligible surviving spouses who are patients in a nursing home or who are in need of the regular aid and attendance of another persons.

Surviving spouses qualified for DIC who are not so disabled as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person but who, due to disability, are permanently housebound, may be granted a special allowance of $79 monthly in addition to the DIC rate otherwise payable.

If there is no surviving spouse receiving dependency and indemnity compensation benefits but there is a surviving child, the child is entitled to $271 monthly with additional benefits for other children.

When a service-connected disability is found to be the principal or contributory cause of death, such death is considered to be service connected. These determinations are made on a very liberal basis. For example, there are disabilities which by their very nature are so overwhelming that eventual death can be anticipated irrespective of coexisting conditions. Even though such a disability is nonservice-connected and is the primary cause of death, consideration is given to whether the co-existing service-connected conditions were of such severity as to have been a material influence in accelerating death. Where death had been so accelerated, it will be considered service connected. The death of any veteran whose service-connected disabilities were the primary cause of death or contributed materially in producing death would, of course, render the survivor basically eligible for service-connected death benefits.

The same benefits provided for those entitled to DIC are also payable to surviving spouses or children of certain veterans whose deaths are not service-connected but who, at death, had been in receipt of total (100 percent) ratings for service-connected disabilities. It is necessary for entitlement under this provision that the 100 percent rating have been in effect continuously for at least ten years at death; or continuously since service and for at least five years. A surviving spouse must have been married to a veteran for at least two years at the time of death before entitlement exists.

The following table shows by war period the number of surviving spouses and children of service-connected veterans in receipt of survivors' death benefits:

PERCENT OF INCREASE IN COMPENSATION RATES

Historically, the Congress has increased compensation rates whenever there has been an appreciable increase in the cost-of-living index, since the rates are not indexed to the Consumer Price Index by law. This is necessary to ensure that inflation does not erode the purchasing power of those receiving compensation and DIC benefits.

From December 1945 through August 1989, the cumulative increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI) was 584.8 percent. During the same period, the cumulative increase in the compensation rate paid for the totally and permanently disabled service-connected unmarried veteran has been 1176.5 percent.

DISCUSSION OF THE PROPOSED COMPENSATION AND DEPENDENCY AND INDEMNITY COMPENSATION RATE ADJUSTMENTS

Sections 2 through 7 of H.R. 1335 would provide, effective December 1, 1989, a 4.9 percent cost-of-living adjustment in the rates of compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation.

As indicated earlier, the Administration proposed indexing these rates to the annual adjustment in the consumer price index in the same manner as the non-service-connected pension program and social security. The Committee does not believe such action would be in the best interest of veterans. It is extremely important that the rate increases for compensation and DIC be legislated on a periodic basis by the Congress rather than being tied directly to changes in the CPI. It is argued that indexing the rates of compensation and DIC would obviate the need for annual Congressional action. However, this would remove from the Congressional arsenal a vehicle through which periodic and necessary improvements to the programs may be made. Furthermore, there is precedent for the Congress enacting a higher increase than would otherwise have resulted through indexing. For example, in enacting Public Law 99-576, effective December 1, 1986, the Congress provided a 1.5 percent increase for these service-connected benefits rather than the 1.3 percent increase reflected by the change in the CPI that would otherwise have resulted. Similarly, Public Law 100-687, effective December 1, 1988, provided a 4.1 percent increase while the change in the CPI was 4.0 percent. For these reasons, the Committee has rejected the Administration's indexing proposal.

Should the proposed 4.9 percent rate increase be enacted, the changes in compensation and DIC rates effective December 1, 1989 would be as follows:

BACKGROUND OF COLLOCATION OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS REGIONAL OFFICES WITH DVA MEDICAL CENTERS

The Department of Veterans Affairs maintains a total of 58 regional offices including at least one regional office in each state, the District Columbia and Puerto Rico, as mandated by law. Through these regional offices, the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of the Department of Veterans Affairs, administers compensation, pension, education, home loan guaranty and other benefit programs for veterans, their dependents, and their survivors.

Unlike medical centers, which are customarily owned by the Department, a regional office is typically located in a Federal office building or privately owned commercial office building. A tenant in both types of buildings, the Department pays rent for office space which is utilized as a regional office. For office space which is occupied in Federal office buildings, the DVA is required to pay fair-market rent to the General Services Administration. As a tenant, DVA must rely on the building landlord to correct deficiencies and make needed improvements which include repair of elevators, improvements in security, removal of potential hazardous conditions and materials, elimination of insect infestations, provision of adequate ventilation, heating and cooling, and the correction of conditions which are detrimental to employee health and safety and a productive office environment. In many cases, the landlord has been slow to respond and, frequently, the responses have been unsatisfactory.

DEPARTMENT COLLOCATION ACTIVITIES

In 1983, the VBA requested the Department of Medicine and Surgery (DMS) to survey all medical centers to determine if suitable land was available for the construction of a regional office or if buildings satisfactory for housing VBA activities were available. As a result of this survey, a total of 28 locations were identified where collocation was possible. Of these sites, 25 were to receive further consideration for major construction projects needed to accommodate a regional office. The other 3 locations did not receive consideration for major construction because the estimated cost of construction or renovation required to house a collocated regional office was estimated to be less than $2 million in two instances and collocation was deemed to be infeasible and impractical in one instance.

In December, 1983, the Committee was notified that 25 regional offices had been identified for potential collocation. A timetable was developed for the inclusion of all 25 of these collocation projects in the VBA major construction budgets during fiscal years 1986–1990.

Because of the lack of progress made by the Department in implementing its 1983 collocation plan, in 1986 Congress enacted Section 502 of Public Law 99–576, the Veterans' Benefits Improvement and Health-care Authorization Act of 1986. This provision sought to encourage the collocation of regional offices onto grounds of medical centers by requiring the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to submit by March 1, 1987, a plan including a schedule for collocating at least seven regional offices onto the grounds of medical centers.

On April 3, 1987, the collocation report required by Public Law 99–576 was submitted. The report however, contained only five collocation projects. Of these five, one project (Little Rock) was already in progress and a second (Wichita) had already been proposed in the budget submitted for fiscal year 1988. One additional collocation in each of fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991 was also tentatively proposed in this report.

On May 14, 1987, the report required by Public Law 99–576 and regional office conditions were reviewed during a hearing conducted by the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations. In spite of the obvious lack of progress which had been made, a VA representative testified the VA was "progressing positively toward a successful program of collocating regional offices on agency grounds . . ."

The Committee understands the Department has developed yet another collocation "plan." This plan, at least the third such plan developed in the last six years, proposes collocating twenty-one regional offices with medical centers between 1991 and the year 2000. This plan does not contain the collocation of the New York regional office, previously scheduled to be collocated in 1987, or the Jackson regional office. Under this plan the Los Angeles regional office, previously scheduled to be collocated in 1988, would not be collocated until 1999, and the St. Petersburg regional office would not be collocated until 1992, instead of 1988 as was proposed in 1983. This new plan further delays the collocation of regional offices with medical centers and is unacceptable to the Committee.

INCREASED FEDERAL SPENDING: ONE CONSEQUENCE OF THE FAILURE TO COLLOCATE

Because only two of the twenty-eight regional offices identified for possible collocation by the VA in 1983 have been collocated as of September 1989, Department regional office rental costs have and are continuing to increase significantly.

The total annual rent paid by DVA for regional office space is considerable. For fiscal year 1987, the Department reported spending $44.48 million to rent office space for 50 regional offices, 34 of which were located in federal office buildings. For the following year, fiscal year 1988, the Department reported spending $51.9 million for regional office rents, a one year rent increase of $7.42 million. For fiscal year 1990, Department regional office rent costs are expected to be $54.66 million, a $10.18 million, 22.3 percent, increase in four years. This already significant cost of DVA regional office rent is expected to continue to increase substantially in future years as current long-term, lower-cost leases expire and significantly higher annual lease rates become effective.

In some locations, collocation has not been pursued because of presumed economic advantages of continued renting. This strategy has proven to be penny-wise and pound foolish, however. For example, although Houston, Texas, in recent years has generally been believed to be a "renter's market" with the supply of rental office space expected to exceed demand, rent paid by the DVA for the Houston regional office has escalated rapidly. From fiscal year 1987 to fiscal year 1988, the annual rent for the Houston regional office increase by 17.6 percent to an annual cost of $1,369,000.

In May, 1985, representatives of the Veterans Administration told the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations, "We, like you, have a great concern about the amount of rent that we are paying . . . Our annual cost for rent is now approaching the huge sum of $50 million. This is a 52-percent increase since 1980, even though we in the agency have been actively participating in the space reduction program."

Four years later, in conjunction with a Full Committee hearing conducted on February 7, 1989, the Department told the Committee, "The VA does not prefer to continue to pay massive amounts of rent for space that is in less than first class condition. Admittedly, not all facilities rented by the VA for regional offices are in good repair and completely satisfactory to our standards for sound operating environments. Generally, the principal areas of concern involve inadequate heating, ventilation and air conditioning." Most DVB facilities are leased from GSA. As such, it is GSA's responsibility to assure the condition of the physical plant.

THE NEED FOR COLLOCATION

The Department has recognized the unsatisfactory and unacceptable nature of working conditions found in some regional offices. In February 1989, the Department reported, "[n]ot all facilities rented by the VA for regional offices are in good repair and completely satisfactory to our standards for sound operating environments. Generally, the principal areas of concern involve inadequate heating, ventilation and air conditioning of our office areas. In addition, we continue to experience delays in some renovation and alterations projects which adversely impact our ability to operate in an efficient manner. In order to correct these deficiencies, we continually work with the General Services Administration to rectify and improve out-of-line conditions."

As examples of unsatisfactory regional office conditions, in June 1988, the Department reported the following:

St. Petersburg, Florida Regional Office—William Cramer Federal Building

"Rodent infestation, custodial services, physical security of building, elevator maintenance and telephone installation have been points of difficulty to varying degrees since 1983. Until recently all other tenants were relocated to other sites in the Tampa/St. Petersburg area. A Military Entrance Processing Center was recently relocated to this building because the building they previously occupied was sinking into the Florida landscape. The Cramer Federal Building has been cited by the VA Inspector General's Office as being inadequate for VA operations . . ."

Jackson, Mississippi Regional Office

Located in what is known as the "B" section of the second floor of the Dr. A.H. McCoy Federal Building, VA elements, "have inadequate air treatment (extreme cold in winter and heat in summer) because of the building design. After many discussions with and letters to GSA, the only acceptable solution is the relocation of the VA activities. The problem is the lack of available space to relocate within the federal buiding."

The Committee believes collocation of the Houston, TX; St. Petersburg, FL; Jackson, MS; New York, NY; Columbia, S.C; Los Angeles, CA; and Montgomery, AL regional offices is a high priority. The collocation of these regional offices is expected to yield immediate benefits and savings to the Department, yet, the latest "plan" would not collocate Houston until 1994; St. Petersburg, 1992; Columbia, 1993; Montgomery, 1991 and Los Angles, 1999. It would appear that collocation of the Jackson and New York regional offices are not contained in the latest plan. The Committee expects the Secretary to direct the Veterans Benefits Administration to revise the collocation schedule and advance the dates for these seven projects.

BENEFITS OF COLLOCATION

While Department experience with collocation has been limited, this limited experience has proven to be highly beneficial. The Department has reported. ". . . in Little Rock, Arkansas, we have experienced immediate benefits in the the reduction of rent costs and shorter response time for adjudication of cases requiring medical reviews and/or examination. In addition, collocation has virtually eliminated mail delays and has afforded the opportunity for establishing a closer working relationship between the medical staff and adjudication division personnel, thus facilitating consultations during comprehensive reviews and assessment of medical information related to veteran claims."

By collocating DVA regional offices onto medical center grounds, significant benefits are expected to be realized, lead by improvement in services provided to veterans. For example, medical examinations are essential to the adjudication of benefit claims. Examination facilities become much more accessible to a regional office when the regional office and medical center are located on the same property. As a direct result of collocation, veterans may also realize improvements in access, convenience, proximity, parking, and transportation alternatives.

In addition to these advantages for veterans, reduced government spending and significant long-term savings are also expected from collocation. Buildings designed and constructed specifically for use as a regional office can provide important increases in operational efficiencies not possible when other facilities are used to house regional office activities. Costly and rapidly escalating rents would also be eliminated by using agency owned and controlled buildings constructed on agency owned property.

The magnitude of the savings possible with collocation are indicated by the following:

In 1985, the VA testified the agency's annual cost for rent was approaching $50 million, a 52 percent increase since 1980. This massive increase in regional office rental cost occurred even though the agency had been actively participating in a space reduction program and the amount of office space being used had been reduced.

The DVA has reported annual rent increases of 10 percent or more for many VA regional offices and a one year rent increase of more than 30 percent has been reported.

The DVA will pay more than $4 million annually to rent office space for the Los Angeles regional office. A new regional office, collocated on the grounds of the VA medical center, could be constructed for an estimated $28.4 million.

The siting of Department of Veterans Affairs regional offices on the grounds of medical centers can offer additional opportunities to reduce spending which otherwise would not be available. The joint use, when feasible, of essential services such as janitorial and security services by a collocated regional office and medical center can provide economies not available to either facility separately while the quality of services provided to veterans can also be improved. These savings can be achieved if the collocated regional office and medical center are administered independently by separate directors or if the medical center and regional office are administered by a single director.

OBSTACLES TO COLLOCATION

One major obstacle to collocation has been the federal budget deficit. Although collocation can reduce costs, improve the delivery of services and provide better, safer employee working conditions, collocation projects have rarely been included in the budget because of competing construction priorities and budgetary constraints. A traditional collocation project would require inclusion of the total project construction cost in the budget. Because of the lack of capital budget, this cost would be considered to be an expenditure, not a capital investment capable of reducing future costs.

A proposal to collocate a DVA regional office onto the grounds of a medical center is subject to review and analysis by both the Department of Veterans Affairs and the General Services Administration. As required by the Office of Management and Budget, the DVA conducts an economic cost analysis (ECA) which is known as an A-104 analysis. This economic analysis provides a comparison of costs associated with various options. These options include the leasing of commercial office space for use as a DVA regional office, construction of a new regional office, or renovation of an existing Department owned building for use as a regional office.

As landlord for the federal government, the General Services Administration evaluates the potential impact of DVA regional office collocation on the inventory of office space which is controlled and managed by GSA. The objective of this analysis is to determine whether space occupied by DVA and proposed to be vacated can be used by other Federal agencies. GSA can express a reservation to the proposed collocation or state that it has no objection to the proposal. When GSA expresses a reservation the collocation is, in effect, prohibited.

GSA space management considerations, unrelated to the goal of providing better service to veterans, have repeatedly, if not indefinitely, delayed regional office collocation. In July, 1986, and February, 1987, for example, GSA was asked to evaluate 11 VA collocation projects. GSA expressed "major reservations" to five (45 percent) of these projects. According to GSA, these reservations were primarily due to GSA being unlikely or unable to secure another occupant for the office space being proposed to be vacated by a DVA regional office.

DISCUSSION OF BILL PROVISIONS ON COLLOCATION

Section 8 of H.R. 1335 would amend section 230 of title 38, United States Code, by adding a new subsection (designated as subsection (c)), that would require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to take action to collocate at least three, but not more than seven, DVA regional offices with DVA medical centers.

The Secretary would be authorized to lease property on medical center grounds, or property adjacent to medical centers under the jurisdiction of the Department, to private parties for up to 35 years. The Secretary would be authorized to enter into lease agreements for new office facilities to be constructed on the leased property by the private parties. The term of any such lease would be limited to 35 years and the lease would have to contain a provision stating that ownership of the leased facility would vest in the United States at the end of the lease term.

The Secretary would also be authorized to sublease portions of the facility to other parties at a rate not less than the rate provided in the facility lease agreement. Amounts received by the Secretary would be required to be used to defray the cost of the lease of the facility.

The Secretary would be required, within 90 days after enactment of the Act, to issue a request for proposals, with various required information included, for three collocations and, within one year after issuance of the request, the Secretary would be required to enter into an agreement to carry out three collocations, unless a determination is made that it is not economically feasible for the Department to undertake them. The Secretary would be required to furnish the House and Senate Committees on Veterans' Affairs with copies of the request for proposals, as well as the agreement for the collocation project at least 30 days prior to the issuance of the request or 30 days before entering into the contract, as the case may be.

The authority of the Secretary to enter into an agreement under this new subsection would expire on October 1, 1992.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEGATE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman as well as the ranking member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN], as well as the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. STUMP], the ranking member of the full committee, for their action on H.R. 1335.

The reason I take just a brief moment here is to agree with the gentleman on collocation. As he mentioned, that has been at Little Rock, AR, at the VA medical center there, and it has been very successful. So I commend the gentleman on his initiative and promoting further collocation in the veterans' system.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEGATE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, talking about collocation and taking the regional offices and putting them on the grounds of these medical centers where in some cases we do have the land available, I noticed in the Friday, September 29, 1989 Washington Post in effect they recommend that the General Services Administration, the GSA, the Department of Transportation, and the EPA and others do this also. I remember several years ago when the General Services Administration blocked us from doing this and they did not like the idea. So I am glad to see that they have changed their feeling on this particular item that we have in the bill.

Mr. APPLEGATE. I thank the gentleman and it is a great move forward.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Veterans' Compensation Amendments of 1989 in H.R. 1385. As has been explained, the measure provides a 4.9-percent cost-of-living adjustment for service-connected veterans.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to add my thanks and appreciation to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SONNY MONTGOMERY, chairman of our committee, for his hard work in bringing this bill to the floor, and also the two gentleman from Ohio, Mr. DOUG APPLEGATE, chairman of the subcommittee, and Mr. MCEWEN, vice chairman of the subcommittee, for their hard efforts in bringing this bill to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN].

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Arizona for yielding time to me, and begin my comments just as he terminated his by expressing my gratitude and delight that we have in serving on the Veterans' Affairs Committee under the able leadership of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP], the vice chairman.

The point is that there are lots of responsibilities and obligations that go with being a Member of Congress, some of them more delightful than others.

□ 1240

But there is none more rewarding than being able to serve on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs and to speak on behalf of those who bear in their bodies daily the burdens and the price of our freedom.

I happen to be one that is approaching very rapidly, within a year or so, my 40th birthday and virtually an entire generation now has lived in freedom because of those ahead of us who paid the price so that we can be free and live not only free but to be in peace.

To them it is our special privilege to speak on their behalf. There are no more able spokesmen than the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP], the ranking member. I am delighted that they have used their tremendous talents in this way.

The recent battle over the passage of a supplemental appropriation for veterans occurred at the beginning of this Congress, and it required the able leadership and skillful maneuvering of both these gentlemen. Indeed, the funds necessary for our veterans were secured after there was an effort on behalf of every dog-and-pony program in America to tag on to that needed assistance for veterans.

They successfully warded off those who would Christmas tree the package and yet thereafter brought it to the President's desk for his signature. This bill before us, H.R. 1335, so ably explained by the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. APPLEGATE], contains the 4.9-percent increase that is necessary for our changes this year to make sure that that which was agreed to by the Congress some years ago that veterans with service-connected disabilities would be rewarded and that they would be compensated properly as the years progressed, and that is that inflation would not erode that compensation to which they were entitled.

So our annual adjustment is before us here. It is also appropriate to acknowledge that it is much less difficult, it is much more advantageous to the veteran that we are able to function in such a relaxed manner as we do on the subcommittee, knowing that Chairman APPLEGATE is committed only to the benefits of serving America's veterans. As a result, we can work in a cooperative manner.

I will say this is one Member who is completely reliant and completely relaxed in following the gentleman from Ohio's leadership because of his commitment to America's veterans.

The final provision mentioned by the gentleman from Arkansas is that there is an amendment added to the bill that would allow for colocation of at least three regional offices at veterans medical centers currently operating.

The amendment is important from a cost standpoint because it would be more convenient for veterans as well as to save the taxpayers money.

For these reasons and others, I join with the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. APPLEGATE], in sponsoring H.R. 1335, and I ask for my colleagues' support as well.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support H.R. 1335, the Veterans' Compensation Amendments of 1989. This bill would provide a 4.9-percent cost-of-living adjustment in the rates of disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation.

Mr. Speaker, for too long our veterans have been treated like second-class citizens. They have scraped for every dime and still they watch their benefits and entitlements erode. This bill will assist in keeping the veteran and his family's benefits current with the level of inflation.

We cannot balance the budget on the backs of our veterans. They have served our country without question. Let's see to it that they are treated with the respect they deserve.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill are very important to the disabled veterans, as was explained by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. APPLEGATE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN].

This is a compensation increasing cost of living, and I certainly hope our colleagues will fully support this legislation.

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to convey my strong support for H.R. 1335, the Veterans' Compensation Amendments of 1989. This important legislation ensures that service-connected disabled veterans and their survivors will receive a 4.9-percent cost-of-living increase. As a cosponsor of H.R. 1335, it is my pleasure to express my support for this measure here today and I am proud to serve on the committee that drafted this important bill.

This legislation provides cost-of-living increases for nearly 2.2 million disabled veterans and approximately 300,000 widows and survivors of veterans who died of service-connected causes. The 4.9 cost-of-living increase provided for in H.R. 1335 would be effective with benefit checks mailed to veterans this December.

Mr. Speaker, we owe much to the men and women who became disabled as a result of serving our Nation. This bill will help fulfill our obligation to disabled veterans to ease inflationary burdens for those who have already borne the highest burden for their country.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1335, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase rates of disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and survivors of such veterans, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNMARKED BURIAL OF CREMATED REMAINS IN ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 88) to direct the Secretary of the Army to set aside an appropriate area within Arlington National Cemetery for the unmarked burial of cremated remains.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 88

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. BURIAL OF CREMATED REMAINS IN ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 24 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 1010. Burial of cremated remains in Arlington National Cemetery

"(a) The Secretary of the Army shall designate an area of appropriate size within Arlington National Cemetery, not suitable for the burial of casketed remains, for the unmarked interment of the ashes of persons eligible for interment in Arlington National Cemetery whose remains were cremated, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(b) The Secretary of the military departments shall make available appropriate forms on which those members of the Armed Forces who so desire may indicate their desire to be buried within the area to be designated under subsection (a).".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"1010. Burial of cremated remains in Arlington National Cemetery.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 88 would direct the Secretary of the Army to set aside an appropriate area within Arlington National Cemetery for the unmarked burial of cremated remains. The bill was introduced by our distinguished colleague from Florida, Mr. BENNETT.

Before yielding to the very able chairman of the Subcommittee on Housing and Memorial Affairs, Mr. STAGGERS, for an explanation of the bill, I want to thank him for the work he has done on this bill and others that have already passed the House relating to the housing and memorial affairs. I know that the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. ROY ROWLAND and the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MIKE PARKER of his subcommittee had hearings this last weekend in Georgia and Mississippi finding ways to improve veterans housing loans and improvement in veterans cemetery care.

I also want to thank the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BURTON] for his cooperation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. HARLEY STAGGERS, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Housing and Memorial Affairs.

Mr. STAGGERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and also for his kind remarks.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 88 directs the Secretary of the Army to set aside an appropriate area, not suitable for the burial of casketed remains, within Arlington National Cemetery for the unmarked burial of cremated remains.

Arlington National Cemetery is this Nation's principal shrine to the men and women who served in the Armed Forces. It is a visible reflection of America's appreciation for those who have made the ultimate sacrifice to maintain our freedom.

Over 200,000 veterans and eligible family members are currently interred within an area of 572 acres developed for ground burials. Although an additional 40 acres is scheduled for development, it is anticipated that there will be no space for in-ground burials after 2020.

In addition, columbarium space for cremated remains will be depleted between the years 2030 and 2040. H.R. 88, as introduced by Mr. BENNETT, to designate additional space for cremated remains, is an alternative approach which should prolong the life of the cemetery. This is an idea which Mr. BENNETT has pursued and fine tuned for several years and he is to be commended for his hard work. It is not a new concept. According to info from Arlington there are already a number of mass burials from the Civil War, World War II, Korea, and Vietnam.

Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that this measure is supported by the Department of the Army. In addition, we have been assured that the parcel of land designated for this purpose would not eliminate any area in Arlington that has been targeted for casketed remains.

I wish to commend the chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee, SONNY MONTGOMERY, for his great leadership and support of this measure as well as the honorable BOB STUMP and DAN BURTON, ranking minority members of the full committee and the subcommittee.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 88. As has been explained, this bill directs the Secretary of the Army to set aside an appropriate area within Arlington National Cemetery for the burial of unmarked cremated remains. This measure was reported unanimously from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

□ 1250

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], the author of this bill.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, for their favorable consideration of H.R. 88, I am deeply grateful to the Veterans Affairs Committee and its able Chairman Mr. MONTGOMERY and to the subcommittee and its able Chairman HARLEY STAGGERS.

For many years it has been one of my hopes that the Arlington National Cemetery continue to accommodate all veterans that have the right to be buried there. This piece of legislation, H.R. 88, would authorize the Secretary of the Army to set aside an appropriate area within Arlington National Cemetery for the unmarked burial of cremated remains. Not only will this help preserve the cemetery's natural beauty, but it will also keep it open for many years after all of the burial sites have been exhausted. The Army assisted in perfecting this bill, and endorses it.

This bill would not eliminate any area in Arlington National Cemetery that has been targeted for casketed remains or other cremated remains.

It would enhance and preserve the beauty of the landscape in the cemetery while serving as a distinguished resting place for our war veterans.

It is entirely voluntary for those who elect this type of burial.

It would prolong the life of the cemetery. It is anticipated that all in-ground plots will be exhausted by the year 2020 and the columbarium for cremated remains will be exhausted by 2029. At the present rate burials at the cemetery occur roughly 18 times a day. If this figure is multiplied by the number of days in the year, excluding holidays and weekends, the number of projected burials for the year 1989 alone would be approximately 4,462. My legislation would allow veterans to be buried there long after the plot space has been exhausted.

The Department of the Army, which oversees the cemetery, supports my legislation. In fact, it was the Army that took the bill that I had been introducing for many years and honed it into this particular proposal.

My bill is only an authorization to set aside a piece of land to be used for this purpose. It simply allows the Department of Army to take existing land that would otherwise not be used and make it a functional part of the cemetery.

Veterans would in no way be compelled or asked to be placed in this section of the cemetery. That is not my intention and it never has been. This is a choice that the veteran and his family would make without outside influence. I acknowledge that initially it may not be greatly utilized, but as years go by, I am sure that is usage will grow.

I have enjoyed substantial bipartisan support on this legislation. In fact, 79 of our colleagues have joined in cosponsoring this worthy legislation, about half of them Republicans, and about half Democrats. Also, three of our colleagues in the Senate have seen this bill and decided to introduce it is the Senate. My senior Senator, BOB GRAHAM, joined by Senator ALAN CRANSTON, the chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee, and Senator FRANK MURKOWSKI the ranking minority member of that committee, have introduced a companion bill, S. 1141. This is a very simple noncontroversial piece of legislation and I believe that it represents the best interests of the veterans of the United States and also the cemetery itself. As space in the cemetery begins to become more scarce there will be very few if any alternatives for veterans who have earned the right to be buried there. The cemetery's policy for burials is now very exclusive. I do not seek to change the present policy but this legislation does allow a greater opportunity for veterans to be buried at Arlington.

This can be made into a thing of great beauty—a memory garden with flowers and other landscaping, and other ways of making it beautiful. Personally, I would be honored to have my ashes buried along with my comrades in arms and in the wars of the past, and would seek this method of burial.

This legislation enjoys broad support in both the House and Senate, and I would very much like to see it passed during the Congress.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Let me mention these national cemeteries just for the information of my colleagues. We have 113 national cemeteries around the country. Over half of them are now closed, Mr. Speaker. There are no more plots left for the burial in these cemeteries, and of the 60 that we still have open, in the next few years, 10 to 12 of those will be filled.

So we do have a problem. We are on top of it. We have to take care of these veterans. In my opinion, a number of them should be buried in the national cemeteries.

What the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] has presented here today will help Members with our problem at Arlington National Cemetery at a very small cost to the Government. I certainly recommend my colleagues' support in this legislation.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 88.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM V. CHAPPELL, JR., VETERANS' OUTPATIENT CLINIC

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2594) to name the Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic located at 1900 Mason Avenue, Daytona Beach, FL, as the "William V. Chappell, Jr., Veterans' Outpatient Clinic."

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2594

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. NAME OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS OUTPATIENT CLINIC, DAYTONA BEACH, FLORIDA.

The Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic located at 1900 Mason Avenue, Daytona Beach, Florida, shall after the date of the enactment of this Act be known and designated as the "William V. Chappell, Jr., Veterans' Outpatient Clinic". Any reference to such outpatient clinic in any law, regulation, map, document, record, or other paper of the United States shall be considered to be a reference to the William V. Chappell, Jr., Veterans' Outpatient Clinic.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2594 would name the Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic located at Daytona Beach, FL, as the "William V. Chappell, Jr., Outpatient Clinic." The bill is cosponsored by the Florida congressional delegation. In addition, the chartered veterans organizations in Florida fully support the bill.

I want to thank my colleague from Florida, Mr. SHAW, and all members of the Florida delegation, for sponsoring the bill and for asking for its consideration in the House.

I appreciate the cooperation of the distinguished ranking minority member of our Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care, JOHN PAUL HAMMERSCHMIDT, for his support of this bill, and the other naming bills to follow.

Bill Chappell was a personal friend of mine and he was a veteran and a fighter for veterans. It is appropriate that the outpatient clinic at Daytona Beach bear his name, Mr. Speaker. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2594, a bill to name the outpatient veterans' clinic in Daytona Beach, FL, for William V. Chappell, Jr.

During his 20 years of service in the Congress, Bill Chappell was a strong advocate of benefits and services to veterans and their dependents.

Since he worked so diligently to establish this outpatient clinic in Daytona Beach, it is appropriate to name it after him. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the dean of the Florida delegation, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge the passage of this legislation to name the veterans' outpatient clinic at Daytona Beach for our former colleague, William V. Chappell, Jr. Bill Chappell was greatly loved here in Congress, and he left a great legacy of legislation of benefit to our Nation and his district. His contribution to the defense of our country included his service as a Navy air pilot in World War II and many years of legislative achievement in strengthening our military. He was also a tremendous supporter of veterans' rights and benefits. This tribute to his achievements has been richly earned, and I urge its prompt passage.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the prime sponsor of this legislation, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs and the ranking Republican for making today possible here on the House floor.

Bill Chappell himself was not only a great American, a great leader, a great Floridian, but he, of course, was a veteran. Shortly after his passing, I asked his wife, Jean, what would it be that she would like to see named after Bill in remembrance to the time that he spent in service to his congressional district and to his State and to his country. There was no question about it, there was no hesitation about it. She picked this clinic in Daytona Beach, knowing of his fondness and dedication to the matters pertaining to the U.S. veterans and the tremendous debt of gratitude that we have to these men and women who so ably served this country.

So it is indeed quite proper that we, today, name this particular facility after Bill. Of course, we all know that this facility is there largely because of the personal work put in by Bill Chappell. Bill not only served his country ably during World War II as an aviator, but continued in the service until 1983, when he retired with the rank of captain.

He was then serving in the House of Representatives on the powerful Committee on Appropriations, and I say, "powerful," because Bill Chappell did know politics, and he did know powerful politics. Anyone who gets into a skirmish with Bill Chappell certainly would find out that he had been in a skirmish, win, lose, or draw.

□ 1300

Mr. Speaker, I remember in some of the early days here in the Congress I, along with Buddy MacKay, sponsored a bill to deauthorize a cross-Florida barge canal. It was a project that Bill Chappell deeply believed in. It was not too much later that I found that a project that I liked very much had suddenly disappeared from an appropriations bill, and I went to Bill Chappell knowing or suspecting that he might have had something to do with it, and he looked at me, and he smiled, and he said, "I just wanted to get your attention," and he did because he was good at power politics.

Mr. Speaker, he knew how to play the game, but he was always a gentleman. Whether it was down in the Members' gym fighting karate, as a man in his midsixties, I can tell my colleagues that all the people down there participating in karate, as I did, knew that he was the most awesome opponent that we had. He was a mighty fighter, and he was a scrapper, and he loved to scrap, and he loved a good scrap. Afterward, after he could get in the biggest scrap in the world, whether it be on the floor, in the House gym, or anywhere else in the world, he had been glad to have a good laugh right afterward.

Mr. Speaker, he was a tremendous gentleman that graced this Hall, and I think that the United States is certainly better off for having him serve as many years as he did here in the Halls of Congress.

I would urge passage of my bill, and I thank all the members of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs for so expeditiously handling this piece of legislation which is so important to those of us on the Florida delegation and to his congressional district.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS], a member of the committee.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Speaker and the chairman and vice chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, of which I am a member, for giving us the opportunity to honor our late colleague, Bill Chappell.

Mr. Chappell was a native of Ocala, which is my hometown as well, so I feel a special need to say a few words about this man, whose dedication to the needs of veterans made the clinic in Daytona Beach a reality. Mr. Chappell was born, raised, and worked in Ocala, where he was an attorney, serving as a Marion County prosecuting attorney.

He was elected to serve in the Florida House of Representatives, and later became the speaker of that body.

I also came to know Bill personally, especially through members of his family in business in Ocala, where many of them still reside.

Bill Chappell was a dedicated public servant with a long history of effective leadership at both the State and Federal levels. He was also a great advocate of the needs of veterans in our growing State, and so it is particularly appropriate that we should honor him in this way. All the people of his hometown, and mine, Ocala, FL, should be pleased and proud that we have chosen to remember him in this way.

Again, thank you for allowing me to speak on this important piece of legislation.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. JAMES], also a member of the committee.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I fully support renaming the Daytona Beach VA Outpatient Clinic to the William V. Chappell, Jr., VA Outpatient Clinic.

Despite some philosophical differences, Bill Chappell and I had something in common. A desire to serve the people of the Fourth Congressional District of Florida. The products of his labor can be seen from one end of our district to the other. From the Canaveral National Seashore to the Ocala National Forest, Bill Chappell was a man dedicated to leaving his district, his State, and his Nation better off than he found it. A naval aviator during World War II and a member of the Naval Reserve for years. Bill dedicated his entire adult life to tireless service to his country.

His support and care for our Nation's security was unmatched. Congressman Chappell was an unwavering advocate of a strong national defense. He was a friend of the veterans. His knowledge and expertise in the area of military affairs was, perhaps, unparalleled in the U.S. House of Representatives.

I can think of no better way to salute a man who served his Nation so selflessly then by renaming the Daytona Beach Veterans' Outpatient Clinic in his honor. If actions speak louder than words, let this be our thank you.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2594, a bill to name the Veterans' Outpatient Clinic in Daytona Beach the "William V. Chappell, Jr., Veterans' Outpatient Clinic."

As a Member who had the privilege of serving in this body with Bill Chappell, it gives me great pleasure to support this measure, which honors Bill's memory in the most appropriate manner possible by associating it with an institution dedicated to serving Florida's veterans.

As he proved over and over again in his distinguished years in Congress, the well-being of the veterans of Florida was a priority second to none.

His dedication and hard work resulted in hundreds of thousands of Florida's veterans receiving the type of health care which they deserve.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee, Bill kept a watchful eye to ensure that Florida received its fair share of resources to aid its rapidly growing veterans population.

Mr. Speaker, although his work may not always have been high profile, the rest of the delegation always knew it was there. I had the pleasure of knowing Bill Chappell long before I came to the House of Representatives here in the Congress, and I know that as Speaker of the Florida House he was known as one of the most progressive members, and he also was known as a progressive member particularly in the area of armed services and for the veterans here in this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, he did not know the division of the aisles in this Congress. He worked with both Republicans and Democrats, Members on both sides of the aisle, in their interests and particularly with the new Members.

Bill was a sincere friend, and in closing I would like to thank my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] for introducing this bill, and I look forward to seeing this clinic named after my friend and colleague, Bill Chappell.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, Bill Chappell really loved this House, and he really added so much, as mentioned by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS]. He really understood the weapons systems. He was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations responsible for procurement of the weapons systems, and he was so helpful to us so that we can continue to have a strong military defense.

Mr. Speaker, we will all miss him. I am proud that we can submit this legislation to the full House.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, today we have the opportunity to honor our former colleague, the Representative Bill Chappell, in a manner truly consistent with the history of his contributions to our Nation. Bill Chappell was best known for his position as the chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, and for his knowledge of those critical issues under his subcommittee's jurisdiction.

Today, the House will consider H.R. 2594, which would name the Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic in Daytona Beach, FL, the William V. Chappell, Jr., Veterans' Outpatient Clinic. For those of us who had the pleasure of serving alongside Bill, this is our chance to acknowledge his contribution to a very special population, and I was pleased to join in cosponsoring this legislation.

As a member of the Florida State Legislature for 12 years, and a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives for 20, Bill had a unique understanding of Florida's veteran population. As a veteran of World War II, he was well aware of the need for greater access to health care for our Nation's veterans and was instrumental in establishing the Daytona Beach Veterans' Outpatient Clinic.

Bill Chappell's dedication to veterans is exemplified by the Daytona Beach Veterans' Outpatient Clinic. For this reason, I urge our colleagues in the House to join me in voting for H.R. 2594 to pay a lasting tribute to a strong patriot and an effective Congressman, the late Bill Chappell.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, today the House will consider H.R. 2594 which will name the Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic in Daytona Beach, FL, after the late Congressman Bill Chappell. Bill Chappell lost his battle with bone cancer on March 30, 1989, at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, MD, and was buried on April 4 in Ocala, FL.

While our former colleague may not have left office as he had envisioned, he had a very long and distinguished career. For the last 20 years, Bill Chappell represented the good people of the Fourth District of Florida as a Member of the House of Representatives. And prior to that, Bill served the people of Florida as a member of the Florida House and was its speaker from 1961 to 1963.

As a Navy aviator and member of the Navy Reserves until 1983, Bill Chappell believed in a strong defense. And naturally, a strong defense necessitates a commitment to those who serve in defense of this great Nation—America's veterans. Therefore, it is appropriate that today we name the VA outpatient clinic in Daytona Beach after our former colleague, Bill Chappell, who worked so diligently on behalf of every soldier, sailor, airman, and marine defending our Nation.

With the passage of this legislation, Bill Chappell's legacy will be remembered by all.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation which I have cosponsored to name the Veterans Affairs' outpatient clinic at Daytona Beach, FL, as the William V. Chappell, Jr., Outpatient Clinic in honor of our distinguished former colleague.

Also, I want to commend my friend and colleague from Florida, CLAY SHAW, for his leadership in introducing and bringing before the House today this legislation.

The fact is that if it were not for the work of Bill Chappell, there would be no outpatient clinic for Florida's veterans in Daytona Beach. Through my service as a member of the House Appropriations Subcommittee with jurisdiction over veterans programs, I worked with Bill Chappell on this project and know of his tireless efforts to see this project completed.

Throughout his 20 years in the House, there was no more ardent champion for our Nation's veterans than Bill Chappell—who was a veteran himself. There also was no stronger voice for a strong national defense. I know because I have the distinct privilege to serve on the Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense which he chaired.

Bill Chappell served the people of Florida with uncommon vigor, first as a State legislator for 16 years, and then as a Member of the House for 20 years. The outpatient clinic at Daytona Beach is just one of hundreds of projects he saw through to a successful completion. It was an honor to have served with Bill Chappell in both the Florida State Legislature and the U.S. House of Representatives and I would urge my colleagues to support this most fitting tribute to his life of dedicated service to our Nation's veterans and to the people of the Fourth Congressional District of Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2594, the bill to name the Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic in Daytona Beach, FL, the "William V. Chappell, Jr., Veterans' Outpatient Clinic." Each day this veterans clinic serves the needs of Americans who fought and sacrificed for their Nation. It would indeed be a fitting memorial to a man who dedicated his life to public service.

After a 5 year stint in the Navy active reserve, Bill went on to the University of Florida, gaining his B.A. in 1947 and his LL.B in 1949. In 1955, he entered another area of public service by winning a seat in the Florida State House, the body in which he served as Speaker from 1961 to 1963. After returning to the University of Florida to get his J.D., Bill won another term to the State house in 1967.

After serving in the Florida House for 10 years, Bill believed he could represent the people he cared so much about at the national level and won a seat in the House of Representatives in 1968, a seat he held for ten terms. While in Congress, Bill chose to be a behind the scenes consensus builder, leaving the headlines for others while tirelessly working in the subcommittee rooms to make sure that the work got done. As chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, he fought to ensure that the security of this country was never compromised.

Throughout his legislative career, Bill Chappell constantly pushed for the programs he believed would be in the Nation's best interests. In the process, he earned the lasting respect of both his peers and constituents. It is with great pleasure that I support this bill and urge its prompt enactment.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2594.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTER

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2987) to name the Department of Veterans Affairs medical center in Leavenworth, KS, as the "Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center."

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2987

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. NAME OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTER, LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS.

The Department of Veterans Affairs medical center in Leavenworth, Kansas, shall after the date of the enactment of this Act be known and designated as the "Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center". Any reference to such medical center in any law, regulation, map, document, record, or other paper of the United States shall be considered to be a reference to the Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2987 would name the VA Medical Center in Leavenworth, KS, for former President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The bill has been cosponsored by the entire Kansas delegation and is endorsed by the chartered veterans organizations in the State.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY], the chief cosponsor of the bill.

□ 1310

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank the chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP] and all the members of the Veterans' Affairs Committee for their support in bringing this legislation to the floor today. I appreciate their assistance.

As a Kansan and as a member of the Dwight D. Eisenhower Centennial Commission, I was pleased to introduce this legislation before us, naming the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Leavenworth, KS, the "Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center."

President Eisenhower had strong ties to Kansas and to the city of Leavenworth, where its veterans' hospital is located. He spent his boyhood years in Abilene, KS, and decided to construct the Eisenhower Presidential Library in his hometown. He later graduated from the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth in 1926.

President Eisenhower had a special bond with veterans. As Supreme Allied Commander in World War II, he was well aware of the sacrifices and hardships his troops experienced.

Later, as a Presidential candidate in 1952, he eloquently reminded veterans why they sacrificed so much and fought so hard when he spoke to them, not as a General, but as he put it, "Comrades-in-arms."

President Eisenhower said:

While we were overseas, whether we came from a crossroads village, a town, or a city or from a farm, we all carried with us a very real and intimate picture of America. It was that small, familiar part of America that we called home. That was what we were fighting for.

He also said it is important for Americans "to acknowledge our debt to those who paid so large a share of freedom's price."

President Eisenhower did not forget veterans, and naming a veterans' hospital after him would acknowledge the special bond this extraordinary soldier, President, and American had with those who proudly served their country.

Veterans' organizations across the country have endorsed this legislation, and so has the entire Kansas congressional delegation.

Enactment of this legislation this year will allow the rededication of the medical center to be included in the Kansas Eisenhower Centennial Commission's "kickoff" ceremony on January 26, 1990, at the State capital in Topeka.

I am pleased that the House is considering this important legislation. President Eisenhower honored this country with distinguished service in the military and in the White House. It is appropriate that we honor him on the eve of his 100th birthday.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the committee chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP] and all the members of the Veterans' Affairs Committee for bringing this legislation to the floor in such a timely manner.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in supporting H.R. 2987, a bill to name the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center at Leavenworth, KS, after our 34th President, Dwight D. Eisenhower.

This legislation has my wholehearted endorsement, and I recommend it to my colleagues for passage.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that Dwight David Eisenhower gave as much to this country as anyone who ever lived in this country. He led our military forces during its darkest hour in World War II, and he served the Nation with great distinction as our 34th President.

I know the gentleman on the minority side and myself were proud to serve under General Eisenhower during World War II. I wish there were more of us around who served in World War II, Mr. Speaker, but that is the way it goes. He was a great Commander and was a wonderful President.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this bill.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 2987, legislation to rename the Leavenworth Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in honor of Dwight D. Eisenhower. It is fitting that the Kansas veterans' center be named for our 34th President, who grew up in Abilene, KA, and later graduated first in his class at the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, KA.

President Eisenhower will be long remembered as the most important military figure of World War II and one of the most popular and influential statesman in American history. Ike, as he was affectionately known to millions, won his Presidential elections in 1952 and 1956 by record margins.

President Eisenhower, who attained the status of General of the Army, once described his "fundamental life purpose—the protection and perpetuation of basic human freedom." His timeless message of peace and freedom, and his famous "Atoms for Peace" plan, are as well suited to world affairs today as they were in the 1950's.

President Eisenhower believed that all Americans should participate in our government. On Lincoln's Birthday in 1954, Ike told a crowd of thousands that "politics ought to be the part-time profession of every citizen who would protect the rights and privileges of free people and who would preserve what is good and fruitful in our national heritage." On another occasion, the President stated that "people, in the long run, are going to do more to promote peace than our governments. Indeed, I think that people want peace so much that one of these days government had better get out of the way and let them have it."

I hope that the naming of the veterans' medical center in Ike's hometown will encourage Americans everywhere to consider his lasting message.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2987.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENE TAYLOR VETERANS' OUTPATIENT CLINIC

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2983) to name the new Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic in Mount Vernon, MO, as the "Gene Taylor Veterans' Outpatient Clinic".

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2983

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. NAME OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS OUTPATIENT CLINIC, MOUNT VERNON, MISSOURI.

The Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic in Mount Vernon, Missouri, shall be known and designated as the "Gene Taylor Veterans' Outpatient Clinic". Any reference to such outpatient clinic in any law, regulation, map, document, record, or other paper of the United States shall be considered to be a reference to the Gene Taylor Veterans' Outpatient Clinic.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2983 would name the new VA outpatient clinic in Mount Vernon, MO, for our former colleagues, Gene Taylor. The chief sponsor of the bill is the distinguished ranking minority member of our Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT]. The bill is cosponsored by the entire Missouri delegation. The bill is also strongly supported by the Missouri veterans organizations as well.

Our former colleague, Gene Taylor, is well-deserving of the honor we seek today, and I will defer to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] for further remarks about him.

As far as I can recall over the years that I served with Gene Taylor, he never did do anything to hurt veterans in any way, and he totally supported our veterans legislation. I think this is well-deserving.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT].

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge the support of my colleagues on H.R. 2983, a bill to designate the veterans' outpatient clinic in Mount Vernon, MO, as the Gene Taylor Veterans' Outpatient Clinic. I want to take this opportunity to thank our distinguished chairman, Mr. MONTGOMERY, and our ranking member, Mr. STUMP for assisting me in bringing this bill before the House in an expeditious manner.

Mr. Speaker, it might be presumptuous of me to make this statement but it's my belief that every Member of this House who knew and served with Gene Taylor—loved and respected and appreciated Gene Taylor. He is quite a guy.

He served the Seventh District of Missouri from the 93d Congress until his retirement last year. During his 16-year tenure he served on the Public Works Committee, the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and the Rules Committee. He served his constituents in an exemplary manner and his career in the House of Representatives was most distinguished.

Mr. Taylor, as a very active Congressman, was a strong supporter of our Nation's veterans and his voting record consistently reflected his concern for their well-being. He was committed to improving benefits and services for them and their dependents and to ensuring that DVA hospitals were adequately staffed.

Prior to his retirement, he worked tirelessly both with the Department of Veterans Affairs and with his local veterans to bring about the very outpatient clinic we are attempting to name for him.

In fact, I can accurately say, that his efforts were instrumental in making this particular clinic a reality. Mr. Taylor not only recognized the need for a DVA outpatient clinic to serve the veterans of Missouri, but he acted on that realization.

We have the support of all the members of the Missouri delegation as well as the Missouri veterans service organizations, so I recommend that we act favorably on this bill.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in supporting H.R. 2983, a bill to name the DVA outpatient clinic in Mount Vernon, MO, after our friend and former colleague, Gene Taylor.

Knowing of the needs of the veterans in Gene's home State and his efforts to establish this clinic to address those needs, it is fitting that it should bear his name.

I wholeheartedly support H.R. 2983 and urge its immediate passage.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly urge my colleagues to support this legislation in regard to our former colleague, Gene Taylor.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize my colleague from Arkansas, Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT, for his work on this bill. I know he and Gene Taylor are good friends, and that has certainly been evident by his effort on this bill.

While many Members of this body developed close working relationships and friendships with Gene Taylor during his 16 years in the House of Representatives, I did not have the privilege of serving with him. However, I do have the distinct honor of replacing Gene Taylor as the representative from the Seventh District of Missouri. I should say that I use the word replace guardedly. Gene left some pretty big shoes for me to fill and only time will tell how well I perform in that endeavor.

The legislation we are debating on the Suspension Calendar today, H.R. 2983, would name the veterans' outpatient clinic in Mt. Vernon, MO, after Gene Taylor. It is a testament to the respect held on both sides of the aisle for Gene that only 20 veteran's hospitals have been named for individuals since 1945. It is fitting that this center be named for Gene Taylor because, without his continual support, this facility would never have been funded.

Scheduled to open on Veterans Day this year, the Gene Taylor Veteran's Outpatient Clinic will be the primary medical facility for the more than 70,000 veterans in southwest Missouri. It should not go unnoticed that it is located just 20 miles from Gene Taylor's hometown of Sarcoxie. The importance of this new facility and the convenience it will provide to the veterans in southwest Missouri should not be underestimated. Given the statements made here today and the action we are taking here today, Gene Taylor's contributions to our country and the respect with which he is held are not being underestimated.

In conclusion, I wholeheartedly support this measure as a tribute to a man who dedicated many years of service to the fine citizens of southwest Missouri.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2983.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Personnel and Compensation, I rise in support of H.R. 1358, the Montgomery GI bill amendments. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] has previously noted, the Armed Services and Veterans' Affairs Committee share jurisdiction over the Montgomery GI bill. H.R. 1358 was, therefore, jointly referred to the two committees.

The Veterans' Affairs Committee acted first, reporting this legislation in late May. The Armed Services Committee made two changes.

First, we deleted section 2 of H.R. 1358 and included it instead—with modification—in this year's Defense authorization bill. Section 2 of the legislation, as reported by the VA Committee, would have expanded the program of education covered by the Reserve portion of the Montgomery GI bill to include vocational-technical training and graduate study. Because of budget constraints, we approved only the vocational-technical training portion in the authorization bill. That's one of the many differences between the House and Senate we are working to resolve in the current conference, which meets again at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Second, we included two additional technical amendments identified by the Veterans' Affairs Committee staff subsequent to their markup.

As previously noted by the distinguished chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, all of the provisions dealing with the Montgomery GI bill are technical in nature, correcting oversights or problems not foreseen at the time the legislation was originally written. In the interest of time, I will not describe them again but will, of course, be pleased to respond to any questions.

H.R. 1358 results in no added costs to the Department of Defense but makes several important technical improvements to the operation of the Montgomery GI bill. I urge my colleagues' strong support.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1358, as amended.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY], and also the ranking member, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], for their excellent leadership in bringing this bill before us today; and also the chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], for his overall success with the Montgomery GI bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is one of the strongest recruitment and retention tools the armed services has today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the 40 minutes time be divided equally between the Veterans' Affairs Committee and the Armed Services Committee. Both committees handled this legislation, and I am asking that the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BYRON] be recognized for 10 minutes and that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BATEMAN] be recognized for 10 minutes of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] will be recognized for 10 minutes, and as the Chair understands it, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BYRON] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. That is correct, Mr. Speaker, but 10 minutes each will be allotted to the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair assumes that is acceptable.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, on May 25, 1989, the Veterans' Affairs Committee reported H.R. 1358, as amended, a bill designed to enhance the effectiveness of education programs administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs. Because the bill was jointly referred, it was then considered and amended by the Armed Services Committee and reported by them on September 26.

The major provisions of H.R. 1358, as amended, would:

First, provide that the 10-year delimiting date for use of certain veterans' educational assistance benefits would commence from the last discharge from active duty of at least 90 continuous days.

Second, bar receipt of benefits for VEAP and new GI bill—Selected Reserve based on the same period of service.

Third, permit active duty new GI bill participants to meet their secondary school diploma requirements by seccessfully completing the equivalent of 12 semester hours in a program of education leading to a standard college degree.

Fourth, increase by 5 percent the rate of subsistence allowance for service-connected disabled veterans participating in a rehabilitation program under Chapter 31 of title 38.

Fifth, increase by 5 percent the rate of educational assistance allowance for survivors and dependents of service-connected disabled veterans pursuing a program of education under Chapter 35 of title 38.

Sixth, extend eligibility for Vietnam era GI bill benefits to 1977 and 1978 graduates of the service academies and 1978 Senior Reserve Officer Training Corps graduates.

Seventh, provide for the use of readjustment benefit account funds to carry out activities in connection with State approving agencies.

It should be noted that, when approved by the Veterans' Affairs Committee, H.R. 1358 would have expanded the program of education authorized under the new GI bill—Selected Reserve to include vocational-technical and graduate training. This provision, which was amended by the Armed Services Committee to exclude graduate training, was deleted from H.R. 1358 and included in this year's Defense authorization bill, H.R. 2461. This bill was approved by the House on July 27 and is now in conference.

As my colleagues will note, many of the provisions of H.R. 1358, as amended, are fairly technical but important to the efficient administration of veterans' education programs.

I want to commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment, TIM PENNY, and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, CHRIS SMITH, and all members of the subcommittee for developing this legislation. Tim isn't with us today because he's on his way back from a Hunger Committee trip to Central America where they've been looking at child survival activities and the political situation in Nicaragua, especially the upcoming elections. I am also grateful for the support and cooperation of the ranking minority member of the full committee, my good friend, BOB STUMP.

I also want to thank the chairman of the Armed Services Subcommittee on Military Personnel and Compensation, BEVERLY BYRON, and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, HERB BATEMAN, for their assistance. Most of the legislation affecting the new GI bill is jointly referred to the Veterans' Affairs Committee and the Armed Services Committee. I serve on both, and BEVERLY and HERB have always been very helpful in moving these bills. The cooperation between the two committees couldn't be better, and I am grateful to them for that.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, as the ranking minority member of the Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Education, Training, and Employment, I rise in support of H.R. 1358, as amended. H.R. 1358 makes adjustments in VA education programs and clarifies rules of participation in these programs.

Chairman MONTGOMERY has outlined the various provisions of the bill. As he has explained, the bill would help to eliminate potential abuses of VA benefits, it simplifies program requirements, and updates benefit amounts under the vocational rehabilitation program.

Oversight hearings held by our subcommittee earlier this year revealed that some clarification of VA education programs was necesssary in order to reinforce the intent of the programs and to facilitate the veteran in achieving his or her educational goal. H.R. 1358 was drafted in response to these suggestions and will, I believe, improve the programs for both the veteran and the VA.

Originally, provisions in H.R. 1358 would also have provided vocational-technical and graduate training for Montgomery GI bill Selected Guard and Reserve participants. During consideration of the bill in the Armed Services Committee, the provision was amended to exclude graduate training and later attached to the Defense Authorization bill. Benefits for vocational-technical training did receive considerable support during our subcommittee's hearings so I would like to strongly urge Members now conferencing the Defense Authorization bill to support the provision.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Training, and Employment, TIM PENNY, and the distinguished Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the full Committee, SONNY MONTGOMERY and BOB STUMP, for their leadership and cooperation while working on H.R. 1358.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1358 is a good bill and one that is essential in order to successfully administer VA education programs. I urge my colleagues to support the measure.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as the ranking Republican member of the Subcommittee on Military Personnel and Compensation, I am pleased to support H.R. 1358, as reported by the Committee on Armed Services.

In the interest of time, let me say that I fully concur with the previous statements of my Armed Services Committee colleagues—the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentlewoman from Maryland—regarding H.R. 1358.

The Armed Services Committee addressed the major provision of the original legislation—the expanded program of education for the Reserve portion of the Montgomery GI bill—in the Defense authorization bill. The remaining provisions are basically technical in nature and result in no added cost to the Department of Defense. I would urge my colleagues' approval of H.R. 1358.

□ 1330

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my commendation to the gentlewoman from Maryland, chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Personnel and Compensation of the Armed Services Committee, as well as the ranking member of the Subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BATEMAN] for their leadership in directing this bill from the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further request for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further request for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to publicly thank the gentlewoman from Maryland, Mrs. BEVERLY BYRON, who is the chairman of the subcommittee who handles this legislation, as well as the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. HERB BATEMAN, and the gentleman from Arizona, Mr. BOB STUMP, for their support, as well as the rest of the Members on both the Armed Services and Veteran Affairs committees for the support they have given to this legislation over the years. The newest GI bill has been in effect, Mr. Speaker, since July 1, 1985, when it replaced the VEAP program. The new program includes the active service forces and the reserve forces.

We have been told by the Chiefs of the military services that the best recruiting tool the military now has, better than bonuses, is this peacetime GI bill. It has been a great incentive to attract some of the finest young men and women that we have ever had in to the Armed Forces, and I have been involved in military matters for over 45 years. We are now getting the active forces, as well as the Reserve and the National Guard, the finest young men and young women that I have ever seen in the military.

The most important part, though, is not that it is a good, helpful recruiting tool, but that this educational assistance program gives many young men and young women, who probably could not afford to get a college education or post-secondary education, the opportunity to continue their education. The benefits under the peacetime, GI bill extend not only to the active forces but, as I said, to members of the National Guard and Reserve as well.

Let me also give some statistics about how well this legislation is doing since it came into effect in July of 1985. By February or March of 1990, over 1 million young men and women, which includes active as well as reserve personnel, will have signed up for this educational benefit. In the next 2 or 3 years, these young people will be going to colleges and vocational-technical schools all over the country. It is my opinion that over 10 percent of the enrollment in all of our colleges and training institutions in the next 2 or 3 years will be under this educational benefit that we are talking about today.

Let me also say that active duty program participants have to agree to a basic pay reduction of $100 a month for 12 months to get into this program.

As a result of this pay reduction, over $767 million has reverted to the Treasury. That does not include interest on that money. The program has only paid out $40 million of that $760 million brought in. In the next few years, of course, we want these soldiers to use this benefit, and that will reduce this amount drastically, and that is good. These young men and women will be getting an education.

The bottom line is the program is working well, and I hope my colleagues will support this legislation.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, these bills bring us close at least to completing our committee's legislative initiatives for this session. As always, the chairman has addressed them in a very timely manner, and I would like to commend my good friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SONNY MONTGOMERY, for his bipartisan leadership, and I want him to know that we enjoy working with him and other members of the committee on behalf of our Nation's veterans.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my very special thanks to the great staff we have on both sides of the aisle on this Veterans' Affairs Committee.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I thank the gentleman from Arizona and I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, let me say that some of the issues the Veterans' Affairs Committee deals with are joint issues with the Armed Services Committee, and it is a great pleasure to work with the general from our perspective on the Armed Services Committee. We have our disagreements every now and then, but we never let them out in public. We take care of them at home. To watch the outgrowth of this GI bill and the impact that it has had on the young people that we have today in the service, I am just convinced that one of the reasons for the quality of the young people we have today in uniform is because of the educational benefits that are there for them when they take off that uniform. So, Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I thank the gentlewoman from Maryland. She has been a part of the legislation, and it was all of us pitching in and working together. We had to give and take, but we work very well together.

I agree with what the gentleman from Arizona, Mr. BOB STUMP, has said about our staff. The staff has been tremendous. We do hope we do not have to bring up many more bills this year, but the leadership of the House has been most helpful.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my good friend and colleague, the chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, SONNY MONTGOMERY and the ranking Republican, BOB STUMP, on the excellent job they have done in support of all the men and women who have proudly served this great Nation of ours. I am especially pleased to support H.R. 1358, the Montgomery GI bill amendments Act. Section four of this bill contains a provision which restores educational benefits under the Vietnam-era GI bill to the 1977 and 1978 service academy and ROTC graduates. This is an issue I raised in the 100th Congress and am thankful that it is nearly resolved for these deserving veterans.

These veterans made binding active duty commitments while the Vietnam-era GI bill was being offered as an inducement to active service. Due to an oversight, the 1976 legislation failed to grandfather these service members along with other delayed entry service members.

I would like to take a moment and reiterate the necessity of this particular legislation. Members of the service academy classes of 1977 and 1978 were retroactively excluded from the Vietnam-era GI bill eligibility through inadvertence—even though they had committed to 7 years of active duty prior to the December 31, 1976 cutoff date.

When this situation was brought to my attention in 1987, I was astonished that such an obvious oversight had not yet been corrected. As a result, I authored H.R. 3485 which had more than 50 of our colleagues for cosponsors and enjoyed the active support of the major veterans' organizations.

It is important to note that the Academy graduates have always been considered eligible for veterans' educational benefits. It is not the time served at the academies that qualified the graduates for the GI bill, but rather the active duty performed after graduation.

Although Academy cadets and midshipmen incur their active duty obligation when they commence their third academic year, our colleagues in 1976 failed to address the issue of academy service members who had already obligated themselves to active duty upon graduation. The 1976 legislation simply does not refer to the service academy cadets and midshipmen. Given the obligation incurred by enrolling in the third academic year, these cadets and midshipmen should have been included in the "grandfather clause" of the 1976 law.

It was the clear intent of the 94th Congress that all those who signed contracts prior to December 31, 1976 with the expectation of the GI bill were to be covered by those benefits. This intent was spelled out most clearly by the then chairman of the House Veterans' Subcommittee on Educational Benefits, Olin Teague, who stated during floor debate that:

Nobody in the service today is affected. It only affects those going the first of January or thereafter. If a conflict develops, * * * Congress would immediately pass another bill.

The definition of active duty included anyone who had committed to active duty prior to the December 31 deadline, although actual service did not begin until after that date.

In short, the classes of 1977 and 1978 deserve the entire package of benefits that were offered at the time they made their commitments to serve their country. The current inequality is highlighted by the fact that others in similar situations, such as 1977 ROTC graduates, delayed entry participants, and academy classmates who attended a service academy prep school are now eligible for those benefits.

It was unfortunate that there was insufficient time last Congress to fully address the issue of those deserving veterans. The Senate passed S. 2383, which was similar to the House-passed H.R. 3045, but contained a number of minor differences. One difference was the manner in which the issue of service academy graduates was treated. The most contentious difference would have required proof of participation in the Veterans' Educational Assistance Program [VEAP] in order to receive eligibility. While many Academy graduates took advantage of VEAP, whereby service members invested up to $2,700 in order to recoup two-for-one educational benefits when they attended school later on, quite a few simply could not afford this cash investment. Others, on advice of counsel, did not sign up for VEAP in fear that this would compromise any future claim to GI bill eligibility.

Mr. Speaker, since the intent of Congress was clearly to protect the existing benefits of those in, or committed to, the Armed Services, as of December 31, 1976, the Academy classes of 1977 and 1978 should clearly be included. I wholeheartedly endorse H.R. 1358 and once again commend Chairman MONTGOMERY and the Veterans' Committee staff on their steadfast support of my effort to rectify the inadvertent and unfortunate inequity to this small number of deserving veterans.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the privilege to express my views.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1358, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The net increase above the amount proposed by the Senate includes increases of $125,000 for forest management; $150,000 for project planning, and $375,000 for the Oregon/Washington reparian initiative, both in grazing management; $250,000 for Colorado River salinity control in soil, water, and air management; and $372,000 for resources management planning; and decreases of $28,000 for noxious weed control in Idaho, $75,000 for noxious weed control in Montana, $50,000 for research and development on fire resistant grasses at the University of Idaho, $73,000 for grazing monitoring in Idaho, $150,000 for riparian monitoring in Idaho, and $50,000 for greenstripping in Idaho, all under grazing management; and $500,000 for endangered species in wildlife habitat management.

The managers agree that:

1. modest cost-shared challenge grant programs modelled on the wildlife challenge grant program should be initiated in recreation and cultural resources management programs;

2. in the wild horse and burro program fee waiver adoptions should remain suspended, the regular adoption program should be expanded, a third sanctuary should be established if necessary, and although geographic diversity is still a key sanctuary criterion, it is not intended to preclude sponsors from operating more than one sanctuary;

3. the Bureau should continue its participation in the Experimental Stewardship Program;

4. the Bureau should integrate Alaska into field testing of the automated land and mineral records system (ALMRS);

5. of the funds provided for wilderness management no less than $2,700,000 should be applied to the management of wilderness study areas; and

6. within the total funds for recreation resources management $300,000 is available for the study described in House Report 101-120 concerning a possible National Recreation Area on the American River in California.

The recommended amounts provide for payment of 1990 firefighting costs as well as repayment of 1989 costs.

Amendment No. 5: Earmarks $16,250,000 for United States Fish and Wildlife Service firefighting activities as proposed by the Senate instead of $2,800,000 as proposed by the House. The recommended amount provides for payment of 1990 firefighting costs as well as repayment of 1989 costs.

Amendment No. 6: Earmarks $34,464,000 for National Park Service firefighting activities as proposed by the Senate instead of $21,319,000 as proposed by the House. The recommended amount provides for payment of 1990 firefighting costs as well as repayment of 1989 costs.

Amendment No. 7: Deletes House earmark of $552,533,000 for the Forest Service as proposed by the Senate. Forest Service firefighting costs are included in a separate account.

The Managers have rejected report language proposed by the Senate requiring the Service to hire local professors and students without advertising vacancies. The Service may continue to engage students and professors under its existing cooperative agreement.

The managers agree that:

1. technical assistance only is provided for habitat conservation plans in Kern, San Diego and Riverside Counties in California. Local communities are expected to contribute to the effort. No specific amount is earmarked for each individual area;

2. endangered species recovery includes the activities listed in the House and Senate reports except that no money is provided for Cheyenne Bottoms in the endangered species recovery program;

The managers have included $3,750,000 for repairs to the Maxent Lagoon Levee at Bayou Sauvage NWR, Louisiana. The actual construction cost could be twice this amount. The Service is to seek full funding for reconstruction of the levee from other sources. Until full funding is attained, no funds should be expended for land acquisition to establish the refuge. If this approach proves unworkable, the Service should propose by May 1, 1990 other uses for the previously appropriated land acquisition monies and the $3,750,000 in construction funds contained in this bill.

The allowance includes $4,900,000 for construction of a national training center near Harpers Ferry, West Virginia. Approximately $2,900,000 of this amount is for design of the facility. The Service should consider design options which would permit use of the Center to meet the fish and wildlife training needs of other Federal and State agencies, as well as private organizations on a reimbursable basis. The design concept should include aquatic education, as well as a fresh water aquarium for public visitation. When the project design has reached the 35% completion stage, the Service should report to the Committees on the pros and cons of including a public aquarium as well as the potential for offsetting the cost of such an aquarium through outside donations, user fees, or other means.

The managers agree that:

1. the Fish and Wildlife Service is to prepare a report on the building needs at the Brazoria NWR, TX to include an analysis of site availability and cost estimates to be submitted to the Committees no later than March 1, 1990;

2. unobligated balances from the construction of the Northeast Anadromous Fish Laboratory may be used to acquire equipment and furnishings which are necessary for the laboratory and which are consistent with the original plan for the facility;

3. the Fish and Wildlife Service is to work with the Department of Defense for joint funding of the Lake Elmer Thomas Dam;

4. the National Wetlands Research Center may be constructed on lands leased from the University of Southwestern Louisiana on a long-term basis with the understanding that access roads and utilities will be provided by sources other than the Fish and Wildlife Service;

5. innovative and cost effective techniques should be used in the construction associated with erosion control at Eastern Neck Wildlife Refuge, MD, including the use of the Maryland National Guard if appropriate;

6. funds provided for the Stewart McKinney NWR, CT are for a maintenance/headquarters facility;

7. the Service is to report to the Committees regarding the concept for the Homer Research & Maintenance Facility before May 1, 1990;

8. the $900,000 for construction at Alligator River NWR, NC is for a shop and service facility;

9. the $1,640,000 for Cheyenne Bottoms, KS is a one time only appropriation;

10. the striped bass study should emphasize the Chesapeake Bay; and

11. a total of $500,000 is provided to initiate a joint administrative facility with the National Park Service on the site of the Kenai NWR, AK visitor center; and, of this amount, $280,000 shall be provided by the National Park Service.

Amendment No. 14: Provides $1,800,000 for the Anadromous Fish Conservation Act instead of $2,000,000 as provided by the House and $1,500,000 as proposed by the Senate. This amount includes $300,000 for the striped bass study.

LAND ACQUISITION

Amendment No. 15: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which appropriates $67,990,000 for land acquisition instead of $65,790,000 as proposed by the House and $52,810,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Stone Lakes NWR, CA	100,000
Tensas NWR, LA	200,000
Total, land acquisition	67,990,000

Although the managers have not provided any funds for the Animas Mountains NWR, NM (Gray Ranch), there is strong interest in this area being in Federal ownership. When mineral rights, grazing and hunting questions have been resolved, the managers will give every consideration to providing appropriations.

The managers agree that:

1. the Service should examine alternatives to fee acquisition to protect sea turtles at the Archie Carr NWR, FL and should work with individual landowners to establish acquisition priorities where there is no alternative to fee acquisition and report to the Committees by May 1, 1990;

2. within the $11,000,000 for high priority wetlands is $2,000,000 for the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation;

3. acquisition at Lake Thompson NWR, SD may come from the amount provided for high priority wetlands;

4. the $100,000 provided for the Stones Lake NWR, CA is for the Service, in cooperation with the relevant State, county and local governments, to complete an assessment and provide a recommendation for the establishment of the refuge;

5. The Service is encouraged to use the high priority wetlands money for areas such as Bond Swamp NWR, GA; and

6. the Service should return to an active land acquisition program at Tensas NWR with funds that are to be restored from the firefighting account.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net increase to the amount provided by the House includes increases of $800,000 for new or expanding park areas, $125,000 for the Student Conservation Association, $400,000 for the National Trails System, $2,164,000 for park operations, $150,000 for the Harpers Ferry NHP visitor transportation system, $500,000 for drug operations, $85,000 for Harpers Ferry police, $241,000 for additional costs associated with lease of a helicopter, $500,000 for acceleration of review of Alaska mining and minerals, $500,000 for protection of archeological resources to prevent looting, $250,000 for informational publications, $200,000 for the Native Hawaiian Culture and Arts program, $1,000,000 for Fisk University, $175,000 for a Wheeling, WV commission, and $200,000 for the Steel Industry Heritage Task Force; and decreases of $240,000 for emergency storm and fire damage, $500,000 for in-park management and administration, $75,000 for Navy Memorial operations, $263,000 for artifact preservation and collection management, $20,000 for the International Union for Conservation of Nature, $1,927,000 in additional retirement system costs, and $25,000 related to the Blackstone River Corridor Commission.

The managers agree that:

1. each park should receive no less than a five percent increase over fiscal year 1989 while capping the increase for individual parks at fifteen percent for all but new or expanding parks;

15. of the $1,800,000 provided for the Native Hawaiian Culture and Arts program, $1,000,000 is for the Hawaii Maritime Museum; and

The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which appropriates $16,136,000 for national recreation and preservation instead of $16,029,000 as proposed by the House and $15,735,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net increase above the House level includes increases of $135,000 for Allegheny County, PA HAER activities, $100,000 for a historic preservation technology transfer program, $100,000 for the Steel Industry Heritage Task Force, $25,000 for the Carrie Furnaces/Homestead Works, and $75,000 for Allegheny, Beaver, Washington and Green counties reconnaissance; and decreases of $28,000 for Chicago landmarks and $300,000 in the Rivers review activity.

Funds for Gettysburg, PA technical assistance are provided in the construction account.

HISTORIC PRESERVATION FUND

Amendment No. 24: Appropriates $32,750,000 for the Historic Preservation Fund instead of $30,500,000 as proposed by the House and $38,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The increase above the House level includes $1,000,000 for the final year of the Bicentennial Lighthouse Fund, $1,000,000 for State grants and $250,000 for the National Trust for Historic Preservation. Within the amount provided for State grant is $500,000 for grants to tribes pursuant to 16 USC 470a(d)(3)(B). Such grants are not subject to the matching requirements contained in 16 USC 470b(a)(3).

Amendment No. 25: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides $1,000,000 for the Bicentennial Lighthouse Fund and establishes procedures for distribution of the money.

Amendment No. 26: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which appropriates $199,716,000 for construction instead of $174,210,000 as proposed by the House and $140,851,000 as proposed by the Senate. Total, land acquisition & State assistance	88,556,000

The managers agree to the detailing of regional office staff to Santa Monica Mountains NRA, CA to provide on site land acquisition support.

Federal acquisition of private inholdings in the Kantishna area of Denali NPP is highly desirable if such acquisition can significantly benefit the preservation of wildlife sightings in areas adjacent to the Denali Park Road, and if the acquisition can be accomplished at a reasonable cost. The Service is directed to prepare a list of all inholdings in Denali NPP; the name of each owner or owners; the statutory basis for the inholding (Mining Act, Homestead Act, etc.); the approximate acreage of the inholdings; its current, and potential, relative threat to Park values (high, medium, low); and its location and number on an accompanying map. In addition, a comprehensive resource management plan should be prepared for the Kantishna region. The plan should identify reasonable strategies for accommodating or resolving the inherent conflicts between resource utilization and preservation. Furthermore, to the extent that the draft Environmental Impact Statement, which is to be finalized in October, 1989, indicates that mining in certain areas may be acceptable, the Service is directed to work with mining applicants on a cooperative basis, and at early stages, to minimize expenses in developing mining plans of operation which comply with existing and new regulations. Resource protection by frustration is not an acceptable strategy. For example, if mining is clearly not permissible in certain proposed areas or circumstances, then a speedy rejection is preferable to a protracted maze of administrative hurdles whose successful completion holds no likely benefit to the applicant. The Service should provide the information related to inholdings and the comprehensive resource management plan no later than May 1, 1990.

No money has been provided for land acquisition at Valley Forge NHP, PA because of the slow pace of obligating land acquisition funds. The managers agree that the pace of land acquisition at Valley Forge should be accelerated.

Amendment No. 28: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert: : Provided further, That of the amount provided above, $800,000 is for acquisition of the Saxton House, 331 South Market Street, Canton, Ohio, as if authorized by the Historic Sites Act of 1935 (16 U.S.C. 462(e)): Provided further, That section 317 of Public Law 98-146 is amended by adding the following:

"The land owner may also use the credits in exchange for excess lands, wherever located, under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior."

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment clarifies the section of Public Law 98-146 being amendment and allows the National Park Service to acquire the Saxton-McKinley Site.

JOHN F. KENNEDY CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS

Amendment No. 29: Appropriates $9,193,000 for the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts as proposed by the Senate instead of $15,193,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 30: Provides $4,000,000 to remain available until expended for garage repairs at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts as proposed by the Senate instead of $10,000,000 as proposed by the House.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

SURVEYS, INVESTIGATIONS, AND RESEARCH

Amendment No. 31: Appropriates $484,709,000 for surveys, investigations, and research instead of $486,931,000 as proposed by the House and $476,909,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decrease below the amount proposed by the House consists of $67,000 for volcano hazards reduction, $200,000 for Louisiana barrier island studies in coastal studies, $1,250,000 in offshore geologic surveys, $205,000 in mineral resource surveys for roadless and RARE II areas, and $500,000 for modernization of water data dissemination.

The managers agree that:

1. all geomagnetism observatories are expected to continue operations;

2. contributing States should continue to receive priority consideration in the National Aerial Photography Program (NAPP);

3. the Survey should continue the existing site selection process for establishing priorities for the side-looking airborne radar (SLAR) program; however, if priority considerations permit, coverage of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama and contiguous geologic features should be completed;

4. the national program plan for coastal studies should include western Louisiana and eastern Texas as part of options presented to the Congress;

5. the Survey should conduct a feasibility study on alternate locations for the Deer Creek marine research facility, including, but not limited to the Marine Science Center in Newport, OR;

6. any water quality assessments of Tualatin River pollution in Oregon should be carried out as part of the joint Federal-State cooperative water program, and should not be undertaken by the Survey without State participation;

7. the Survey shall explore the possibility of assisting the Town of Searchlight, Nevada, through the Federal/State Cooperative Program, in its effort to locate a water supply for use by the local citizenry; and

8. the Survey shall expend the $1.5 million appropriated for mineral resource investigations of roadless areas on work identified during the development of the Idaho State Wilderness Bill. The Geological Survey shall coordinate their field operations with those of the Bureau of Mines and the Idaho Geological Survey.

MINERALS MANAGEMENT SERVICE

LEASING AND ROYALTY MANAGEMENT

Amendment No. 32: Appropriates $178,525,000 for leasing and royalty management instead of $175,066,000 as proposed by the House and $179,761,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net increase over the amount proposed by the House includes increases of $1,000,000 in outer continental shelf lands for second year funding of a three-year cost-shared oil spill research initiative and $3,600,000 in royalty management to initiate a project to place audits on a more timely schedule using additional in-house and State and tribal auditors.

The increases are partially offset by decreases of $1,000,000 in outer continental shelf lands for the environmental studies program and in royalty management of $100,000 for systems development and $41,000 for refunds on Indian allottee lease overpayments.

The managers agree that the MMS should coordinate and cooperate in the Northwest OCS Task Force which was established to assist in identifying and resolving OCS issues specific to that region. The managers expect the MMS to work closely with the task force on identifying and conducting needed environmental studies and on scheduling the prelease steps leading to Sale 132. The Federal government and the States are urged to appoint high level management officials, authorized to make commitments on behalf of their respective organizations, to the task force.

The managers agree that the focus of the oil spill research initiative should be on containment, cleanup and mitigation measures including those associated with spills from tanker accidents.

Elsewhere in the bill there are restrictions on OCS oil and natural gas leasing activities. None of these restrictions apply to the non-fuel minerals leasing program on the OCS.

The grounding of the Exxon Valdez on March 24, 1989 in Prince William Sound has led to concern among many people, including the fishermen of Bristol Bay, over the possible impact oil and gas exploration and development in the North Aleutian Basin could have on fisheries resources. The managers recognize that these concerns should be addressed before oil and gas exploration in Bristol Bay goes forward. For that reason, the managers have included a one-year moratorium on exploration and development in the North Aleutian Basin.

The managers agree that the Secretary of the Interior should conduct a three-pronged study to address concerns related to oil and gas exploration in the North Aleutian Basin and report to the Committees by March 1, 1991 as follows:

2. Within available funds, the Fish and Wildlife Service, in cooperation with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the State of Alaska, is to conduct a study of the effects of the March 24, 1989 oil spill on the Prince William Sound fisheries. The Service may draw upon the results of the fisheries research projects being conducted as part of the damage assessment process under the Clean Water Act and the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA). These studies are already funded through the CERCLA process. The study should also address the applicability of its findings to reasonable potential threats to the Bristol Bay fisheries if OCS exploration and production were to occur in the North Aleutian Basin.

2. In order to better assess the risk in the North Aleutian Basin, the Secretary is to determine if:

(i) contingency plans for the North Aleutian Basin are acceptable and based on the best available technology;

(ii) the technology, equipment and personnel will be in place and personnel will be adequately trained to implement the contingency plans; and

(iii) the contingency plans together with the technology, equipment and personnel in place to implement them are capable of containing a maximum volume spill during the exploration phase. A maximum volume spill shall be determined by potential spill volume and without reference to the probability of such a spill occurring.

3. The Secretary is to examine the possible repurchase of leases currently held in the North Aleutian Basin, including alternative options for compensating lease holders in the North Aleutian Basin, assuming the compensation procedures outlined in 43 U.S.C. 1334 and applicable court decisions. These options should include, to the extent practicable, credits in lieu of appropriations, such as credits on Federal royalties on producing OCS leases. Based on the results of the Fish and Wildlife study and the North Aleutian Basin risk assessment study, the Secretary is to recommend whether the repurchase options should be exercised. No such option may be exercised, however, without an Act of Congress addressed to this issue.

In directing the Department to conduct these studies, the managers' action should not be construed as support by the Congress for either continuing or discontinuing the moratorium in the North Aleutian Basin. Nor should it be construed as taking a position on whether the leases should be repurchased.

In other matters, the managers endorse the concept of a more timely audit cycle using in-house and State and tribal auditors. The managers caution the MMS to proceed at a reasonable pace in implementing the contemporaneous audit initiative. Candidates for in-house auditing positions should be carefully screened and interviewed to ensure that a high quality and enduring program is maintained. Hiring through term appointments for the audit program should be minimized and used only to the extent that highly qualified candidates are available for such appointments. Routine attrition in the staffing of permanent positions should permit the MMS to manage an orderly reduction of the additional auditors hired to support the project as the contemporaneous audit objectives are achieved.

Amendment No. 33: Earmarks $56,060,000 for royalty management instead of $52,601,000 as proposed by the House and $56,796,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 34: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert: : Provided further, That of the above enacted amounts, up to one-half of the increase over the fiscal year 1989 funding provided for mineral royalty audits may be used to compensate States and Indian tribes for audit activities under the provisions of sections 202 and 205 of the Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Management Act of 1982 (30 U.S.C. 1732, 1735): Provided further, That for fiscal year 1990 and each fiscal year thereafter, notwithstanding the provisions of section 201 of the Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Management Act of 1982, sections 202 through 206 of that Act shall apply to any lease or portion of a lease subject to section 8(g) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, as amended (43 U.S.C. 1337), which, for purposes of those provisions and for no other purposes, shall be regarded as within the coastal State or States entitled to receive revenues from it under section 8(g)

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment modifies language proposed by the Senate regarding audit funding for States and Indian tribes to clarify that up to one-half of the increase in audit program funds may be used for State and tribal audit programs, in addition to the funds already in the base for these programs. Further, the managers have included language authorizing the Secretary to enter into cooperative agreements for the conduct of 8(g) audits.

Amendment No. 35: Restores language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate providing for refunds of Indian allottee royalty overpayments and earmarks $64,000 for these refunds instead of $105,231 as proposed by the House and nothing as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 36: Deletes language proposed by the House providing for deduction of the administrative costs of the mineral leasing program prior to division and distribution of the receipts between the States and the Treasury.

BUREAU OF MINES

MINES AND MINERALS

Amendment No. 37: Appropriates $174,759,000 for mines and minerals instead of $161,876,000 as proposed by the House and $175,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net increase above the House level includes increases of $1,200,000 in information and analysis for second year funding of a four-year mineral land assessment study program on roadless lands in Idaho; $500,000 in health, safety and mining technology for development and field testing of control and guidance technology for high wall mining systems including the Edna mining system, $5,000,000 to continue the 25 percent cost-shared Casa Grande in-situ copper leaching field test, $500,000 for in-house laboratory support for the Casa Grande project, $500,000 for rockbursts, and $250,000 for self-contained self-rescuers; $1,000,000 in minerals and materials science to continue strategic and critical minerals research at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory; $300,000 in environmental technology for third-year funding of a five-year demonstration program on soil revegetation conducted with the Soil Conservation Service in Arkansas and $1,500,000 for research on water contamination associated with mining of which $500,000 is earmarked for the University of Idaho; and $4,425,000 in mineral institutes for allotment grants to the 32 institutes and $108,000 for program administration.

The increases are partially offset by reductions of $1,000,000 in health, safety and mining technology for mine entry studies; and $1,400,000 in environmental technology for biotechnology in waste management research.

The managers understand that the cost-shared Oregon metals initiative is expected to amount to a total project cost of $5,000,000 over three years.

The managers agree that $150,000 of the funds provided for subsidence research should be used for a characterization study at an abandoned iron ore mine site in Mine Hill, New Jersey, with the understanding that local, county or State funds will be identified to match the Federal share and that the total cost of the project will not exceed $300,000. Further, the managers agree that the $1,200,000 for the Marine Minerals Technology Center shall be allocated in the manner described in P.L. 100-202 (101 Stat. 1329-226).

Amendment No. 38: Earmarks $105,035,000 to remain available until expended instead of $97,885,000 as proposed by the House and $105,935,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 39: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert: : Provided further, That the Secretary is authorized to convey in fee the decommissioned Keyes Helium Plant in Keyes, Oklahoma, to the Cimarron Industrial Park Authority, a public trust of the State of Oklahoma, on or before September 30, 1990, on terms mutually agreed on between the Secretary and the Authority: Provided further, That prior to conveyance, the Secretary shall complete the current effort to repair asbestos insulation on piping and equipment, including cleanup and disposal of asbestos containing debris: Provided further, That, as a condition of conveyance, the Cimarron Industrial Park Authority shall accept full responsibility for any remedial actions with respect to hazardous substances remaining at the plant after the date of conveyance

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment modifies language proposed by the Senate regarding conveyance of the Keyes Helium Plant to state that the plant has been decommissioned and to specify that the Secretary's responsibility with respect to asbestos cleanup is limited to completion of the current repair and cleanup project.

OFFICE OF SURFACE MINING RECLAMATION AND ENFORCEMENT

REGULATION AND TECHNOLOGY

The managers agree that, in addition to standardized data reporting, annual State evaluations and reports should identify specific accomplishments and areas in need of improvement and that the State oversight prototype project should be limited to no more than four States. The Committees are to be kept apprised of the status of the prototype project on a quarterly basis.

ABANDONED MINE RECLAMATION FUND

Amendment No. 40: Appropriates $192,772,000 for the Abandoned Mine Reclamation Fund as proposed by the House instead of $192,112,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers agree that the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement (OSM) should work with the States to help them identify approaches to improving their grant obligation rates and report to the Committees, no later than two weeks prior to the first of the OSM's fiscal year 1991 budget hearings before the Committees, on the results of OSM's consultations with the States.

The managers ask that the OSM identify the remaining available funds for acquisition and relocation activities under Public Law 98-181 (97 Stat. 1294) and report to the Committees on the amount of those funds which are considered in excess of the requirements for which they were appropriated. Further, the OSM is to report to the Committees on the advisability of funding a joint demonstration program which would provide surplus heavy equipment for land reclamation in the Pennsylvania Counties of Luzerne, Columbia, Montour, Northumberland, Carbon, Monroe and Sullivan. The report should include a detailed description of what the demonstration program would entail and information on the total estimated cost for the project by fiscal year. The managers neither endorse nor oppose this project. The Committees will review the merits of the project after receipt of the OSM report.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

OPERATION OF INDIAN PROGRAMS

Amendment No. 41: Appropriates $1,035,534,000 for operation of Indian programs instead of $1,065,574,000 as proposed by the House and $965,126,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decrease from the amount proposed by the House consists of increases of $356,000 for school operations, including $256,000 for the Writers Workbench demonstration project, ND and $100,000 for a pilot project for the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians; $1,525,000 for continuing education; $500,000 for employment development for the Crownpoint Institute of Technology; $900,000 for real estate and financial trust services; and $250,000 for general administration; and decreases of $500,000 for tribal government services, for new tribes funding; $6,993,000 for Indian services—tribe/agency operations; $75,000 for economic development; $520,000 for natural resources, wildlife and parks; $1,783,000 for natural resources—tribe/agency operations; $700,000 for Indian rights protection; and $23,000,000 for tribal contract commission.

The managers encourage the bureau to work with the Hopi tribe to identify resources within the funds provided through the education formula to address the curriculum development needs of the tribe. The managers remain concerned about lack of adequate funding for schools such as the Hopi school to meet BIA education standards, and direct that the report on the lack of progress in meeting education standards requested in the House report be submitted to the Committees by no later than November 1, 1989. The managers have included funding, as proposed by the House, to restore the fiscal year 1989 funding level for substance and alcohol abuse counselors. The managers intend that the Bureau continue to try to hire certified substance abuse counselors wherever possible, or use the funds provided to secure additional substance abuse training for existing counselors or new hires.

For continuing education, the increases over the House consists of decreases of $200,000 for Haskell Indian Junior College, $100,000 for the Southwestern Indian Polytechnical Institute, and increases of $1,375,000 for Title I tribally controlled community colleges, and $450,000 for Title II, the Navajo Community College. The managers encourage the tribal colleges to continue their efforts to reduce costs and secure other sources of funds.

Within the total funding provided for new tribes, the managers intend that $500,000 be made available to the Coquille Tribe and $500,000 be made available to the Lac Vieux Desert Tribe.

With regard to the $500,000 provided for the Crownpoint Institute, the managers agree this is the last time funding will be provided unless authorizing legislation is enacted.

Under Indian services—tribe/agency operations, the managers have provided increases over the House of $50,000 for Penobscot community fire protection, and $380,000 for the Navajo Nation government reform task force to be matched equally by the tribe; and decreases of $323,000 for tribal courts, $2,000,000 for social services, associated with the child abuse initiative, $2,100,000 for law enforcement, and $3,000,000 for self-determination grants. Of the funds recommended for tribal courts, the managers recommend the following changes from the House level: decreases of $200,000 for Cheyenne River Sioux, $150,000 for the Northwest Intertribal, Court System, $23,000 for the Lower Elwha Tribe, and $50,000 for the Standing Rock Sioux; and increases of $50,000 for Pasqua Yaqui and $50,000 for St. Regis Mohawk. Within the increase of $200,000 over the budget for the Northwest Intertribal Court System, the managers intend for the Lower Elwha Tribe to be included in the system. Of the funding recommended for law enforcement, the following changes to the House recommendation are provided: decreases of $1,500,000 for juvenile detention centers staffing, $50,000 for Lower Elwha, $50,000 for Penobscot, $100,000 for Lummi, $100,000 for Cheyenne River Sioux, $50,000 for Ramah Navajo, $50,000 for Uintah and Ouray, $50,000 for Rosebud Sioux, $100,000 for Miccosukee, $50,000 for St. Regis Mohawk, and $100,000 for Standing Rock Sioux; and an increase of $100,000 is recommended for the San Carlos Apache.

With respect to contract support funds provided to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the managers direct the Bureau and the Inspector General to take steps to notify tribes that indirect cost rates may be negotiated to include the administrative costs of operation of tribal departments of education. Because of the specific situation of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians, the managers have included $100,000 for a one-year pilot projects for establishment of a reservation-wide education system. The Committees will review the results of this project before providing any additional funds for tribal departments of education. In addition, beginning with the fiscal year 1991 budget request, the Bureau shall identify separately the funds necessary to fund fully the administrative cost grants to schools operated by tribes and tribal organizations pursuant to P.L. 93-638 contracts and P.L. 100-297 tribally controlled school grants. The managers wish to reiterate that indirect costs related to construction are to be funded only from the "Construction" appropriation account.

The managers remain concerned about cost estimates associated with the new requirement of providing general assistance in the States of Washington and Oregon, and the Bureau's estimate that only 2.2 percent of eligible persons in Washington State will participate in the general assistance program. The Committees have provided $1,200,000 for this purpose, but should this amount not prove sufficient to meet the requirements of these States, the Bureau should notify the Committee promptly of the additional funds necessary. The Bureau should also report by no later than March 1, 1990 on the number of persons, by tribe, participating in the general assistance program in Washington and Oregon, and on the total estimated cost in fiscal year 1990 of the program in the two States.

The decrease from the House level in economic development consists of a decrease of $125,000 for the grant to Michigan tribes, and offsetting increases of $20,000 for the Indian Arts and Crafts Board to allow the Blackfeet tribe to contract for museum operations, and $30,000 for the proposed Kootenai tribe land transfer.

Within natural resources, the managers intend that $50,000 of the funds provided for forest products marketing assistance be used to update the Intertribal Timber Council's study on forest products marketing and business development. Under water management and development, the managers are aware of the requests of the Fort Belknap, Navajo, Nez Perce, Standing Rock Sioux, Rosebud Sioux and Yakima tribes for water management funds, and expect that these requests will be reviewed and funded to the maximum extent possible within the funds provided, including funds to continue the Navajo water monitoring program funded in prior years.

For natural resources, wildlife and parks, the decreases from the House level consist of $70,000 for the U.S./Canada Pacific Salmon treaty, $100,000 for Columbia River tribes planning, $100,000 for unresolved hunting and fishing rights, $50,000 for the Quinault tribe for fisheries habitat restoration on the Queets River, $50,000 for Suquamish fisheries management, $50,000 for Stillaquamish fisheries management, and $100,000 for the Native American Fish and Wildlife Society. The funding agreed to by the Committees for the Upper Columbia United Tribes should be used only in direct support of tribal needs.

The decrease for natural resources—tribe/agency operations consists of decreases of $633,000 for forestry and $1,150,000 for wildlife and parks. Within forestry, the reduction from the House level includes decreases of $133,000 for new lands associated with the Grand Ronde, $200,000 for the San Carlos Apache, and $300,000 for the White Mountain Apache.

The managers recommend no change to the total funding provided by the House for natural resources—tribe/agency operations for water resources. Within that total, however, the managers recommend a decrease from the House level of $150,000 for the Umatilla tribe, which will be funded within the water management line-item, and an increase of $150,000 for ongoing efforts in North Dakota to resolve water disputes, including the development of a water management plan.

The reduction from the House level for natural resources—tribe/agency operations includes the following decreases for wildlife and parks: $100,000 for the Cheyenne River Sioux, $50,000 for the Sault Ste. Marie, $200,000 for Yakima wildlife and fish, $150,000 for the Oglala Sioux, $50,000 for Umatilla fisheries, $50,000 for the St. Regis Mohawk, $300,000 for the Tulalip fisheries, $100,000 for the Karuk, $50,000 for the White Earth tribe, and $100,000 for the Nez Perce tribe.

Within trust responsibilities, the managers recommend a decrease of $200,000 to the House level for remedial investigations of environmental quality, and $500,000 for attorneys' fees. With respect to the U.S. v. Oregon litigation, the managers have concurred in the House funding of $300,000 for the Shoshone-Bannock tribe to address imbalances in funding provided for the various tribes participating in the litigation. It is the managers' intent that future funding related to this litigation be made available equitably to all the parties involved. Within water rights and negotiation, the Bureau is to provide $100,000 for contract studies for the Navajo and Hopi tribes and $1,300,000 for the Little Colorado River adjudication for claim preparation costs. No funds are earmarked for the Western Shoshone Nation.

For real estate and financial trust services, the managers have included increases above the House level of $400,000 for cadastral surveys related to the Arkansas Riverbed, and $500,000 for the trust fund accounting contract. The managers are aware of the tribes' concerns about unauthorized third party occupation of the riverbed lands which prevents the tribes from benefitting fully from the use and development of those lands. Therefore, the managers direct the Bureau of Land Management to expedite completion of the full 96 miles of needed riverbed surveying and to recommend a funding level for fiscal year 1991 necessary to continue this expedited pace of surveying. The managers direct that the Bureau take steps to address the concerns raised over account reconciliation of trust funds. The Bureau should take all possible steps to reconcile accounts to the maximum extent possible, and an independent party should review the Bureau's reconciliation efforts and certify that no further reconciliation can be achieved before such accounts are transferred under the contract. The managers are also aware of concerns raised by another Committee of Congress with respect to the technical sufficiency of the contract and the operation of the software. It is the managers' expectation that the Bureau will address these concerns and will keep the Committees fully informed as to the steps taken to address these concerns.

For facilities management, the managers have concurred in the funding level proposed by the House. The funding provided for the facilities operation and maintenance program is to be distributed using the new allocation formula. With respect to the schools which serve the Eight Northern Pueblos, the managers understand their high priority needs will be addressed through the facilities improvement and repair and minor improvement and repair programs of the "Construction" appropriation account.

Within available funds provided to Alaska, $300,000 shall be provided to establish a joint Federal-State Commission on Policies and Programs Affecting Alaska Natives.

The managers are concerned about steps being considered which would effect the transfer of facility management functions under provisions in the Indian Education Act Amendments of 1988, prior to consultation with and agreement by the Appropriations Committees. In light of the reprogramming guidelines with respect to reorganizations and concerns raised over changes without consultation, the managers reiterate that no reorganization or transfer changes should be undertaken without approval by the Appropriations Committees. Prior to implementation of Section 5112(b)(1)(B) of the Indian Education Act Amendments of 1988 (P.L. 100-297), the Department is to submit a reprogramming proposal specifically identifying those facility management positions to be affected, addressing funding implications for continuing to carry out non-education facility requirements, and specifying the schedule for implementation.

Under general administration, the managers have recommended increases above the House level of $100,000 for departmental billings, $100,000 for position staffing in the automated data processing program, and $250,000 for a study of the costs associated with the recently enacted liability insurance provision. For departmental billings, the Department should include justification of such increases in the future in both the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Office of the Secretary budget justification documents. With regard to the liability insurance issue, as a temporary measure, the managers have included language in Title III of the Act extending coverage under the Federal Tort Claims Act to tribal contractors of both the Bureau and the Indian Health Service. In the interim, the managers expect the Bureau to work with the Indian Health Service and the Double Eagle, Inc. risk management group to address the cost implications of various options for extending liability coverage to tribal contractors. The managers expect these groups to work together, and to provide a joint report to the Committee by February 1, 1990 identifying the costs and benefits of various liability coverage alternatives.

On the matter of a field station at Neah Bay, Washington, the managers understand that the existing office has been established through funds available to the Portland Area, Olympic Agency. These funds should be transferred to the new agency office at Neah Bay for operation. The managers expect the Bureau to prepare a report on the staffing patterns at the various offices in the Portland area, including the identification of any shortfalls. The managers expect continued operation of the Klamath field office in fiscal year 1990 at current staffing levels.

The managers remain concerned about funding for the Penobscot and Passamaquoddy tribes of Maine. The managers expect the Bureau to conduct a comparison and analysis of the funding available to the tribes under the jurisdiction of the Eastern area office, along with data regarding the service population, the trust land base, and other relevant factors, and submit it to the Committees by March 1, 1990. This information should allow the Committees to assess the manner in which available resources are being allocated. Should this report suggest an inequitable allocation of funds within the Eastern area, the managers may in the future request additional analyses regarding the needs of these Maine tribes.

For tribal contract conversion funds, the managers have provided $54,000,000 in budget authority. It is the intent of the managers that these funds not be expended until the Bureau reports, by March 1, 1990, regarding the logistical and accounting needs of this conversion. Potential future conversion costs should also be analyzed.

Amendment No. 42: provides $2,180,000 for litigation support as proposed by the House instead of $1,480,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 43: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert the following: : Provided further, That none of the funds in this Act shall be used by the Bureau of Indian Affairs to transfer funds under a contract with any third party for the management of tribal or individual Indian trust funds until the funds held in trust for such tribe or individual have been audited and reconciled to the earliest possible date, the results of such reconciliation have been certified by an independent party as the most complete reconciliation of such funds possible, and the tribe or individuals has been provided with an accounting of such funds

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

As discussed earlier, the managers expect the Bureau to make every effort to complete reconciliation of tribal and individual trust funds to the maximum extent possible, and this effort should be reviewed and certified by an independent party.

Amendment No. 44: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which authorizes the payment of general assistance funds for dependent children of eligible Job Corps participants in Arizona at the full State AFDC A-2 grant level.

CONSTRUCTION

Amendment No. 45: Appropriates $134,226,000 instead of $134,379,000 as proposed by the House and $119,671,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net decrease below the House level consists of increases of $65,000 for the Supai Village microwave transmitter, Truxton agency; $235,000 for irrigation improvements for the Isleta Pueblo; $1,500,000 to complete construction of the Standing Rock Sioux irrigation project; $1,280,000 for the Indian unit of the Fort Yuma irrigation project; and $1,000,000 for the Wind River delivery system; and decreases of $2,749,000 for the San Carlos irrigation project, $100,000 for the Milk River irrigation project; $1,000,000 for the housing improvement program; and $384,000 for the Nambe Falls road.

An amount of $1,000,000 is provided, which will allow completion of the Pushmataha Road in Oklahoma.

With respect to the funds provided for advance planning and design, the managers understand that these funds will be sufficient to conduct the necessary Planning of New Institutions (PONI) studies for at least the first five detention facilities on the list, including Colville, and to award at least one architectural and engineering design contract.

Funds are not earmarked above the facilities improvement and repair request for the Hannahville, MI school. The Bureau should proceed with the planning for phase II of this project while phase I construction is underway, and should funds become available to begin construction of phase II during fiscal year 1990, approval to reprogram funds for this purpose should be requested.

The managers expect the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Office of Construction Management to work with the Indian Health Service to prepare a joint report, due March 1, 1990, regarding efforts to include detoxification facilities in detention centers.

The reduction of $1,000,000 to the housing improvement program was made only on the basis that separate contract support funds will be provided in the construction account, beginning in fiscal year 1990. There should be no impact on program level or accomplishments.

Amendment No. 46: Deletes language proposed by the Senate allowing the transfer of funds made available for the Safety of Dams program to the Bureau of Reclamation.

The managers are concerned about the safety of dams program as presently configured under the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The managers will expect a full report from the Bureau, to be submitted by December 1, 1989 on plans to restructure the dam safety program. The managers are particularly concerned about the issues and deficiencies identified in the recent audit conducted by the Inspector General. The report should address the issue of costs and personnel necessary to bring the dams into compliance with safety requirements. If transfer of the safety of dams program to the Bureau of Reclamation is considered as an option, the report should include the steps that would be taken to ensure that tribal concerns and input are adequately addressed, and the impact on P.L. 93-638 contracting. The program should not be transferred until the Committees and tribes have had an opportunity to review the report.

MISCELLANEOUS PAYMENTS TO INDIANS

Amendment No. 47: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides that funds appropriated for payment under the Aleutian and Pribilof Island Restitution Act (P.L. 100-383) are not subject to the subsurface estate revenue sharing provisions of ANCSA.

NAVAJO REHABILITATION TRUST FUND

Amendment No. 48: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which adds a new appropriation account to fund the Navajo Rehabilitation Trust Fund, provides $800,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of nothing as proposed by the House, and includes language providing for the funds to remain available until expended.

MISCELLANEOUS TRUST FUNDS

Amendment No. 49: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which establishes a new account, "Miscellaneous Trust Funds", and includes language providing that the Secretary shall retain excess interest earned on trust funds between January 1, 1987 and February 28, 1989, to compensate the trust funds for interest that would have been earned between June 30, 1985 and December 31, 1986, if all available trust funds had been invested.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 50: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert: : Provided, That the property known as "Madrona Point" located on Orcas Island, Washington, shall be acquired in trust by the United States from the Lummi Indian Tribe under the conditions that it shall be preserved in its natural condition and shall not be developed for any commercial or residential purpose, except for a caretaker dwelling, a visitor or cultural center, or the interment of human remains: Provided further, That now and hereafter, the tribe, by contract, may impose additional restrictions: Provided further, That after acquisition by the United States, the property shall permanently be subject to the civil, regulatory (not including tax) and criminal jurisdiction of the State of Washington and its political subdivisions, concurrently with the Lummi Indian Tribe: Provided further, That except as provided herein, such grant of jurisdiction to the State shall have the same limitations as set forth in 18 U.S.C. 1162(b)

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The amendment deletes Senate proposed language certifying a Native corporation as a Native Group under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, and includes conditions for the acquisition for the Lummi Tribe of tribal burial grounds at Madrona Point in the State of Washington, for which the amount of $2,200,000 is included in the construction account of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

These funds shall be expended only on the condition that a final agreement is reached between San Juan County, WA, and the Lummi Indian Tribe pursuant to the memorandum of understanding reached between these parties on July 10, 1989.

The Madrona Point property on Orcas is currently planned and permitted for development. In order to preserve this property, the Department of the Interior shall pursue the acquisition of this property as rapidly as possible.

Amendment No. 51: Deletes language proposed by the Senate deeming tribes or tribal organizations to be employees of the Department of the Interior while carrying out contracts, grant agreements, or cooperative agreements.

Amendment No. 52: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that would have afforded the protection and coverage of the Federal Tort Claims Act to tribal contractors performing functions pursuant to the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975, as amended.

Amendment No. 53: Deletes language proposed by the Senate requiring the Secretary of the Interior to request appropriations sufficient to reimburse the Treasury for claims paid pursuant to the extension of the Federal Tort Claims Act to tribes, tribal organizations, or tribal employees. This amendment is addressed in Amendment No. 164.

TERRITORIAL AND INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

ADMINISTRATION OF TERRITORIES

Amendment No. 54: Appropriates $76,489,000 for administration of territories instead of $76,789,000 as proposed by the House and $76,204,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decrease to the amount proposed by the House consist of increases of $1,725,000 for grants to American Samoa, including $1,000,000 for tank farm improvements and $725,000 for community centers and gymnasiums, $250,000 for technical assistance, $225,000 for the grant to the Close Up Foundation, and $500,000 for the maintenance assistance fund; and decreases of $2,000,000 for Guam hospital improvements and $1,000,000 for Virgin Islands prison barracks construction.

None of the amounts included for drug abuse grants are to be released until a plan for the use of such funds has been prepared and submitted by each of the Governments. The plans should address funding needs in order of priority and should be reviewed by the National Drug Policy Board.

The funds provided for tank farm repairs should not be released until a commitment for a matching amount at least equal to the Federal contribution has been identified from other, non-Federal sources. The managers expect the American Samoa Government to raise the terminal user fee to 2 cents per gallon, with the additional revenues to be used to establish a tank farm maintenance fund to assure that future maintenance needs are addressed. The managers direct the Department of the Interior to work with the Department of Defense to identify additional funding for repair of the tank farm facility, commensurate with DOD's use of the tank farm.

The managers expect the Virgin Islands Government to propose a reprogramming of unobligated available funds, if additional funds are needed to meet the balance of prison construction needs.

The managers have agreed to provide funding for the brown tree snake as a separate line item within the territorial administration program.

Amendment No. 55: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment providing $73,543,000 for technical assistance, maintenance assistance and grants to territorial governments instead of $72,843,000 as proposed by the House and $73,258,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net increase over the amount proposed by the House consists of the increases and decreases listed in Amendment No. 54, plus an increase of $1,000,000 for the brown tree snake in Guam.

Amendment No. 56: Provides $2,946,000 for salaries and expenses as proposed by the Senate instead of $3,946,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 57: Provides $935,000 for a grant to the Close Up Foundation instead of $710,000 as proposed by the House and $1,025,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 58: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides for the maintenance assistance program to be made available to all the territorial, Trust Territory and Freely Associated Governments, with participation and cost-sharing to be determined by the Secretary.

TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS

Amendment No. 59: Appropriates $33,339,000 for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands instead of $34,102,000 as proposed by the House and $32,164,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decreases below the amount proposed by the House consist of increases of $200,000 for Trust Territory administration and $250,000 for the public auditor and special prosecutor for Palau; and decreases of $100,000 for medical supplies for Palau, $1,000,000 for the Palau hospital, and $113,000 for CIP deficiencies.

With regard to the funds for CIP deficiencies, the managers agree that these funds shall be allocated according to the table in the Senate report (Report 101-85), with the addition of $75,000 for the Majuro hospital project. The managers intend that these funds to correct deficiencies are not to be made available until the receiving government has initiated participation in the maintenance assistance program established under the Administration of Territories appropriation account.

COMPACT OF FREE ASSOCIATION

Amendment No. 60: Appropriates $23,260,000 for the Compact of Free Association instead of $24,760,000 as proposed by the House and $22,260,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase over the amount proposed by the Senate is $1,000,000 for the Ebeye dock. The remaining funds for the dock should be identified from other sources.

With regard to the Enewetak support program, the managers expect that the local government will assume full management responsibility for the program in 1991. In order for this to happen, the managers assume that the Departments of the Interior and Energy and their contractors will cooperate fully with the Enewetak local government and Marshall Islands government in providing whatever assistance, training or information is needed.

DEPARTMENTAL OFFICES

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Amendment No. 61: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which appropriates $51,045,000 for the Office of the Secretary instead of $51,295,000 as proposed by the House and $51,716,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net decrease to the amount provided by the House includes an increase of $50,000 for the Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife and Parks and decreases of $200,000 for environmental project review and $100,000 for the Office of Hearings and Appeals.

The $300,000 increase over the budget request for environmental project review is to help meet Departmental responsibilities with other agencies in the area of oil spills and other hazardous waste problems.

The managers have no objection to adjustments in the Office of the Secretary for the Federal Financial System for funds budgeted in the Office of the Solicitor, the Office of Inspector General and Construction Management.

Amendment No. 62: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert the following: : Provided, That Alaskan oil spill damage assessment shall continue at least through September 30, 1990.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment assures that the Department of the Interior will continue assessment of damage from the Exxon Valdez oil spill through September 30, 1990 and deletes House language which would have prohibited establishment of a separate office for the Secretary of the Interior outside Washington, D.C., based on the Secretary's assurance that such an office will not be established.

NATIONAL INDIAN GAMING COMMISSION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

Amendment No. 63: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert: $750,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment provides $750,000 for the National Indian Gaming Commission instead of nothing as proposed by the House and $1,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers agree that there are no restrictions on the immediate availability of the funds.

GENERAL PROVISIONS, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Amendment No. 64: Restores House language stricken by the Senate providing that the name of Mount McKinley shall not be changed, amended to make the provision applicable only to fiscal year 1990.

Amendment Nos. 65-69: Restore House proposed section numbers changed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 70: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows: publishing draft environmental impact statements until five months after the President's Outer Continental Shelf Task Force releases its report to the President on Lease Sales 91, 95 and 116 or for the conduct in fiscal year 1990 of

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment allows for a period of public review of the President's OCS Task Force report recommendations, which are scheduled to be released on January 1, 1990, before proceeding with the publication of draft environmental impact statements for California OCS Lease Sales 91, 95 and 119.

Amendment No.71: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows: final environmental impact statements,

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment restores final environmental impact statements to the list of leasing steps precluded from being conducted in fiscal year 1990 for OCS Lease Sales 91, 95 and 119.

Amendment No. 72: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: prelease geological or geophysical activity which involves explosives or the introduction of drilling muds for prelease

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have allowed prelease seismic studies which do not involve explosives and limited types of geological activities such as grab samples and shallow coring using pneumatic drives or pistons. The managers expect the MMS to consult with and carefully consider the recommendations of all concerned parties prior to granting permits for high energy seismic surveys. The managers do not intend for the restrictions set forth in this section to apply to areas covered by existing leases.

Amendment No. 73: Restores House proposed section number changed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 74: Deletes language proposed by the House on offshore Mid-Atlantic oil and gas prelease restrictions.

Amendment No. 75: Deletes language proposed by the House restricting calls for information, tract selection, and environmental impact statements for offshore Mid-Atlantic oil and gas lease sales in a specified area.

The managers agree that the MMS should consider the areas under moratoria in the Mid-Atlantic as a separate deferral option in the environmental impact statement for OCS Lease Sale 121.

Amendment No. 76: Report in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: prelease geological or geophysical activity which involves explosives or the introduction of drilling muds for prelease

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have allowed prelease seismic studies which do not involve explosives and limited types of geological activities such as grab samples and shallow coring using pneumatic drives or pistons. The managers expect the MMS to consult with and carefully consider the recommendations of all concerned parties prior to granting permits for high energy seismic surveys.

Amendment No. 77: Restores House proposed section number changed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 78: Deletes language proposed by the House requiring that any new construction of OCS vessels, rigs, platforms or other structures be built from articles, materials or supplies at least 50 percent of which by cost shall have been produced or manufactured in the United States and that fabrication occur in the United States unless a waiver is granted by the Secretary of the Interior. The managers recognize that the design and manufacture of equipment used in the exploration and production of America's offshore oil resources is an important strategic American industry and the managers will continue to closely monitor developments in this area to assure that the industry remains a viable one. As such, the managers again urge the oil and gas industry, in every possible instance, to contract with U.S. manufacturers and fabricators for oil drilling and production equipment. Absent progress in this area there may be a need to include language such as the "Buy-Build America" provision.

The managers understand there are plans underway to construct a deep water platform in the Gulf of Mexico. The managers intend to closely monitor this project and expect the industry to utilize American contents and fabrication to the maximum extent possible.

Amendment No. 79: the amendment changes the section number proposed to "115".

Amendment No. 80; Restores House language referencing a prior agency designation by the Secretary of the Interior with respect to relocation to Avondale, Maryland.

Amendment No. 81: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: pursuant to section 17 of Public Law 100-440 (102 Stat. 1743), the Secretary shall designate, within 60 days of enactment of this Act, which Department of the Interior agency component or

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers agree that the Secretary should revisit the question of which Interior agency or organizational component is most suitable for relocation to the Avondale, Maryland site formerly occupied by the Bureau of Mines as a research laboratory. The organization designated by the Secretary is to consist of no fewer than 400 people including Federal and on-site contract staff.

While public transportation is available in close proximity to the Avondale site, there is not a subway stop planned within easy walking distance of the facility. For this reason, and because the site is not readily convenient to the main Interior headquarters building, the managers are concerned about the impact the move to Avondale may have on employees within the designated organization. The managers expect the Department to make every effort to minimize adverse impacts on the employees who will be relocated to Avondale. At a minimum this should include employee counseling on the move and, to the extent practicable, assistance in placing in comparable positions elsewhere in the Department those employees who choose not to relocate. Further, the managers expect all of the designated organization to be residents at Avondale. Top management of the designated organization should not be housed at a location separate from the Avondale facility. In addition, the Secretary, in designating an organization for relocation, should consider the extent to which needed support personnel should be collocated with that organization at Avondale.

Amendment No. 82: Deletes House proposed limitation on the expenditure of funds for consolidation of the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement in Avondale, Maryland as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 83: The amendment changes the section number to "116". Section 116 does not prohibit the Fish and Wildlife Service from entering into a cooperative agreement with a nonprofit conservation organization for the maintenance and management of existing facilities on Matagorda Island, Texas, provided that the primary use of such facilities would involve wildlife oriented educational activities.

Amendment No. 84: The amendment changes the section number to "117".

Amendment No. 85: The amendment changes the section number to "116".

Amendment No. 86: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 118. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the term "Class II gaming" in Public Law 100-497, for any Indian tribe located in the State of Minnesota, includes, during the period commencing on the date of enactment of this Act and continuing for 365 days from that date, any gaming described in section 4(7)(B)(ii) of Public Law 100-497 that was legally operated on Indian lands on or before May 1, 1988, if the Indian tribe having jurisdiction over the lands on which such gaming was operated, requested the State of Minnesota, no later than 30 days after the date of enactment of Public Law 100-497, to negotiate a Tribal-State compact pursuant to section 11(d)(3) of Public Law 100-497.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment will allow one additional year for tribes in Minnesota to enter into a compact with the State of Minnesota to operate Class II games under the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act of 1988.

Amendment No. 87: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted in said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 119. This section shall be effective only on October 1, 1989.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers agree to restrict the applicability of this provision to one day.

Amendment No. 88: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 120. Section 13 of Public Law 93-531, as amended (25 U.S.C. 460d-12), is hereby amended by inserting the word "and" after the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (b)(2), by striking out the semicolon and the word "and" after the word "subsection" at the end of subparagraph (b)(3) and inserting a period in lieu thereof, and by striking out all of subparagraph (b)(4): Provided, That section 32 of Public Law 93-531, as amended (25 U.S.C. 640d-30), is hereby amended by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) by December 1, 1989, the Secretary of the Interior, with the advice of the Navajo Tribe and the Office of Navajo and Hopi Indian Relocation, shall submit to the Congress a conceptual framework for the expenditure of the funds authorized for the Navajo Rehabilitation Trust Fund. Such framework is to be consistent with the purposes described in subsection (d) of this section.": Provided further, That section 32 of Public Law 93-531, as amended (25 U.S.C. 640d-30), is further amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f), and by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (g).

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This language clarifies the responsibilities of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the Navajo Rehabilitation Trust Fund. The managers agree that the Secretary should prepare a report to the Congress, by December 1, 1989, which provides a framework for the use of the Navajo Rehabilitation Trust Fund. The report should provide a long-term conceptual plan which addresses the problems resulting from relocation and the purposes of the trust fund with respect to addressing those problems. The report is to be coordinated with the Navajo Nation and with the Office of Navajo and Hopi Indian Relocation. Further the managers expect the Navajo Tribe to provide the Committees, by February 1, 1990, with a report on how funds appropriated in fiscal year 1990 for the trust fund will be expended, consistent with the framework reported by the Secretary. The managers agree that, prior to submission to the Committees, the report shall be submitted concurrently for review and comment to the Commissioner of the Office of Navajo and Hopi Indian Relocation and the Secretary of the Interior. Those comments and the response to them by the Navajo Tribe are to be submitted to the Committee along with the report. The Secretary will have final approval authority on all expenditures from the Fund. Because this appropriation eventually is to be repaid from the proceeds of the Paragon Ranch, the managers expect the Committees to be kept appraised of progress in developing the coal resources on the Paragon Ranch. The managers expect to see progress in this area before approving any future appropriations.

Amendment No. 89: Deletes Senate provision requiring a report within 90 days on steps to be taken to further research on an inexpensive means of coverting salt water to fresh water. The managers direct the Secretary to provide such a report to the Appropriations Committees and the authorizing committees with jurisdiction over water research within 90 days of enactment of the accompanying bill.

Amendment No. 90: Deletes Senate provision regarding restrictions on the procurement of advisory or assistance services by the Department of the Interior.

TITLE II—RELATED AGENCIES

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

FOREST SERVICE

FOREST RESEARCH

Amendment No. 91: Appropriates $147,182,000 for forest research instead of $149,435,000 as proposed by the House and $142,392,000 as proposed by the Senate. The net decrease from the amount proposed by the House consists of the following increases: for forest protection research, $300,000 for dogwood anthracnose; for resource analysis research, $70,000 for hardwood materials research at Princeton, WV; for timber management research, $58,000 for growth and yield research, and $122,000 for silviculture and genetics research at Moscow, ID, $182,000 for habitat classification research at Boise, ID, $150,000 for timber management alternatives at Monticello, AR, and $50,000 for Northeast spruce fir research at Orono, ME; for forest environment research, $106,000 for sedimentation research at Boise, ID, $53,000 for streamside systems research at Seattle, WA, $250,000 for forest/atmosphere monitoring in Vermont (to be incorporated into the global climate change research program), $112,000 for watershed management research at Parsons, WV, and $146,000 for hydrologic evaluation at Oxford, MS; for forest products research, $438,000 for timber bridge research, including $288,000 at Madison, WI and $150,000 for cooperative agreements with West Virginia University, and $85,000 for hardwoods utilization research at Princeton, WV; and the following decrease: for forest protection research, $50,000 for tree stress research at Hamden, CT, $106,000 for fusiform rust research at Athens, GA, $159,000 for gypsy moth research at Corvallis, OR, $106,000 for wood decay research at Madison WI, $200,000 for fire suppression research at Missoula, MT, $360,000 for global climate change research, and $100,000 for tropical foresty research; for resource analysis research, $180,000 for fire economics research at Riverside, CA, $85,000 for recreation research at Burlington, VT, and $50,000 for tropical forestry research; for timber management research, $106,000 for pine research at Pineville, LA, $104,000 for growth and yield research at St. Paul, MN, $106,000 for research on nitrogen-fixing plants at Research Triangle Park, NC, $106,000 for vegetation control research at Macon, GA, $124,000 for long-term productivity research at Portland, OR, $132,000 for global climate change research, $300,000 for tropical forestry research, and $250,000 for old growth research; for forest environment research $112,000 for coldwater fish habitat research at Blacksburg, VA, $106,000 for climate change at Otto, NC, $190,000 for global climate change research, $197,000 for tropical forestry research, and $840,000 for spotted owl research; and for forest products research, $106,000 for combustion products research at Madison, WI, $100,000 for surface metallurgy research at the Oregon Graduate Center and Madison, WI, and $100,000 for tropical forestry research.

Included within the total funding provided is an increase of $1,051,000 for old growth research, including $750,000 to initiate the old growth management research and demonstration project; and an increase of $1,170,000 for accelerating spotted owl research. The managers request that the Forest Service provide the Committees with a report describing the expected products and timelines for completion of field research and publication of results from the old growth and spotted owl research efforts. The Forest Service should also include estimates of funding necessary to accelerate publication of final reports.

STATE AND PRIVATE FORESTRY

Amendment No. 92: Appropriates $105,506,000 for State and private forestry instead of $89,906,000 as proposed by the House and $111,356,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase from the amount proposed by the House consists of increases of $4,400,000 for the Appalachian Integrated Pest Management program, $1,000,000 for the stewardship program, $2,500,000 for the economic diversification through rural development initiative, $1,000,000 for wood utilization, $2,700,000 for the timber bridge initiative, $500,000 for economic diversification studies, and $6,000,000 for a matching grant to the National Arbor Day Foundation for construction of the National Arbor Day Center; and a decrease of $2,500,000 to the tropical forestry initiative.

The grant to the National Arbor Day Foundation is to be matched equally with non-Federal funds.

The managers note that the language in the Senate report (101-85) regarding the Idaho Centennial Trail does not apply to the Spokane Centennial Trail in Washington. The managers direct the Forest Service to maintain the reimbursement plan (as outlined in the memo dated December 2, 1988 by the Associate Deputy Chief of the Forest Service) currently in operation for the completion of the Spokane trial. The possibility exists that private sources of funding will provide $800,000 to cover a portion of the construction costs for the Spokane trial. This is part of the total $6,1000,000 in local matching funds to be raised in fiscal year 1990. The managers agree that up to $800,000 of the Federal grant may be used to cover other related costs incurred to complete the Spokane trail.

The Forest Service should report on the results of the economic diversification studies performed with the funds provided in fiscal year 1989, and plans for the use of the fiscal year 1990 funds, by March 1, 1990.

Included within the tropical forestry initiative funds are $1,100,000 for technical assistance, $1,250,000 for training and $150,000 for support to international organizations. The Forest Service should provide a report on the use of these funds prior to the fiscal year 1991 hearings, including a discussion of additional opportunities that could be addressed in this area, encompassing non-Federal and international cooperators, along with associated costs.

The Forest Service and its urban forestry program are directed to assist the city of Chicago to develop and implement its play to beautify the city.

Amendment No. 93: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: : Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, a grant of $3,600,000 shall be provided to the Washington State Parks and Recreation Commission for completion of the Spokane River Centennial Trail: Provided further, That a grant of $6,000,000 shall be made to the National Arbor Day Foundation as a matching grant for the construction of the National Arbor Day Center in Nebraska City, Nebraska.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House of the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment provides the final year of funding for completion of the Spokane River Centennial Trail, and provides funding for a matching grant to the National Arbor Day Foundation.

NATIONAL FOREST SYSTEM

Amendment No. 94: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which appropriates $1,149,232,000 for the national forest system instead of $1,132,426,000 as proposed by the House and $1,141,013,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House of the amendment of the Senate.

The increase over the amount proposed by the House consists of increases of $225,000 for land line location; $26,500,000 for road maintenance; $6,986,000 for timber sales preparation; $1,000,000 for timber stand improvement; and $388,000 for wildlife and fish; and decreases of $79,000 for minerals, related to timber support for region 6; $498,000 for facilities maintenance; $8,935,000 for fuels management, which is funded in the new firefighting appropriation account; $1,000,000 for trail maintenance; $1,339,000 for timber resource inventory; $1,839,000 for silvicultural examination; $2,082,000 for recreation use; $1,963,000 for range management; and $558,000 for soil, water, and air management, associated with timber support in region 6.

The managers have concurred in the House proposal to fund all activities related to the Tongass National Forest out of the Tongrass Timber Supply Fund (TTSF). The funds provided will allow a timber sales program of 340 million board feet, plus 40 million board feet from excess receipts and the salvage fund, for a total of 380 million board feet for the Tongass National Forest. As such, those non-timber items normally funded from the National Forest System and Construction accounts are funded out of the TTSF. Language has been included, however, permitting the Tongass to benefit from increases provided above the President's Budget in various non-timber program areas, within the National Forest System account, including recreation and fish and wildlife. The following table identifies the funding recommendation for the Tongass:

For the operations of the national forest system, the managers have refrained, with a few limited exceptions, from earmarking specific dollar amounts within the various budget line items. The managers are aware of the demands placed on the many units of the national forest system, and have attempted to provide funding to address these requirements. In particular, the managers are aware of the trail maintenance needs of the Mount Baker/Snoqualmie, Chequamegon, and Monongahela National Forests, the management and study needs of newly designated components of the Oregon Wild and Scenic Rivers system, the recreation, wilderness, and fish and wildlife needs of the Monongahela National Forest, and new recreation areas such as the Winding Stair Mountain National Recreation and Wilderness Area, and the elk habitat winter range requirements on the Apache-Sitgraves National Forest. The managers have also removed the specific earmarks related to the region 6 timber program for this account.

During fiscal year 1989, the Forest Service assumed responsibility for approximately 720,000 acres of land in Nevada, which were transferred from the Bureau of Land Management during the 100th Congress. As such, the managers provide the following earmarks for the Toiyabe National Forest: minerals management, $175,000; lands administration, $85,000; forest fire protection, $254,000 in the new firefighting account; road maintenance, $10,000; timber management, $31,000; recreation management, $364,000; wildlife and fish management, $50,000; range management, $161,000; soil, water and air management, $8,000; and general administration, $22,000. Within the increase for range management, there are funds for the new wild horse and burro territories included in this transfer.

The increase for land line location consists of an increase over the House level of $400,000 to restore the fiscal year 1990 base level and an offsetting decrease of $175,000 associated with timber support in region 6. Within the funds provided for road maintenance, $200,000 is earmarked for the Monongahela National Forest, to address safety concerns. The decrease recommended for timber resource inventory consists of a decrease of $2,339,000 for the earmark for sales preparation in region 6, and an increase of $1,000,000 for habitat inventory for spotted owls and old growth. The total funding recommended in timber resource inventory for spotted owl is $4,200,000. This includes $4,000,000 for old growth inventories and $200,000 for the old growth management project. The decrease for silvicultural examination consists of a decrease of $2,339,000 associated with the earmarks for region 6, offset by an increase of $500,000, which leaves an increase over the fiscal year 1989 level.

The managers have recommended an increase of $6,986,000 for timber sales preparation. This increase consists of an increase from the House level of $1,600,000 to restore the reductions assumed for a lower timber program of 11.210 billion board feet (BBF), and a restoration of the $11,500,000 reduced by the House for below-cost sales. These adjustments result in a total timber sales preparation level of $119,000,000, which will support a fiscal year 1990 timber program of 11.283 BBF. The managers have agreed to the following distribution of volume by region:

Region:	Volume (million board feet)
1	1,138
2	370
3	400
4	435
5	1,800
6	4,600
8	1,345
9	810
10	385
Total	11,283

The amount included for region 6 is an approximate amount, because the timber sales program in region 6 in fiscal year 1990 will include both 1989 and 1990 sales, under the terms of section 318 of this Act.

Both the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations heard testimony regarding the development and implementation of the Timber Sales Program Information Reporting System (TSPIRS). As a result, each Committee recommended additional areas of evaluation and improvement as TSPIRS is implemented. The managers wish to emphasize and recommend the following areas for review: (1) methods of handling road construction costs; (2) the treatment of litigation and appeals costs; and (3) the utility of creating an additional TSPIRS report relating costs to actual receipts and displaying costs associated with multiple-use management. The Forest Service should work with the General Accounting Office in preparing to address these concerns at the fiscal year 1991 budget hearings. The managers also urge the Forest Service to continue to work expeditiously on the development of an all-resource accounting system.

On the issue of below-cost sales, the managers continue to struggle with an assessment of the timber program which fully encompasses all aspects of the program. The Forest Service should continue to keep the Committees apprised of efforts to improve the benefits to costs ratio of the program. The managers request the Forest Service to develop, by March 1, 1990, an analysis of the estimated costs that would be necessary for the non-timber programs to cover the costs of such sales if such sales were done for a particular purpose such as fire presuppression, wildlife habitat or recreation. The Forest Service should include in the report any other strategies or options for dealing with this issue.

With respect to the issue of minimum bids, the Forest Service should report to the Committees prior to the fiscal year 1991 hearings on options for the use of minimum bids. This report should address how and when to use minimum bids, and the potential impacts of such use.

On the matter of timber theft, the managers expect the Forest Service to report on the status of the action items in the timber theft plan prior to the fiscal year 1991 hearing. Before moving from log scaling to tree measurement and changes to the residual appraisal value system and lump sum sales, the Forest Service is to report to the Committees, by February 1, 1990, on the benefits of such policy changes versus estimated costs necessary to accomplish them.

In region 8, to the maximum extent feasible, the Forest Service should maintain the fiscal year 1989 and 1990 timber offer targets included herein while it makes revisions to the red-cockaded woodpecker handbook by moving forward in the pipeline sales outside of colony areas. In any event, the managers intend that the land and resource management plans be followed in the region. Future offer volumes for the region will be addressed in the appropriate fiscal year.

Of the decrease below the House level for recreation use, the managers have recommended decreases of $1,500,000 for cultural resources management, and $582,000 associated with timber support in region 6. For wildlife and fish activities, the managers have recommended an increase of $388,000 above the House level. This consists of decreases of $2,000,000 for surveys of spotted owls, which leaves a total of $3,000,000; $1,000,000 for endangered, threatened and sensitive species; $612,000 for timber support in region 6; and increases of $1,000,000 for wildlife and fish support, $500,000 for inland fish habitat; and $2,500,000 for anadromous fish habitat. The managers agree that a proportional amount of recreation and wildlife increases may be used for additional challenge cost-share projects. The managers encourage the Forest Service to pursue aggressively and proportionately cost share opportunities in all, rather than selected, program areas. None of the funds provided in inland fish habitat or endangered and threatened species are earmarked, except for $1,600,000 for plants. Of the funds provided for anadromous fish habitat, the Forest Service is to continue the level of effort from prior years associated with activities on the Green Mountain and White Mountain National Forests.

Within the funds available for the spotted owl inventory activities, funds should be made available for surveying spotted owls in the Olympic National Park, WA. The Forest Service is requested to seek the cooperation of the National Park Service in carrying out the surveys in the Park.

The decrease of $1,963,000 recommended from the House level for range management consists of decreases of $1,800,000 for range vegetation management, $80,000 for wild horses and burros, and $83,000 associated with timber support for region 6. The increases allowed for range vegetation management are to be used to carry out the recommendation in the recent GAO reports particularly with regard to improvements in riparian areas and reducing overstocked areas. The managers intend that the Forest Service give full consideration to the noxious weed requirements in Idaho and Montana. Within soil and water, the Forest Service is to continue the water quality monitoring effort of prior years in the Bull Run watershed.

Amendment No. 95: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which extends the availability of funds in the National Forest System account until September 30, 1991.

FOREST SERVICE FIREFIGHTING

Amendment No. 96: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

FOREST SERVICE FIREFIGHTING

For necessary expenses for forest fire suppression and presuppression on or adjacent to National Forest System lands or Department of the Interior lands, and for forest fire protection and emergency forest fire rehabilitation of National Forest System lands, $561,139,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That such funds are to be available for repayment of advances to other appropriation accounts from which funds were previously transferred for such purposes.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment appropriates $561,139,000 for Forest Service firefighting instead of no funds as proposed by the House and $556,139,000 as proposed by the Senate. The House had proposed $552,533,000 for Forest Service firefighting in the firefighting account included under the Bureau of Land Management, and $8,935,000 under the National Forest System account. The increase over the amount proposed by the Senate is $5,000,000 for fire protection.

CONSTRUCTION

Amendment 97: Appropriates $221,960,000 for construction instead of $222,199,000 as proposed by the House and $180,094,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net decrease below the House consists of increases of $227,000 for administrative facilities construction on the Monongahela National Forest; $1,000,000 for recreation construction at the Winding Stair Mountain National Recreation and Wilderness Area, OK;' $200,000 for planning of an interpretive center for the Lewis and Clark Trail, MT; $130,000 for geotechnical investigations and design at the Corney Lake dam, Kisatchie National Forest, LA; $50,000 to complete a conceptual plan for a branch of the Ketchikan visitor center at Hydaburg, Prince of Wales Island, Tongass National Forest, AK; $929,000 for recreation construction on the Monongahela National Forest, WV; $1,500,000 for planning and design of a research laboratory in conjunction with Northern Arizona University, Flagstaff, AZ; $225,000 for construction of a water line at the Princeton, WV Forestry Sciences Laboratory; and a decrease of $4,500,000 for unspecified recreation construction.

With respect to recreation construction needs throughout the national forest system, the managers are concerned about the establishment of priorities on a region-by-region, and therefore nationwide basis. Using the current forest plans, the Forest Service should report to the Committees by February 1, 1990 on the process for evaluating nationwide recreation priorities to ensure that funding shortfalls and inequities are addressed. The managers are concerned that not enough evaluation is provided at headquarters to assess the priorities of the different regions before funds are allocated.

Within road construction, the managers expect the Forest Service to report, by December 1, 1989, on the final allocation of the total funding provided among the various elements of the program, as included in the budget explanatory notes.

Of the recreation funds provided, the managers agree to the following earmarks: $490,000 for the Leith Run Recreation Area, Wayne NF, Ohio; and $155,000 for recreation facilities on Mount Graham, AZ. In trail construction, the managers agree to provide $123,000 associated with the facilities on Mount Graham, AZ; $642,000 for Mount St. Helens; $400,000 for the Wayne National Forest, OH; $150,000 for the Tehipite Valley Trail, CA, with the Forest Service to identify sources of State and private funding and voluntary labor for this project; $300,000 for planning and construction of bike and foot trails in Colorado, for the Routt National Forest and the Arapaho National Forest, which is administered by the White River National Forest; $361,000 for Winding Stair Mountain NR and WA, OK; and $406,000 for the Monongahela National Forest, WV.

The managers have no objection to the use of $108,000 for Lander Office Stage II construction, Shoshone National Forest, WY.

The Forest Service should work with the National Park Service to develop a national policy for the interpretation of America's historic trails.

Amendment No. 98: Appropriates $38,993,000 for construction of buildings and other facilities instead of $39,232,000 as proposed by the House and $21,594,000 as proposed by the Senate. The net decrease below the amount proposed by the House consists of the changes listed in Amendment No. 97.

Amendment No. 99: Earmarks $182,967,000 for construction of forest roads and trails as proposed by the House instead of $158,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 100: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides $1,500,000 for the Federal share of road reconstruction for improved access to the Monongahela National Forest, WV. These funds will be matched equally by non-Federal funds.

Amendment No. 101: Restores House proposed language stricken by the Senate which provided a ceiling of $112,000,000 in new authority for construction of forest roads by timber purchasers. Additional carryover authority will be available.

LAND ACQUISITION

Amendment No. 102: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which appropriates $63,433,000 for land acquisition instead of $61,988,000 as proposed by the House and $45,013,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers agree to fund acquisition at Pere Marquette W&SR, MI from unobligated balances remaining for Kirtlands Warbler habitat.

CATASTROPHIC FIRE COMPENSATION FUND

Amendment No. 103: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have appropriated not to exceed $3,000,000 for settlement of claims for property lost or damaged in the fires that occurred in and around Yellowstone National Park in 1988.

In considering claims for losses that arise from the Mink, Clover-Mist, Storm Creek, and Canyon fires that occurred in and around Yellowstone National Park in 1988, the Forest Service and National Park Service shall analyze all such claims filed within 90 days of enactment of this Act under the normal procedures for handling such claims. The agencies shall report to the Appropriations Committees by March 1, 1990 on the status of each claim, the amount requested, and the determination by the agency, if complete, of whether the claim should be paid.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS, FOREST SERVICE

Amendment No. 104: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert: : Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, moneys received from the timber salvage sales program in fiscal year 1990 shall be considered as money received for purposes of computing and distributing 25 per centum payments to local governments under 16 U.S.C. 500, as amended: Provided further, That amounts necessary shall be available from deposits into the salvage sale fund for salvage of timber damaged by Hurricane Hugo to the maximum extent possible without regard to the geographic origin of the funds

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have agreed to include language which provides that receipts from the timber salvage sales program shall be considered as money received for purposes of distributing the 25 percent payments to local governments. The need for this provision arose because of extensive fire years experienced recently. Salvage sales of timber burned in those fires will continue to be sold during fiscal year 1990, offsetting green sale volumes which would normally result in receipts to be shared with local governments. This action is not intended to set a precedent for any changes in the basis for calculating the local share of timber receipts in the future, and the managers believe the authorizing committees should review the salvage sale fund to determine if any changes are needed in the fund's authorizing legislation.

This amendment also provides that salvage funds can be used to aid in the recovery and salvage efforts underway in South Carolina subsequent to the destruction caused by Hurricane Hugo in September, 1989. The language allows the use of salvage funds, irrespective of the geographic origin of the funds, to assist in these efforts.

Amendment No. 105: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter striken by said amendment, amended to read as follows: That such excess amount made available for the overall purposes of this section shall not exceed $65,000,000: Provided further, That an additional $32,000,000 shall not be subject to the per centum allocations of subsequent provisions of this section and shall be made separately available solely for implementation of the timber sales program included in this Act as described in the accompanying statement of the managers and shall be used soley for the necessary expenses of such timber sales program including, but not limited to, timber sales administration and management (including all timber support costs) and construction and design of roads: Provided further, That the $32,000,000 shall only be provided after all other sources of funds, appropriated and non-appropriated, have been utilized to the fullest extent possible: Provided further,

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have included bill language directing the Secretary of the Treasury to make available to the Secretary of Agriculture timber receipts above the fiscal year 1989 receipts estimate of $920,000,000 included in the President's fiscal year 1990 budget submission. These receipts are accruing because of high timber harvest levels and increased stumpage prices. Bill language precludes the use of mid-session adjustments in calculating the amount to be provided to the Forest Service and also requires that this transaction be made without reductions for the payments to be made to local governments under 16 U.S.C. 500, as amended.

The distribution of $65,000,000 of these funds is provided for in the bill language and recognizes the multiple use nature of national forest system lands. The language will provide much needed funding in the non-commodity programs, as well as increasing the likelihood that the Forest Service will have adequate volume of timber prepared to sustain the timber offer volumes of recent years in the outyears, absent policy changes. The managers do not intend the 1990 timber sales program to differ significantly from the 11.283 billion board feet program outlined under the National Forest System account.

An additional $32,000,000 is provided for necessary timber sales administration and management, including all timber support costs, and design and construction of forest roads. Of this amount, $12,000,000 is provided in support of the Region 6 spotted owl agreement included in section 318 of this Act. The remaining funds are provided for design and construction of forest roads necessary to meet the timber sales program outlined above.

The managers wish to reiterate that the funds provided in excess of the $65,000,000 are not to be used until all other funds (appropriated and non-appropriated dollars) are exhausted. However, the aforementioned $12,000,000 in excess receipts associated with the Region 6 spotted owl agreement shall become available as soon as that Region's appropriated and non-appropriated funds have been expended. These excess receipts shall be released as needed, and are not contingent on the availability of funds in any other Forest Service region.

Similarly, if all available funds are exhausted in other regions, funds may be made available from the $20,000,000 designated for those other regions without consideration of the availability of funds in Region 6. The managers expect that the Forest Service will review all funds available on a nationwide basis to determine if it might be possible to reallocate available appropriated and non-appropriated funds among regions before using any of the $32,000,000 authorized in this section.

In addition to the report required to be submitted by the Chief within 30 days after the fiscal year 1991 budget is submitted on the amount and distribution of the $65,000,000 provided under this amendment, the Forest Service shall submit a report to the Committees as soon as a decision is made that all available funds have been exhausted in a region, and that additional funds will be used from this source for the purposes provided in the amendment. The report should include a breakdown of all funds obligated to date, and a breakdown of the amounts to be provided from excess receipts, and how and where such funds are to be used. The Forest Service shall also submit a report, as soon after the end of fiscal year 1990 as possible, detailing the actual distribution and expenditures of funds received under this provision, and the actual outputs achieved.

Amendment No. 106: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which clarifies House proposed language providing that excess receipts shall be made available to the Forest Service without reductions to payments under the Act of May 23, 1908.

Amendment No. 107: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

Notwithstanding section 705(a) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 539d(a)), $52,441,000 shall be available for timber supply, protection and management, research, resource protection, and construction on the Tongass National Forest in fiscal year 1990: Provided, That all of the funds available from the Tongass Timber Supply Fund in fiscal year 1990 pursuant to section 705(a) of Public Law 96-487 shall be deemed obligated as of October 1, 1989 and shall remain available until expended: Provided further, That this funding limitation shall not include those funds available to the Forest Service as National Forest System (except for timber sales administration and management funds), Trust Funds, Permanent Funds (other than the Tongass Timber Supply Fund), Timber Receipts, or Purchaser Road Construction.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

As discussed under Amendment No. 94, the managers have agreed to include all funding for the Tongass National Forest under the Tongass Timber Supply Fund, and to limit spending to $52,441,000, with the specific exceptions to this limitation listed.

Amendment No. 108: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have provided additional funds from excess timber receipts to specified program elements if a specific national forest attained its annual average allowable sale quantity.

Amendment No. 109: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have directed the Secretary of the Treasury to make timber receipts available in order to allow for the preparation of timber sale volumes equal to the target of 125 percent of the average annual allowable sale quantity.

Amendment No. 110: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert: Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Forest Service is directed to compensate Davis Sheep Company, Monteview, Idaho, for reasonable expenses incurred as a result of mortality of permitted animals and moving permitted animals from one location to another as directed by the Forest Service: Provided, That in no event should expenses be less than $85,000: Provided further. That up to an additional $27,500 is authorized if the Forest Service, in conjunction with Davis Sheep Company, determines additional losses were incurred.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have agreed to bill language providing funds to compensate for livestock losses incurred as a result of actions taken to conserve and protect grizzly bears. Funding of $85,000 is provided immediately and up to an additional $27,500 could be provided if it is demonstrated that higher losses were sustained. Any amount above $85,000 should be submitted by the Forest Service to the Committees on Appropriations following the normal reprogramming procedures.

Amendment No. 111: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert: : Provided further, That no funds provided in this title may be expended by the Forest Service to implement a new fee schedule or increase the fees charged for communication site use of lands administered by the Forest Service above the levels in effect on January 1, 1989.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment deletes Senate proposed language dealing with dissemination of program information through non-monetary items of nominal value, and inserts new language regarding fees charged for communication site use.

The managers agree that the Forest Service should report to the Committees by March 1, 1990 on how it will ensure that any proposed fee increases for communication site use on Forest Service lands will adequately reflect local fair market conditions. The managers are particularly concerned that a market survey approach to establishing site fees may result in an inequitable fee schedule for rural areas.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY

Amendment No. 112: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which adds the word "replacing" to the definition of clean coal technology. The managers agree that the inclusion of "replacing" for clean coal IV and V is intended to cover the complete replacement of an existing facility if, because of design or site specific limitations, repowering or retrofitting of the plant is not a desirable option.

Amendment No. 113: Appropriates $450,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 for clean coal technology instead of $500,000,000 as proposed by the House and $325,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. This appropriation along with $125,000,000 provided for fiscal year 1991 in Amendment 114 fully funds the third round of clean coal technology projects. The managers agree that additional manpower is required, particularly at the Department's Energy Technology Centers, in order to manage adequately the increased workload from the accumulation of active clean coal technology projects and the inclusion of additional procurements in this bill. Although a legislative floor is not included, the managers agree that at least eighty personnel will be required in addition to the approximately thirty FTE's now included in the fossil energy research and development appropriation. The managers agree further that funds from the fossil energy research and development appropriation should not be used to pay the cost of more than the equivalent FTE's paid under that account in fiscal year 1989.

Amendment No. 114: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert: and shall remain available until expended, and $125,000,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The amendment provides $125,000,000 in fiscal year 1991 for the third clean coal technology procurement instead of $75,000,000 as proposed by the House and $100,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 115: Deletes Senate proposed appropriation of $150,000,000 for fiscal year 1992 for clean coal technology. The House proposed no such appropriation.

Amendment No. 116: Restores House language stricken by the Senate which prohibits the use of supplemental, backup, or contingent project selections in clean coal technology procurements.

Amendment No. 117: Restores the word "further" stricken by the Senate.

FOSSIL ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Amendment No. 118: Appropriates $422,062,000 for fossil energy research and development instead of $422,660,000 as proposed by the House and $407,090,000 as proposed by the Senate. The net decrease below the amount proposed by the House consists of increases of $250,000 for advanced research in control technology for ceramic filters and novel separation and cleanup research at Morgantown Energy Technology Center (METC); $100,000 for inhouse IGCC research, $125,000 for IGCC subpilot particle control, and $100,000 in supporting research and development, all in gas stream cleanup; $250,000 for a waste water project in Wyoming in waste management; $450,000 for turbine and gas stream cleanup research in coal utilization, $300,000 for gas turbine component research, $250,000 for instrumentation and diagnostics, $200,000 for technical and economic analyses, and $360,000 for university coal research including historically black colleges, all in advanced research and technology development; $150,000 for atmospheric fluidized bed (AFB) combustion; $500,000 for pressurized fluidized bed (PFB) combustion to offset the use of funds for close out of the NYU contract, and $200,000 for design of a research combustion unit, both in PFB combustion; $1,600,000 for molten carbonate fuel cells; $1,200,000 for diesel engine contracts in heat engines; $400,000 for required environmental work in underground coal gasification; $400,000 for design and construction of a 12-inch gasifier, $100,000 for inhouse research on sulfur capture, $300,000 for technical assistance for site specific combined cycle assessments, and $1,200,000 for turbine valve testing, all in the coal gasification power production program; $100,000 for model development in the coal gasification industrial fuel program; $100,000 for continuation of the four existing research facilities, $1,000,000 for a bench-scale unit to convert char to clean carbon, $400,000 for transportation applications research, $300,000 for characterization of co-products, and $700,000 for inhouse research and reactor construction, all in the coal gasification co-products program; $1,500,000 for microbial recovery and reservoir wetability work in enhanced oil recovery; $400,000 for inhouse research, $300,000 for rock fragmentation research, and $250,000 for preliminary work on a cost-shared oil shale facility, all in oil shale; $200,000 for western tight sands, $750,000 for optimization of natural gas-fired fuel cells, $300,000 for gas hydrates, and $300,000 for deep source gas research, all in unconventional gas recovery; and $500,000 to complete the METC adminstrative facility; and decreases of $500,000 for coal drying studies, and $500,000 for hi-bay testing at Pittsburgh Energy Technology Center (PETC), both in coal preparation; $300,000 for scale-up of combined SO_2/NO_x technology, and $250,000 for advanced separations, both in flue gas cleanup; $1,000,000 for a particle control test facility at Wilsonville, Alabama in gas stream cleanup; $1,000,000 for the general House add for coal utilization, components, and instrumentation, in advanced research and technology developments; $1,100,000 for advanced research in coal liquefaction; $200,000 for the Wilsonville pilot facility in direct liquefaction; $1,200,000 for the LaPorte pilot facility in indirect liquefaction; $200,000 for support studies in coal liquefaction; $650,000 for advanced research in combustion systems, which allows $500,000 for mineral transformation and ash transport and deposition work at PETC in addition to the work at METC included in the Senate report; $550,000 for advanced sorbents in PFB combustion; $400,000 for industrial combustors, and $300,000 for small scale proof-of-concept combustors, both in advanced combustion; $100,000 for fuels characterization, $200,000 for storage, transport, and handling systems, and $300,000 for fire tube boiler tests, all in alternative fuels utilization; $500,000 in phosphoric acid fuel cells; $1,000,000 in tubular solid oxide fuel cells; $2,000,000 for magnetohydrodynamics; $500,000 for oxygen production research in the industrial fuel gasification program; $750,000 for cost-shared geoscience contracts and $630,000 for tar sands, both in enhanced oil recovery; $100,000 for gas-to-liquids research in unconventional gas recovery; $103,000 for cooperative research and development, leaving $2,371,000 for the University of North Dakota Energy and Minerals Research Center (UNDEMRC) and $2,321,000 for Western Research Institute (WRI); and $1,800,000 for renovation of PETC facilities.

The managers agree that:

1. the waste water project for low rank coals in Wyoming which is provided a total of $1,750,000, including $854,000 in unobligated prior year funds, should be at an existing facility, should be cost-shared and should evaluate several coals. The managers have no objection to the project being performed under the memorandum of understanding with the State of Wyoming, as long as none of the Federal funds are used to cover State overhead charges;

2. no funds are to be provided for construction of a hospital waste fluidized bed combustion project without at least fifty percent cost-sharing from other sources;

3. funding for the molten carbonate fuel cell program is provided to continue current contractors at existing levels and to initiate immediately a competitive, cost-shared procurement for further development of fuel cell power plants. The proposed procurement should reduce the number of full scale development efforts to two, and should provide stack research funding to the third developer;

4. up to 5 percent of internal (non-contract) research and development funds for METC, PETC, WRI, UNDEMRC, and the National Institute for Petroleum and Energy Research (NIPER) may be used for equipment, and such use should continue to be reported on a quarterly basis;

5. no more than one percent of each budget category may be used for technical and program management support. Such support should continue to be shown separately for each research and development activity in budget documents;

6. support for Argonne National Laboratory should continue at levels equivalent to previous fiscal years with emphasis on research programs;

7. a detailed geoscience implementation plan with funding options should be submitted to the Appropriations Committees by March 31, 1990. The managers are disturbed that after at least two years of development a comprehensive research strategy is not yet available. It is increasingly difficult to justify continued high levels of support for this program absent a research framework. The managers expect the Department to expedite the publication of such a strategy so that it can be used as a basis for developing the detailed implementation plan due in March, 1990;

8. the Department may initiate the design of a large scale fixed bed gasifier for power production within available funds. Proceeding with the design does not imply commitment to construction of such a facility, and no large expenditures should be undertaken absent a comprehensive program plan justifying its need and specific Congressional approval;

9. significant light oil research should be managed by the Metairie site office, including existing and new research and development projects and technology transfer and outreach activities throughout the region so that office personnel are utilized fully;

10. the amount for the Gravimelt coal cleaning process does not include funds for major equipment purchases;

11. funds for the Calderon project are only available to the extent they are matched on a 20-percent cost-sharing basis by project sponsors;

12. the increase of $800,000 for bioprocessing of coal in advanced research and technology development is for programs at Idaho National Engineering Laboratory (INEL);

13. within funds for support studies in coal liquefaction, the Department should update base case economics for indirect liquefaction;

14. funds for the scale-up of one process to approximately one ton per hour from existing programs in the coproducts coal gasification program should be awarded on a competitive basis with a minimum of 20 percent cost-sharing;

15. the total of $4,896,000 provided for PETC facility renovation may be used for either administrative facilities (Building 922), or the chemical engineering laboratory (Building 89). Additional estimated costs of $3,200,000 are necessary through 1992 to complete the projects;

16. in the several instances where the Senate and House provided the same level of program funding but the Senate provided a more detailed breakdown below those levels, there is no objection to the use of the lower levels as program guidance;

17. $750,000 in the oil shale program is to support the development of a comprehensive plan and justification for a proposed oil shale facility involving in-situ processing of western shales as well as possible surface processing of mined materials and wastes. Such a facility would require a minimum of 60 percent costsharing by non-Federal sources. No commitment to construction of such a facility should be inferred from current year funding;

18. the fundamental thermodynamics program at NIPER should continue to be funded at levels at least equivalent to fiscal year 1989 (approximately $1,000,000);

19. within the funds for advanced research in coal liquefaction, $1,500,000 is to continue support of the Consortium for Fossil Fuel Liquefaction Science;

20. a more comprehensive program for cooperation between States and the Federal Government for oil and gas research and development is necessary. The current practice of negotiating individual, unrelated Memoranda of Understanding with individual States on an "ad hoc" basis does not provide a structure which assures individual States or regions equitable treatment, nor does it necessarily assure adherence to a set of national objectives. The managers agree that the Department should establish, using available funds, a formal Federal-State cooperative program in oil and gas research and development, requiring a minimum of 50 percent cost-sharing by the States. Such a program should be modeled on the highly successful Federal-State cooperative water program of the U.S. Geological Survey. As a minimum the program should define Federal priorities, establish a formal project review process at a regional level, allow for the participation of universities and industry in State projects, and be operational by fiscal year 1991;

21. a revised schedule and projected funding to complete the June, 1984 cost-shared MHD program should be submitted to the Appropriations Committees by February 1, 1990;

22. awards for the Historically Black Colleges and Universities program under the university coal research program in advanced research and technology development should be made on a competitive basis;

23. funds contained in the House-passed bill for selective coalescence ($250,000) should be applied to selective coagulation processes; and

24. the Department shall investigate proven long reach horizontal drilling technology embodying multiple radials from a single vertical well to enhance oil and gas production, particularly in environmentally sensitive areas. The technology should also apply to unconventional gas, coal bed methane, salt dome interconnection, and remediation of hazardous wastes, including nuclear wastes, under buildings and facilities. The Department shall submit a report to the Appropriations Committees on this technology no later than February 1, 1990, including the costs of implementing a cost-shared demonstration of the technology.

Amendment No. 119: Earmarks $4,000,000 for construction of DOE Fossil Energy building B26 at METC as proposed by the Senate instead of $3,500,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 120: Earmarks $40,900,000 for the magnetohydrodynamics program instead of $37,000,000 as proposed by the Senate and $42,900,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 121: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: : Provided further, That section 303 of Public Law 97-257 is further amended by changing the number for the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Fossil Energy to "715", changing the number of the Pittsburgh Energy Technology Center to "290", changing the number for the Morgantown Energy Technology Center to "275", and changing the number for the headquarters organization of the Assistant Secretary for Fossil Energy to "not less than 125".

ALTERNATIVE FUELS PRODUCTION
(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

Monies received as investment income on the principal amount in the Great Plains Project Trust at the Norwest Bank of North Dakota, in such sums as are earned as of October 1, 1989, shall be deposited in this account and immediately transferred to the General Fund of the Treasury.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers agree to amend the allocations of personnel floors to the individual organizations within Fossil Energy and also agree to increasing the overall floor to 715 positions. The floor at PETC is increased from 280 to 290 positions; the floor at METC is increased from 250 to 275 positions which is intended to include the Laramie Project Office in Wyoming; the floor at headquarters is reduced from 135 to 125; and the unallocated floor is reduced from 35 to 25 which is intended to include the Bartlesville Project Office in Oklahoma, and the office in Metairie, Louisiana.

The managers are concerned about the growing size of the headquarters organization given the fact that most program management activities are located in the field. Of particular concern is the increasing number of non-career appointments in the headquarters operation. Recognizing that the legal requirements are floors and not ceilings the Congress has not compelled the Department to reduce personnel in the headquarters organization and has provided sufficient funding to continue the approximate staffing levels now in place. The managers except the Department to review carefully the headquarters functions and staffing with the goal of prudently reducing the overall size of the staff. The managers do not expect such review or any anticipated staff reductions to involve Reductions in Force (RIFs) or widespread involuntary transfers of staff to the field.

With regard to the Alternative Fuels Production account, the managers have identified interest income accrued from deposits in a trust fund established as part of the sale of the Great Plains Gasification Plant in Beulah, North Dakota. This revenue is being used to offset other Department of Energy fossil energy requirements, and is estimated to be approximately $8,800,000.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Amendment No. 122: Appropriates $413,262,000 for energy conservation instead of $411,367,000 as proposed by the House and $413,441,000 as proposed by the Senate. The net increase above the amount proposed by the House consists of increases of $100,000 for windows and daylighting, and $450,000 for building retrofit research, both in building systems; $900,000 for district cooling demonstrations in community systems; $300,000 for research on foaming agents and refrigerants in technology and consumer products; $200,000 for the Federal Energy Management Program; $300,000 for research on biodegradable plastics in waste energy reduction; $900,000 for the metals initiative in process efficiency; $100,000 for energy analysis and diagnostics centers; $1,160,000 for implementation of the Alternative Motor Fuels Act of 1988; $500,000 for battery research, $400,000 for the site operators' user task force, and $650,000 for vehicular fuel cell applications, all in electric and hybrid vehicle research; $300,000 for combustion, $450,000 for thermal sciences, $500,000 for fuel cell technology, and $1,250,000 for materials, all in energy conversion and utilization technology; and $3,000,000 for State grants; and decreases of $175,000 for non-CFC insulation, $100,000 for roofs, $200,000 for advanced energy design in commercial buildings using integrated computer systems, $100,000 for building performance simulation, and $100,000 for wall research, all in building systems; $250,000 for district heating and cooling research, and $90,000 for mine water heat recovery in Scranton, PA in community systems; $250,000 for lighting research in technology and consumer products; $200,000 for least cost utility planning; $100,000 for capital equipment in buildings programs; $300,000 for industrial heat pumps, $400,000 for liquid/solid waste conversion, and $1,000,000 for National Lab support, all in industrial waste energy reduction; $300,000 for process electrolysis, $700,000 for sensors and controls, and $1,200,000 for materials processing other than the metals initiative, all in industrial process efficiency; $500,000 for turbine development, and $400,000 for non-CFC air conditioning research and window glazings, both in vehicle propulsion; $500,000 for user groups and data collection in alternative fuels utilization; $70,000 for propulsion systems, $200,000 for test and evaluation, and $80,000 for National Lab support, all in electric and hybrid vehicle research; $200,000 in advanced materials; $300,000 for the operation of the High Temperature Materials Laboratory; $500,000 for capital equipment in transportation; $500,000 for tribology, and $50,000 for international programs, both in energy conversion and utilization technology; $100,000 in multisector technology assessment and transfer; $400,000 for multisector capital equipment; and $300,000 for policy and analysis.

The managers agree that:

1. with respect to the schools and hospitals program, States may continue to allocate funds for technical assistance activities in the manner and under the conditions described in House Report 101-120;

2. with respect to the purchase of electric vehicles for the site operators' user task force, priority should be given to placing vehicles in areas of the country with air quality problems, and the Federal share of vehicle purchase costs may not exceed 50 percent. Further, in no case can Federal funds be used to reduce the purchase cost to participants of electric vehicles to levels below the cost of an equivalent non-electric vehicle;

3. funds provided for district cooling demonstrations in community systems may be used only for engineering and design work on demonstrations, and the Federal share of such costs may not exceed 25 percent;

4. funds included for heat pump research in technology and consumer products include work on desiccant cooling;

5. funds included for the metals initiative should be allocated first to continue existing work on schedule. After such allocation remaining amounts may be used for new initiatives;

6. funds for electric vehicle battery research are for the highest priority, most promising, and innovative concepts, and are not earmarked in specific amounts to any battery technology;

7. funds for energy conversion and utilization technology (ECUT) are not earmarked below the level of detail in House Report 101-120;

8. the additional $3,000,000 for State grants shall be allocated to low income weatherization, schools and hospitals, energy extension service, and State conservation program grants in the same proportion as the base program level of $200,000,000;

9. of the total of $4,500,000 provided for implementation of the Alternative Motor Fuels Act of 1988, $700,000 is for the competitive demonstration of natural gas-powered heavy duty vehicles in conjunction with engine manufacturers, and $1,200,000 is for a program with West Virginia University to develop, construct and operate a transportable heavy duty engine dynamometer laboratory to test engine emissions and to be capable of handling all alternative and petroleum based fuels;

10. the $2,500,000 for CFC related research is for a program of research on materials compatibility and lubricants for substitute refrigerants to replace restricted CFC compounds, and should include cost-sharing or in-kind contributions of 25% by industry collaborators. The work should be coordinated with EPA so that efforts are not duplicative. The managers also agree that the work with industrial consortia should be expedited to the extent possible because of the short deadlines of the "Montreal Protocol";

11. $2,150,000 is included for work on proton exchange membrane (PEM) fuel cells for transportation applications of which $500,000 is allocated to ECUT for a limited duration program of research on generic basic research issues related to enabling technology. The overall management of the remainder of the PEM fuel cell program should be assumed by the Department's Office of Transportation Systems. Within these funds, the Department should initiate a competitive procurement with the objective of contracting with a major automotive firm for a comprehensive cost-shared program for a PEM fuel cell propulsion system with the goal of a proof-of-concept test-bed vehicle in the mid-to-late 1990's. Cost-sharing from other sources such as the California South Coast Air Quality Management District also should be sought. To the extent feasible existing work in Energy Storage should be coordinated and integrated with this program, including work on electrochemical research, and membrane technology;

12. the Hawaii methanol project is included in the alternative fuels utilization program at $300,000;

13. funding for the Scranton mine water heat recovery and district heating and cooling projects is the final increment for these activities; and

14. the Department of Energy has failed to meet Appropriations Committee reporting deadlines for a number of requests made during the fiscal year 1989 appropriations process. Most notably, the Department was asked to submit a report related to the operation of the Weatherization Program by February 1, 1989. A letter was received from the Assistant Secretary for Conservation and Renewable Resources requesting an extension until June 1989. The managers note that this request for an extension was dated after the original due date. Subsequently, the report was not delivered to the Committee until September, more than three months after the extended deadline, with no explanation for the delay.

The Committees request such reports to assist in evaluating program performance and funding needs. Clearly the Department submitted this report much too late to be useful during the Committee's deliberations on fiscal year 1990 budget requests, despite repeated requests for its timely submission. Consequently, the managers expect the Secretary to develop a formal system to track requests by the Committees on Appropriations. This system should include as a minimum all reports requested from the Department in either the House or Senate Committee reports or in this Statement of the Managers, listing the subject of the report; the due date; and internal dates for clearance by appropriate offices within the Department to ensure timely submission to the Congress. A listing of such reports should be transmitted by the Secretary to the Committees not later than November 1, 1989.

Amendment No. 123: Earmarks $203,000,000 for State energy conservation grant programs instead of $200,000,000 as proposed by the House and $205,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers agree that the additional $3,000,000 above the amount earmarked by the House is to be allocated to the individual grant programs in the same proportion as the base program of $200,000,000.

Amendment No. 124: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment that earmarks $16,900,000 for steel and aluminum research instead of $16,000,000 as proposed by the House and $15,900,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

ECONOMIC REGULATION

The managers agree that the Economic Regulatory Administration (ERA) should continue to provide administrative support as budgeted in fiscal year 1990 to the fuels programs transferred to fossil energy research and development. The estimated costs of such support are $102,000. Fossil energy should assume such costs in the fiscal year 1991 budget process.

SPR PETROLEUM ACCOUNT

Amendment No. 125: Appropriates $227,820,000 for acquisition and transportation of petroleum for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve as proposed by the Senate instead of $319,407,000 as proposed by the House. The managers agree to the Senate position providing an approximate daily rate of fill for the Reserve of 50,000 barrels based on a $17.50 per barrel price for oil. Funding a higher fill rate is precluded by budget constraints.

Amendment No. 126: Deletes House proposed outlay ceiling for fiscal year 1990 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 127: Appropriates $108,458,000 for acquisition and transportation of petroleum in fiscal year 1991 as proposed by the House instead of $79,625,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers agree that the advance appropriation for fiscal year 1991 is for purchases of oil to be delivered in the first quarter of the fiscal year.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES

Amendment No. 128: Appropriates $1,185,910,000 for Indian Health Services instead of $1,189,330,000 as proposed by the House and $1,160,093,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decrease from the amount proposed by the House consists of increases of $5,000,000 for the Alaska community health aide program, $1,800,000 under the mental health program for indigent Indians in North and South Dakota committed to an institution by tribal courts, $527,000 for a residential treatment center during pregnancy for Alaska Native Women, $703,000 for immunization, including $242,000 for hepatitis screening and testing and $461,000 for the HIB prevention program in Alaska, and $550,000 for urban health, including $300,000 for Phoenix and $250,000 for Flagstaff; and decreases of $1,000,000 for health professions loan repayment, $2,000,000 for the health promotion/disease prevention initiative (with the balance of $3,000,000 to be allocated by IHS), $1,000,000 for information resource management, $1,000,000 for the mental health initiative, and $7,000,000 for tribal contract conversion.

The $470,000 provided for staffing and equipment for the Siletz clinic is to be used for a demonstration project, regarding how the funding needs of tribes which provide facilities outside of the IHS priority funding process can be met.

The $1,800,000 mental health increase for indigent Indians will be available for the purpose of contracting for mental health and chemical dependency treatment services from the North Dakota Department of Human Services and the State of South Dakota. These services under contract will be available to indigent Indian persons, resident in North or South Dakota, or on reservations located therein, and placed at State government treatment facilities by the Indian Health Service. Such funds shall not be used for any other purpose.

The $500,000 increase provided for the community health representatives program should be provided to all newly-recognized tribes which have not yet had a CHR program established, using IHS standards for distribution of the funds based on population. The managers understand the Klamath tribe will receive about $62,000 and the Grand Ronde tribes will receive about $44,000.

The managers agree that the $1,500,000 increase for scholarships shall consist of $750,000 to initiate the special nursing program and $750,000 for the regular scholarships program.

The increase of $10,000,000 for inflationary cost increases includes funds for increases in contractual health care costs. The IHS is urged to work with the Hoopa Tribe in California to assist in developing a plan for a community health facility, and to report back to the Committees on the feasibility and costs of such a proposal by March 1, 1990.

For the model diabetes program, there is an increase of $1,500,000 provided for five additional centers, including one for the Zuni Pueblo, NM.

Within the alcoholism program, there is $100,000 for fetal alcohol syndrome research at the University of Washington. Within the total provided for contract health care, there is $5,000,000 to address the backlog of deferred services. The managers expect IHS to continue to work with Sage Memorial Hospital in AZ and Mid-Dakota Hospital in SD to provide for ongoing contract care services in these areas.

Within the increase for Arizona urban health programs, a priority should be placed on prenatal treatment, particularly in Phoenix.

The managers understand that the Public Health Service budget includes $992,000 for AIDS programs in IHS, and that these funds will be transferred to IHS for its use. Of this amount, at least $350,000 should be provided to the urban health programs. The AIDS funds should be distributed based on a plan emphasizing education and prevention, and after tribal consultation.

The managers note that the language in the Senate report regarding a recent court decision should refer to on-reservation rather than off-reservation Indians.

The managers agree with the directives in the Senate report for material to be included in the IHS budget justification, including self-determination activities, new facilities' costs, newly recognized tribes, details of hospital and clinic funding, Medicare/Medicaid reimbursements, end stage renal disease, and equipment needs and priorities.

Amendment No. 129: Restores language and changes the sum proposed by the House for the conversion of tribal contracts and agreements to a calendar year basis. The funding proposed by the managers is $16,000,000 in budget authority only instead of $23,000,000 as proposed by the House and no funding as proposed by the Senate.

The managers request that IHS submit a report on the logistical and accounting needs for tribal contract conversion to the Committees, prior to using any of these funds for such conversions. The report should address the option and costs of converting all IHS contracts to a calendar year basis.

Amendment No. 130: Provides $17,000,000 for the Indian Catastrophic Health Emergency Fund and contract care as proposed by the House, instead of $15,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase is $2,000,000 for the Catastrophic Health Emergency Fund.

Amendment No. 131: Provides $3,000,000 for the health professions loan repayment program, instead of $4,000,000 as proposed by the House and $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

INDIAN HEALTH FACILITIES

Amendment No. 132: Appropriates $70,996,000 for Indian health facilities instead of $75,420,000 as proposed by the House and $65,535,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase over the amount proposed by the Senate consists of increases of $6,000,000 for sanitation facilities and $461,000 for personnel quarters, Kotzebue, AK; and a decrease of $1,000,000 for Pine Ridge, SD personnel quarters.

Within the total of $31,000,000 provided for sanitation facilities, the following amounts are earmarked: $1,644,000 for the Seneca, NY water project; $1,471,000 for Tohono O'odham (which does not include funds for cash reserves for the tribal utility organization); $980,000 for the Quileute Tribe, WA; $450,000 for the Zuni Pueblo, NM; and $1,250,000 for the city of Kotzebue, AK, with an equal matching amount to be provided from non-Federal sources. The IHS should also work with the Oglala Sioux and Pleasant Point Passamaquoddy Tribes to begin to address their needs in fiscal year 1990.

The managers agree that funds in the amount of $2,750,000 reprogrammed from the Navajo "New Lands" project in fiscal year 1989 do not need to be restored to that project until such funds are ready to be used. The IHS should inform the Committees when the funds will be needed.

With regard to the Belcourt, ND personnel quarters project, IHS should inform the Committees as soon as information is available as to the number of housing units that will be required at this location.

The amount of $1,000,000 has been provided for Pine Ridge, SD personnel quarters, instead of $2,000,000 as proposed by the House and Senate, since the lower amount will allow the project to proceed on schedule with site development activities.

The managers agree that IHS shall use the $10,000,000 included for repair and improvement projects for the highest priority projects; and shall include a breakdown of the projects funded in the fiscal year 1991 budget justification.

The managers have included $3,759,000 for the Sallisaw, OK replacement health center. If additional funds are needed for this project when the IHS is ready to award a contract, the managers agree that IHS may reprogram additional funds to this project, to provide up to a total of $4,165,000, from available unobligated construction funds. IHS should inform the Committees promptly of any shortfall in funds for the project, and the source of funds to be reprogrammed.

The managers request a joint report from IHS and the Bureau of Indian Affairs on the possibility of including detoxification facilities in BIA detention facilities, to be submitted to the Committees by March 1, 1990.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

OFFICE OF ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION

INDIAN EDUCATION

Amendment No. 133: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert: $74,149,000 of which $55,041,000 shall be for subpart 1 and $16,361,000 shall be for subpart 2 and 3: Provided, That $1,600,000 available pursuant to section 5323 of the Act shall remain available for obligation until September 30, 1991: Provided further, That appropriations for subpart 2 remaining unobligated at the end of fiscal year 1989, which would otherwise be returned to the general fund of the Treasury, shall be merged with and made a part of the fiscal year 1990 Indian Education appropriation and shall remain available for obligation until September 30, 1990.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The amendment appropriates $74,149,000 for Indian education as proposed by both the House and the Senate but earmarks the amounts for subparts 1, 2, and 3 as proposed by the House; earmarks $1,600,000 for fellowships for Indian students to remain available until September 30, 1991, as proposed by the House instead of an unspecified amount as proposed by the Senate; and provides for funds appropriated in fiscal year 1989 for the pilot gifted and talented program to remain available for obligation through fiscal year 1990.

The managers expect the Office of Indian Education to work with the tribally-controlled community colleges to enable them to develop acceptable proposals for the gifted and talented pilot program.

OTHER RELATED AGENCIES

OFFICE OF NAVAJO AND HOPI INDIAN RELOCATION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The managers agree that the Office of Navajo and Hopi Indian Relocation should coordinate with Tribal officials with respect to discretionary fund expenditures and report to the Committees, no later than two weeks prior to the first of the Office's fiscal year 1991 budget hearings before the Committees, on tribal recommendations including those which cannot be accommodated.

INSTITUTE OF AMERICAN INDIAN AND ALASKA NATIVE CULTURE AND ARTS DEVELOPMENT

PAYMENT TO THE INSTITUTE

Amendment No. 134: Appropriates $4,350,000 for payment to the Institute instead of $4,650,000 as proposed by the House and $3,500,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decreases from the amount proposed by the House consist of $200,000 for operation of the Institute and $100,000 for payment to the Institute endowment fund.

Amendment No. 135: Reported to technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: , of which $100,000 shall be transferred immediately from the Institute endowment fund to the Institute for use in Institute operations: Provided, That notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the annual budget proposal and justification for the Institute shall be submitted to the Congress concurrently with the submission of the President's Budget to the Congress.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment provides for transfer of $100,000 from the Institute's endowment fund to the operating account of the Institute, and directs that the Institute's annual budget submission will be submitted to the Congress at the same time as the President's Budget is submitted. In accordance with law, the Institute's budget is not to be revised by the Administration prior to submission to the Congress.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

Amendment No. 136: Appropriates $228,553,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $231,981,000 as proposed by the House and $223,029,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decrease from the amount proposed by the House consists of decreases of $465,000 to the tropical forestry initiative, $130,000 to the Tropical Research Institute, including $30,000 for the Quincentenary and $100,000 for staffing and equipping the Barro Colorado Island laboratory, $75,000 for two positions and related costs at the National Zoo, $40,000 for the Environmental Research Center, $75,000 for African-American programs, $245,000 to the National Museum of Natural History for the Quincentenary, $135,000 to the National Museum of American History for the Quincentenary, $60,000 to the National Museum of American Art for a curator position, $61,000 to the Cooper-Hewitt Museum for support for the new building, $2,000,000 to the Museum of the American Indian (leaving $4,000,000, including $100,000 for training of Native Americans), $87,000 to public service, leaving $21,000 for a position in the Office of Public Affairs, $40,000 to the Office of Quincentenary Programs, and $15.000 to the Office of Folklife Programs for the Quincentenary.

The managers expect the Smithsonian to proceed with the master plan for the Anacostia Museum during fiscal year 1990, and to present a full report on its status to the Committees prior to the fiscal year 1991 hearings.

The managers are concerned with the Smithsonian's failure to notify both House and Senate Appropriations Committees in advance before using trust funds to acquire new facilities which are expected to result in additional Federal expenditures. The Smithsonian should ensure that all such plans are presented sufficiently in advance of such acquisitions to allow the Committees to review such plans and to respond appropriately.

REPAIR AND RESTORATION OF BUILDINGS

Amendment No. 137: Appropriates $26,769,000 for repair and restoration of buildings instead of $26,869,000 as proposed by the House and $26,653,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decrease from the amount proposed by the House is for renovation of the new Cooper-Hewitt building.

CONSTRUCTION

Amendment No. 138: Appropriates $8,320,000 for construction instead of $12,900,000 as proposed by the House and $7,550,000 as proposed by the Senate. The change from the amount proposed by the Senate includes: increases of $150,000 for planning for the Tropical Research Institute floating laboratory and $620,000 for planning related to the Museum of the American Indian.

In proceeding with the planning for the floating laboratory, the managers request the Smithsonian to look for ways to bring the total cost down under the current estimates for the vessel, and expect a report prior to the 1991 hearings.

With regard to the Museum of the American Indian, the managers are concerned about the accuracy of the cost estimates for construction of the proposed Museum facilities, and the potential for significant increases in these estimates. Future budget submissions should contain a detailed project cost baseline before construction funds are requested, and should also reflect cost-sharing proposals using non-Federal funds.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

Amendment No. 139: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which appropriates $40,712,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $40,789,000 as proposed by the House and $40,744,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the management of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The change from the amount proposed by the House consists of decreases of $52,000 for two new positions and $25,000 for telephone and postage.

REPAIR, RESTORATION, AND RENOVATION OF BUILDINGS

Amendment No. 140: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which appropriates $1,805,000 for repair, restoration and renovation of buildings instead of $1,905,000 as proposed by the House and $2,305,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The decrease from the amount proposed by the House is due to a delay in the schedule for the Sculpture Garden.

WOODROW WILSON INTERNATIONAL CENTER FOR SCHOLARS

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

Amendment No. 141: Appropriates $4,700,000 for salaries and expenses as proposed by the Senate instead of $4,611,000 as proposed by the House.

The managers agree that the Center should set the maximum fellowship rate at the GS-14, Step 1 level and should not hire one of its fellows at the statutory pay cap. Instead, the managers expect the Center to use the resultant $31,000 savings to help offset the fiscal year 1990 impact of the 1989 pay rise.

NATIONAL FOUNDATION ON THE ARTS AND THE HUMANITIES

GRANTS AND ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 142: Appropriates $144,105,000 for grants and administration, National Endowment for the Arts, instead of $144,205,000 as proposed by the House and $143,005,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers agree to the following distribution:

Arts in Education	$5,600,000
Dance	8,850,000
Design Arts	4,150,000
Expansion Arts	6,500,000
Folk Arts	3,300,000
Inter-Arts	4,000,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 153: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: : Provided, That—

(A) None of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce materials which in the judgment of the National Endowment for the Arts or National Endowment for the Humanities may be considered obscene, including but not limited to, depictions of sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts and which, when taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value.

(B) It is the Sense of the Congress:

(1) That under the present procedures employed for awarding National Endowment for the Arts grants, although the National Endowment for the Arts has had an excellent record over the years, it is possible for projects to be funded without adequate review of the artistic content or value of the work.

(2) That recently works have been funded which are without artistic value but which are criticized as pornographic and shocking by any standards.

(3) That censorship inhibits and stultifies the full expression of art.

(4) That free inquiry and expression is reaffirmed. Therefore, be it resolved:

(a) That all artistic works do not have artistic or humanistic excellence and an application can include works that possess both non-excellent and excellent portions.

(b) That the Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts has the responsibility to determine whether such an application should be funded.

(c) That the National Endowment for the Arts must find a better method to seek out those works that have artistic excellence and to exclude those works which are without any redeeming literary, scholarly, cultural or artistic value.

(d) That a commission be established to review the National Endowment for the Arts' grant making procedures, including those of its panel system, to determine whether there should be standards for grant making other than "substantial artistic and cultural significance, giving emphasis to American creativity and cultural diversity and the maintenance and encouragement of professional excellence" (20 U.S.C. 954(c)(1)) and if so, then what other standards. The criteria to be considered by the commisson shall include but not be limited to possible standards where (a) applying contemporary community standards would find that the work taken as a whole appeals to a prurient interest; (b) the work depicts or describes in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct; and (c) the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious artistic and cultural value.

(c)(1) There is hereby established a temporary Independent Commission for the purpose of:

(a) reviewing the National Endowment for the Arts' grant making procedures, including those of its panel system; and

(b) considering whether the standard for publicly funded art should be different than the standard for privately funded art;

(2) The Commission shall be composed of twelve members as follows:

(a) four members appointed by the President;

(b) four members appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in consultation with the minority leader of the House of Representatives;

(c) four members appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the President pro tempore of the Senate in consultation with the minority leader of the Senate;

(d) the chairman shall be designated by vote of the Commission members; and

(e) a quorum for the purposes of conducting meetings shall be seven.

(3) Members of the Commission shall serve without pay. While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in Government service are allowed expenses under 5 U.S.C. 5703.

(4) The Commission may, for the purpose of carrying out its duties, hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence, as the Commission considers appropriate.

(5) The Commission shall issue a report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate no later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(6) The Commission shall expire on September 30, 1990.

(7) Expenses of the Commission not to exceed $250,000, including administrative support, shall be furnished by the National Endowment for the Arts

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have agreed to language which reaffirms the declaration of freedom of expression for American artists, writers, composers, dramatists and all practitioners of the arts which was contained in the Senate report when the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities were created in 1965.

The managers agree that the House and Senate have no wish to nor do they intend by expressing their views herein to censor NEA or to impose their views on NEA.

The managers agree that NEA erred in approving the grants for the exhibiting publicly of certain controversial photographs by Robert Mapplethorpe and by granting a fellowship for Andres Serrano, whose subsequent work included a photograph of a crucifix in a jar of urine.

The managers agree that such grants do not come within the requirement of the NEA statute that "only applications and projects be funded that in the context in which they are presented, in the experts' view, foster excellence, are reflective of exceptional talent, and have significant literary, scholarly, cultural or artistic merit." (20 U.S.C. 959)

The managers are of the opinion that it is the sense of the Congress that the procedures of NEA and its panels system can be and should be improved to assure that the Chairman and Council of NEA will be able to carry out their statutory responsibility of reviewing all grants.

The managers agree that a commission of qualified persons should be appointed to review procedures of NEA and its panels looking to their improvement for grantmaking.

Amendment Nos. 154–157: Restore section numbers proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate.

Amendment No. 158: Deletes Senate language which would have prevented expenditure of funds for training activities for the purpose of directing or encouraging (1) the organization or implementation to protest social conditions, and (2) any form of civil disobedience.

Amendment Nos. 159–162: Restore section numbers proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate.

Amendment No. 163: Restores language stricken by the Senate limiting planning, preparation, or offer for sale timber of giant sequoia trees located on National Forest System or Bureau of Land Management lands.

In developing the management implementation plan to protect the giant sequoia, the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management should be mindful of the need to protect the environment in the vicinity of the giant sequoia trees. The giant sequoia has a relatively shallow root system and to denude the area around each tree would leave the tree more liable to uprooting by winds and erosion of the soil around the root system. As such, the management plan to protect the giant sequoia should incorporate appropriate zones to protect the giant sequoia trees from clearcutting and its effects.

Amendment No. 164: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

SEC. 315. Section 9(a)(3) of Public Law 100-580 (102 Stat. 2932) is amended by inserting after the term "Council." the following: "The Yurok Transition Team may receive grants and enter into contracts for the purpose of carrying out this section and section 10(a) of this Act. Such grants and contracts shall be transferred to the Yurok Interim Council upon its organization.": Provided, That using $750,000 appropriated in the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act, 1990, under "General Investigations, Corps of Engineer Civil", the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, is directed to continue engineering and design of the McCook and Thornton Reservoirs, which are features of the Chicago and Underflow Plan: Provided further, That with respect to claims resulting from the performance of functions, during fiscal year 1990 only, or claims asserted after the effective date of this Act, but resulting from the performance of functions prior to fiscal year 1990, under a contract, grant agreement, or cooperative agreement authorized by the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975, as amended (88 Stat. 2203; 25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.) or by Title V, Part B—Tribally Controlled School Grants of the Hawkins-Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988, as amended (102 Stat. 385; 25 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.), an Indian tribe, tribal organization or Indian contractor is deemed to be part of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the Department of the Interior or the Indian Health Service in the Department of Health and Human Services while carrying out any such contract or agreement and its employees are deemed employees of the Bureau or Service while acting within the scope of their employment in carrying out the contract or agreement: Provided further, That upon the effective date of this legislation, any civil action or proceeding involving such claims brought hereafter against any tribe, tribal organization, Indian contractor or tribal employee covered by this provision shall be deemed to be an action against the United States and will be defended by the Attorney General and be afforded the full protection and coverage of the Federal Tort Claims Act: Provided further, That beginning with the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991 and thereafter, the appropriate Secretary shall request through annual appropriations funds sufficient to reimburse the Treasury for any claims paid in the prior fiscal year pursuant to the foregoing provisions: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall in any way affect the provisions of Section 102(d) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975, as amended (88 Stat. 2203; 25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.).

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the Amendment of the Senate.

The amendment limits grants and contracts to the Yurok Transition Team for the purposes of carrying out the Team's functions pursuant to the Hoopa-Yurok Settlement Act, clarifies funding of a Corps of Engineers project, and expands the coverage of the Federal Tort Claims Act to the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service for Indian contractors. No similar House language was proposed. Senate language on the Hoopa-Yurok Settlement Act had broader applicability then the agreed upon amendment.

The amendment expands the Senate proposed language in amendments 51, 52, and 53 to include the Indian Health Service in addition to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Amendment No. 165: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

SEC. 316. Effective sixty days after enactment of this Act, the Forest Service is directed to assure an immediate supply of timber from the Kootenai National Forest and to protect the environment: Provided, That pending implementation of the Forest Service's final agency action on the Upper Yaak Decision Area, as defined in the Upper Yaak Draft Environmental Impact Statement, the Forest Service is directed to expeditiously prepare, offer, and supervise the harvest of timber from the lodgepole pine timber type, as defined in the Upper Yaak Draft EIS, in the Upper Yaak Decision Area: Provided further, That adequate environmental assessments for certain timber sales in the Upper Yaak Decision Area have been completed and are adequate, decision notices have been issued, no appeals have been filed, and the time period for appeals as specified in Forest Service regulations has expired: Provided further, That the Forest Service action taken pursuant to this section shall comply with the Kootenai National Forest Plan: Provided further, That no construction of new system roads shall be permitted in the Upper Yaak River Drainage: Provided further, That this section does not in any manner represent a judgement upon the legal adequacy or in any way affect the final decision made in the development or implementation of the Upper Yaak Final EIS.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment delays for sixty days the Senate proposed amendment allowing the Forest Service to proceed with supplying timber in the Upper Yaak Decision Area in the Kootenai National Forest in Montana. The House has no provision. The amendment will allow a reasonable time for interested parties to resolve their differences on timber sales plans.

Amendment No. 166: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

SEC. 317. Section 320 of Public Law 98-473 (98 Stat. 1974) as amended by Section 316 of Public Law 100-446 (102 Stat 1826) is further amended by deleting the period and inserting ":Provided, That nothing contained herein shall prohibit an agreement between an Indian tribe or tribal organization and the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Health and Human Services, pursuant to the Indian Self-Determination Act as amended (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.), under which such tribe or tribal organization may retain rents and charges for the operation, maintenance, and repair of such quarters.".

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The amendment makes technical corrections to the Senate-proposed language that would allow tribal contractors instead of the Bureau of Indian Affairs or the Indian Health Service to collect rent to be used for operations and maintenance of the quarters in situations when the Federal Government retains title to the quarters, but the occupants of the quarters are funded under programs contracted to tribes. The House had no similar provision.

Amendment No. 167: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter by said amendment, insert:

SEC. 318. (a) From funds appropriated under this Act or otherwise made available—

(1) The Forest Service shall offer, notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Timber Contract Payment Modificaiton Act of 1984 (16 U.S.C. 618(a)(5)(C)), an aggragate timber sale level of seven billion seven hundred million board feet of net merchantable timber from the national forests of Oregon and Washington for fiscal years 1989 and 1990. Such timber sales shall be consistent with existing land and resource management plans or land and resource management plans as approved except, in the case of the Mapleton Ranger District of the Siuslaw National Forest, Oregon, such sales shall be consistent with the preferred alternative of the draft land and resource management, plan and accompanying draft environmetnal impact statement dated October 1, 1986 pending approval of a final land and resource management plan for the Siuslaw National Forest: Provided, That of the seven billion seven hundred million board foot aggregate timber sale level of fiscal years 1989 and 1990, timber sales offered from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington known to contain northern spotted owls shall meet an aggregate timber sale level for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 of five billion eight hundred million board feet of merchantable timber; Provided further, That the sales volume shall be distributed in the same proportion between Oregon and Washington national forests known to contain northern spotted owls based on the average sale volumes for fiscal years 1986 through 1988 and;

(2) The Bureau of Land Management shall offer such volumes as are required in fiscal year 1990 to meet an aggregate timber sale level of one billion nine hundred million board feet for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 from its administrative districts in western Oregon.

(b)(1) In accordance with subsection (b)(2) of this section, all timber sales from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington known to contain norther spotted owls prepared or offered pursuant to this section shall minimize fragmentation of the most ecologically significant old growth forest stands. "Old growth forest stands" are defined as these stands meeting the criteria according to Forest Service Research Publication #RNW-447. In those instances where the Forest Service, after consultation with the advisory boards established pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, determines that the definition in Forest Service Research Publication #PNW-447 is not fully applicable in national forests known to contain northern spotted owls, the Forest Service shall use old-growth definitions contained in its Pacific Northwest Regional Guide.

(2) To the extent that fragmentation of ecologically significant old growth forest stands is necessary to meet the timber sale levels directed by subsection (a)(1) of this section, the Forest Service shall minimize such fragmentation in the ecologically significant old growth forest stands on a national forest-by-national forest basis based on the Forest Service's discretion in determining the ecologically significant stands after considering input from the advisory boards created pursuant to subsection (c) of this section. The habitat of nesting pairs of spotted owls which are not in the Spotted Owl Habitat Areas (SOHAs) described in subsection (b)(3) of this section shall be considered as importannt factor in the identication of ecologically signicant old growth forest stands.

(3) No timber sales offered pursuant to this section from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington known to contain northern spotted owls may occur within SOHAs identified pursuant to the Final Supplement to the Environmental Impact Statement for an Amendment to the Pacific Northwest Regional Guide—Spotted Owl and the accompanying Record of Decision issued why the Forest Service on December 8, 1988 as adjusted by this subsection:

(A) For the Olympic Peninsula Province, which includes the Olympic National Forest, SOHA size is to be 3,200 acres;

(B) For the Washington Cascades Province, which includes the Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie, Okanogen, Wenatchee, and Gifford-Pinchot National Forests, SOHA size is to be 2,600 acres;

(c) For the Oregaon Cascades Province, which includes the Mt. Hood, Willamette, Rogue River, Deschutes, Winema, and Umpqua National Forests, SOHA size is to be 1,875 acres;

(D) For the Oregon Coast Range Province, which includes the Siuslaw National Forest, SOHA size is to be 2,500 acres; and

(E) For the Klamath Mountain Province, which includes the Siskuyou National Forest, SOHA size is to be 1,250 acres.

(F) All other standards and guidelines contained in the Chief's Record of Decision are adopted.

(4) In planning for the preparation and offer of timber sales authorized in subsection (a)(1) of this section, the Forest Service, to the extent possible in areas proximate to SOHA sites identified in subsection (b)(3) of this section, should exercise discretion in selecting sites and/or silvicultural prescriptions in order to retain spotted owl habitat characteristics in such areas. The Forest Service should consider the relative location and quality of such areas contiguous to the SOHAs and should give higher priority to preparing and offering sales in areas of lower quality and less important location than to areas of greater quality and more impotant location relative to the SOHAs.

(5) No timber sales offered pursuant to this section on Bureau of Land Management lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls shall occur within the 110 areas identified in the December 22, 1987 agreement, except sales identified in said agreement, between the Bureau of Land Management and the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife. Not later than thirty days after enactment of this Act, the Bureau of Land Management, after consulting with the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to identify high priority spotted owl area sites, shall select an additional twelve spotted owl habitat areas. No timber sales may be offered in the areas identified pursuant to this subsection during fiscal year 1990.

(6)(A) Without passing on the legal and factual adequacy of the Final Supplement to the Environmental Impact Statement for an Amendment to the Pacific Northwest Regional Guide—Spotted Owl Guidelines and the accompanying Record of Decision issued by the Forest Service on December 8, 1988 or the December 22, 1987 agreement between the Bureau of Land Management and the Ortegon Department of Fish and Wildlife for management of the spotted owl, the Congress hereby determines and directs that management of areas according to subsections (b)(3) and (b)(5) of this section on the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and Bureau of Land Management lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls is adequate consideration for the purpose of meeting the statutory requirements that are the basis for the consolidated cases captioned Seattle Audubon Society et al., v. F. Dale Robertson, Civil No. 89-160 and Washington Contract Loggers Assoc. et al., v. F. Dale Robertson, Civil No. 89-99 (order granting preliminary injunction) and the case Portland Audubon Society et al., v. Manuel Lujan, Jr., Civil No. 87-1160-FR. The guidelines adopted by subsections (b)(3) and (b)(5) of this section shall not be subject to judicial review by any court of the United States.

(B) The Forest Service is directed to review and revise as appropriate the decision adopted in the December, 1988 Record of Decision referenced in subsection (b)(6)(A) of this section and shall consider any new information gathered subsequent to the issuance of the Record of Decision, including the interagency guidelines for conservation of northern spotted owls developed by the Interagency Scientific Committee to address conservation of the northern spotted owl. This review, and any resulting changes to the December, 1988 decision determined to be necessary by the Forest service are to be completed and in effect not later than September 30, 1990.

(c)(1) The Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior shall name advisory boards on a national forest-by-national forest and Bureau of Land Management district-by-district basis which shall be comprised of not more than seven individuals who, in the appropriate secretary's judgment, represent a diversity of views. In the process of selecting individuals to serve on the advisory boards, the Secretaries shall make every effort to recognize the diversity of views and perspectives and allow parties which represent a cross-section of those views to participate in making recommendations in the selection of board members, provided that every effort will be made to ensure the advisory boards are comprised of an equal number of representatives of environmental and business concerns. The advisory boards shall be named not later than thirty days after enactment of this Act. The advisory boards shall provide recommendations to the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management in reviewing prospective timber sales which shall meet the timber sale levels directed by this section prior to their offer. The advisory boards shall present their advice within fifteen or forty-five days after receipt of the necessary review documents. The fifteen-day period applies to single sales and the forty-five-day period applies to multiple sales. The members of the advisory boards authorized by this section shall serve without compensation or reimbursement of expenses. The Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management are authorized to use available funds for the services of professional, independent facilitators to assist in the work of the advisory boards.

(2) The Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management shall consider the recommendations of the advisory boards once such boards are established pursuant to this section, including any suggested modifications of individual sales. The Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management shall also consider recommendations made by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on those timber sales conferred upon under Section 7(a)(4) or, if the spotted owl is listed as a threatened or endangered species, consult under Section 7(a)(2) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973, as amended (16 U.S.C. 1536 (a)(2) and (1)(4) prior to the offer of any subsequent timber sale in fiscal year 1990. These recommendations shall be considered regardless of whether the agreement provided in subsection (f)(1) of this section has been reached, entered into, and accepted by the relevant court. Adoption or rejection of such recommended modifications shall not require preparation of additional environmental documents, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, there shall be not more than one level of administrative appeal of any decision by the Forest Service or the Bureau of Land Management to undertake any activity directed by this section for timber sales to be prepared, advertised, offered, and awarded during fiscal year 1990 from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and Bureau of Land Management lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls. If an administrative stay is granted in any such appeal the Regional Forester or the Interior Board of Land Appeals shall issue a final decision on the merits within forty-five days of the date of issuance of such stay. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any party seeking to challenge a decision made after the date of enactment of this Act to prepare, advertise, offer, or award a timber sale in fiscal year 1990 from the thirteen national forests and Bureau of Land Management lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls need not exhaust their administrative remedies prior to filing suit. Nothing in this subsection shall alter the administrative appeal requirements of the Forest Service or Bureau of Land Management.

(e) Nothing in this section shall affect interagency cooperation among the Forest Service, the Bureau of Land Management, and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service under Sections 7(a)(2) and 7(a)(4) of the Endangered Species Act and its regulations.

(f)(1) Not later than two days after enactment of this Act, the Forest Service shall submit to plaintiffs in the captioned case Seattle Audubon Society et al., v. F. Dale

Robertson, Civil No. 89-160, a list of sales which had been prepared for offer in fiscal year 1989 and which contain at least 40 acres of suitable spotted owl habitat. Not later than fourteen days after receipt of such list, plaintiffs to the suit referenced in this subsection may enter into an agreement with the Forest Service releasing for sale not less than one billion one hundred million board feet of net merchantable timber. Such sales must be available for advertisement not later than fourteen days after the agreement required by this subsection is reached. Such timber sales selected shall not be subject to further judicial review by any court of the United States.

(2) If the agreement specified in subsection (f)(1) of this new section is reached, then those timber sales described in the list submitted to plaintiffs pursuant to subsection (f)(1) of this section but not contained in the agreement authorized by subsection (f)(1) of this section shall not be offered for sale in fiscal year 1990.

(3) If the agreement authorized under subsection (f)(1) of this section is not implemented within the time frames prescribed in subsection (f)(1) of this section, one billion one hundred million board feet of net merchantable timber from such sales submitted to plaintiffs pursuant to subsection (f)(1) of this section shall be selected and modified as appropriate by the Forest Service in accordance with the provisions of this section. Selected sales shall be prepared, advertised, offered, awarded and operated notwithstanding any provision of law that is a basis for any stay, injunction or order issued in the proceeding identified in subsection (f)(1) of this section: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall affect rights available under the Contract Disputes Act (41 U.S.C. 601 et seq.).

(4) The Forest Service shall, for each respective timber sale, lift its own stay or apply to the appropriate court for the lifting of the restraining order or injunction whose basis has been withdrawn by this section.

(5) Timber sales selection pursuant to subsections (f)(1) or (f)(3) of this section shall be based on the following criteria: (1) proportional distribution between Oregon and Washington national forests known to contain northern spotted owls based on the average sale volumes for fiscal years 1986 through 1988; (2) proportional distribution to the extent possible among the thirteen national forests known to contain northern spotted owls in Oregon and Washington based on the average sale volumes for fiscal years 1986 through 1988; and (3) to the extent possible, selection of sales outside the habitat of nesting pairs of spotted owls which are not in the Spotted Owl Habitat Areas described in subsection (b)(3) of this section.

(g)(1) No restraining order or preliminary injunction shall be issued by any court of the United States with respect to any decision to prepare, advertise, offer, award, or operate a timber sale or timber sales in fiscal year 1990 from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington known to contain northern spotted owls. The provisions of section 705 of title 5, United States Code shall not apply to any challenge to such a timber sale: Provided, That the courts shall have authority to enjoin permanently, order modification of, or void an individual sale if it has been determined by a trial on the merits that the decision to prepare, advertise, offer, award, or operate such sale was arbitrary, capricious or otherwise not in accordance with law: Provided further, That any challenge to a timber sale must be filed in Federal District Court within fifteen days of the date of initial advertisement of the challenged timber sale: Provided further, That for forty-five days after the date of filing of a challenge to a timber sale the affected agency shall take no action to award a challenged timber sale. Civil actions filed under this section shall be assigned for hearing at the earliest possible date and shall take precedence over all other matters pending on the docket of the court at that time except for criminal cases: Provided further, That the court shall render its final decision relative to any challenge within forty-five days from the date such challenge is brought, unless the court determines that a longer period of time is required to satisfy the requirements of the United States Constitution.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court may set rules governing the procedures of any such proceeding which set page limits on briefs and time limits on filing briefs and motions and other actions which are shorter than the limits specified in the Federal rules of civil or appellate procedure.

(3) In order to reach a decision within forty-five days, the Federal District Court may assign all or part of any such case or cases to one or more Special Masters, for prompt review and recommendations to the court.

(h) The Forest Service, the Bureau of Land Management, and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service shall submit reports updating their findings and progress as determined by the process recognized under subsection (e) of this section on a monthly basis to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives for appropriate referral. Such reports shall also include information on the extent to which recommendations of the advisory boards established pursuant to subsection (c) of this section were integrated into timber sale decisions as well as reasons for modifying or not adopting recommendations made by the advisory boards. Such reports shall be submitted as directed beginning on December 1, 1989, and ending on September 30, 1990.

(i) Except for provisions of subsection (a)(1) of this section, the provisions of this section apply solely to the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and Bureau of Land Management districts in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls. Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to require the Forest Service or Bureau of Land Management to develop similar policies on any other forest or district in Oregon or Washington.

(j) The advisory boards established under this section shall be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (86 Stat. 770).

(k) Timber sales offered to meet the requirements of subsection (a) of this section shall be subject to the terms and conditions of this section for the duration of those sale contracts. All other provisions of this section shall remain in effect until September 30, 1990.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment sets terms and conditions applicable only for fiscal year 1990 for making timber sales on Federal lands in Oregon and Washington, for managing habitat for northern spotted owls, and for minimizing fragmentation of significant old growth forest stands.

The managers have agreed to this provision because a large portion of the Forest Service's and Bureau of Land Management's (BLM) fiscal year 1989 timber sale programs on the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and five BLM administrative districts in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls have been interrupted due to legal challenges, and because these challenges have raised serious concerns about the adequacy of planned actions of the agencies with regard to managing habitat for the northern spotted owl and minimizing fragmentation of old growth stands. The managers are extremely concerned that the agencies did not pursue avenues to resolve the conflicts or more adequately address the issues raised in these legal challenges, thereby requiring the inclusion of this section. The extraordinary measures included in this section, particularly with regard to judicial processes, have been reluctantly agreed to because of the failure of the agencies to take steps on their own to resolve these matters in a manner which could have prevented the current situation. These measures included in this provision have been provided on an interim basis for fiscal year 1990 only, during which the BLM and Forest Service are expected to take further action to address these concerns, as discussed in the Act and in this statement. Except for provisions relating to timber sale volume, this section does not apply to the six National Forests in Region Six which do not contain northern spotted owls.

In developing the amendment, the managers have sought to balance the goals of ensuring a predictable flow of public timber for fiscal year 1990 and protecting the northern spotted owl and significant old growth forest stands. In reconciling these often conflicting goals, the managers have limited all provisions in this subsection to fiscal year 1990, except that the timber sales offered under this section in fiscal year 1990 are covered by its terms and conditions throughout the length of the timber sale contracts. Sales offered under this section but not awarded and withdrawn after October 1, 1990 under normal Forest Service and BLM procedures may not be reoffered in subsequent fiscal years under the terms of this section. While it may be difficult to prepare substantial new sale volumes, the managers encourage the Forest Service to make every effort possible to prepare and offer new sales as part of the fiscal year 1990 program.

The managers have included language to ensure that the fiscal year 1990 sales volume is distributed in the same proportion between the states of Oregon and Washington, and to encourage proportional distribution of sales released through subsection (f). The managers agree that the proportional distribution should be based on the time frame of fiscal years, 1986, 1987, and 1988 to reflect an accurate historic sales time period on which to base the sales program pursuant to the provisions of this section.

The amendment provides discretion to the Forest Service in the placement of timber sales proximate to Spotted Owl Habitat Areas (SOHAs). However, as the language in the Act states, the Forest Service should give consideration to the location and quality of proximate habitat in the course of sequencing areas for timber sales, by giving priority to timber sales in areas of lesser quality prior to consideration of sales of greater quality, as necessary to meet the timber targets. The agencies are also urged to give consideration in the planning, scheduling, and offering of timber sales in fiscal year 1990 to minimize, to the extent feasible, the possibility that existing spotted owl populations will become isolated.

The managers have chosen to substitute adjusted interim standards for SOHAs for national forest lands in lieu of the spotted owl management Record of Decision (ROD) published in December, 1988. The designations contained in this section are made without prejudice to the validity of the Forest Service's ROD. However, the Forest Service is directed to review its ROD and make revisions to it as appropriate. In so doing, the Forest Service should develop documentation to support any revisions to the ROD. It is expected that the agency will give careful consideration to the recommendations of the Interagency Scientific Committee in reaching any final decisions regarding revisions to the ROD. The managers expect that the agency will make available to the Congress and the public explanations of any decisions to modify or reject such recommendations.

The legal adequacy of and prohibition against judicial review of the SOHA framework established in this section should not be construed to moot future action after fiscal year 1990 in the Seattle Audubon Society/Washington Contract Loggers Association v. Robertson cases against the current Forest Service owl management ROD or any cases which may be filed against a revised ROD.

The managers expect that the Forest Service shall make every reasonable effort to complete land and resource management plans by the end of fiscal year 1990.

The managers have chosen for fiscal year 1990 to expand by 12 sites the network of SOHAs identified through the December, 1987 agreement between the Bureau of Land Management and the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife (ODFW). This expanded reservation of areas for spotted owls again is deemed adequate to address for fiscal year 1990 only the concerns raised in the Portland Audubon Society v. Lujan case. The legal adequacy of and prohibition against judicial review of the SOHA framework established in this section should not be construed to moot future action after fiscal year 1990 in the Portland Audubon Society v. Lujan case against current BLM owl management activities or any cases which may be filed against future BLM management decisions.

The BLM shall continue to work in consultation with ODFW and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to ensure that, to the extent practicable, the agencies coordinate their efforts in identifying and defining the 12 additional high priority spotted owl habitat areas.

Section (b)(6)(A) does not pass on the legal sufficiency of the existing Forest Service ROD or the BLM/ODFW agreement insofar as each addresses concerns about the northern spotted owl. However, inasmuch as subsections (b)(3) and (b)(5) establish interim SOHA standards for fiscal year 1990 which protect more habitat than currently protected by the Forest Service and BLM, subsection (b)(6)(A) removes for fiscal year 1990 the sufficiency or insufficiency of those standards as a reason for injunctive relief. These provisions do not expire for the contracts resulting from timber sales offered through September 30, 1990 and subsequently awarded under this section. Subsection (b)(6)(A) should be read in combination with subsection (g) which establishes expedited procedures for challenging timber sales in court. Together, these two subsections preserve the opportunity for judicial review of individual timber sales on a single-sale basis.

This section in no way alters application of the Endangered Species Act or other environmental laws to Forest Service and BLM management activities.

Nothing in this section is intended to prejudge any future decision with regard to the current listing process for the northern spotted owl pursuant to the Endangered Species Act, any final decisions that may be reached by a Federal court in the Seattle Audubon/Washington Contract Loggers Assoc. v. Robertson cases and the Portland Audubon v. Lujan case, any revisions that may be made by the Forest Service to the ROD or any revisions that may be made by BLM to its owl management policies. In addition, nothing in this section is intended to affect any decision by the Forest Service to offer for sale after fiscal year 1990 any timber volume which was not sold during fiscal year 1990 pursuant to subsection (f) of this section or the process by which sales are prepared and offered after fiscal year 1990.

Seven-member advisory boards are to be established to provide input on the agencies' timber sale programs. The managers intend these boards to be established on a national forest-by-national forest or BLM district-by-district basis, and to be comprised of persons knowledgeable about the resource values of the particular forest or district. The boards will review timber sales and make their recommendations about which sales should be prohibited, released, or modified in furtherance of all provisions of this section, and the agencies are urged to consider fully these recommendations. The managers intend that the boards will be comprised of and will fairly represent the diverse views of the interests affected by this section. The managers expect the advisory boards to seek to minimize conflicts involved in this issue.

The section limits administrative appeals to one level of review in each agency, and sets time limits on the resolution of appeals in cases where an action is stayed. Also, appellants need not exhaust their appeal opportunities before filing suit under the terms of this section. No other changes to the appeals process are made.

Release of 1.1 billion board feet of net merchantable timber sales prepared for the Forest Service's fiscal year 1989 program shall be achieved through either of two mechanisms: an agreement between the Forest Service and plaintiffs in the Seattle Audubon Society case or, in the absence of such an agreement on a timely basis, by the Forest Service. Sales prepared but not released under either of these mechanisms shall not be available as part of the fiscal year 1990 sale offer program.

The section narrows the time frame for filing civil actions in court and prohibits the issuance of pre-trial restraining orders and injunctions. It does encourage, however, that trials be scheduled and decided expeditiously.

The managers take note of the new Cedar river Municipal Watershed policies recently adopted by the City of Seattle for management of the City's 81 percent ownership of the watershed. The policies balance City land management in the Cedar River Municipal Watershed between habitat preservation and timber management. The United States owns about 18 percent of the Cedar River Municipal Watershed in the Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest. The managers note the long history of cooperation between the City of Seattle and the Forest Service in managing the Cedar River Municipal Watershed. The City and Forest Service have agreed in the past to use land exchanges to achieve City ownership of the wateshed for water quality protection. The managers note that the recently adopted City policies require comprehensive negotiations between the City and the Forest Service to achieve land and timber exchanges. The managers support this negotiation process and encourage both parties to continue to strive for expeditious agreement.

The Forest Service and BLM shall, upon request, make available within five working days timber sale environmental assessments and related doumentation.

The managers are encouraged by the formation of the Interagency Scientific Committee for the purpose of developing a strategy for conservation of the northern spotted owl. The managers understand that the Committee expects to complete its recommendations by no later than June, 1990 and encourage the agencies to provide necessary support to complete expeditiously the work of the Committee. The managers expect that the recommendations and report of the Committee will be made available to the public.

The managers expect that by January 30, 1990, the BLM will provide to the appropriate committees of Congress a report explaining agency actions and intentions to coordinate and integrate spotted owl management plans on its administration districts containing spotted owls. The managers further expect that the BLM will consider carefully any recommendations made by the Interagency Scientific Committee in the development of its new land and resource management plans.

Within 30 days of receipt, the Forest Service and BLM will make available to the public recommendations received from the Fish and Wildlife Service pursuant to actions undertaken in accordance with provisions of the Endangered Species Act.

Amendment No. 168: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

(d) Section 1352 of title 31, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), shall take effect with respect to Federal contracts, grants, loans, cooperative agreements, loan insurance commitments, and loan guaranty commitments that are entered into or made more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Section 319 prohibits recipients of Federal grants, contracts, loans, or cooperative agreements from using Federal funds to pay persons to influence or to attempt to influence executive or legislative decisionmaking in connection with the awarding of any contract, grant, loan or cooperative agreement.

In the case of a payment, or progress payment, received by a contractor for performance of a contract, the portion of the payment properly allocable to the contractor's profit is not appropriated funds.

The Managers agree that Federal actions defined in subsection (a)(2) do not include claims and settlements against the Federal Government. Activities related to such actions are not prohibited. The amendment is not intended to prohibit any citizen's right to petition Congress for a redress of grievances and does not proscribe legislative activities supporting or opposing programs within the purview of the government.

The section also requires that any person requesting or receiving a Federal grant, contract, cooperative agreement, loan, loan guarantee, or loan insurance, must report to the relevant agency the name of any lobbyists or consultants paid with non-Federal funds, the amounts such lobbyists or consultants were paid, and the purpose for which they were paid.

All Federal agencies will be required to file, on a semi-annual basis beginning May 31, 1990, a report compiling the information gathered regarding payments, including the names and addresses and amounts paid to all lobbyists or consultants who were paid with non-Federal funds for influencing (or attempting to influence) executive or legislative decisionmaking on Federal grants, contracts, cooperative agreements, loans, loan guarantees, or loan insurance.

The provision in subsection (c)(1) and (c)(2) sets civil penalties of a minimum of $10,000 and a maximum of $100,000 for each violation of the prohibition on the use of Federal funds to pay lobbyists and for each failure to report the information required when they are paid with non-Federal funds.

In determining whether to impose a civil penalty, and the amount of any such penalty, by reason of a violation by any person, the head of an agency shall consider the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation, the effect on the ability of such person to continue in business, any prior violations by such person, the degree of culpability of such person, the ability of the person to pay the penalty, and such other matters as may be appropriate.

The provisions do not prohibit any reasonable payments to consultants (or officers or employees of persons) for professional, technical, or other similar services in connection with meeting requirements for receiving Federal contracts, loans, or cooperative agreements.

The Managers agree that "agency and legislative liaison activities" referred to in subsection (e)(1)(A) include the provision of information requested by Federal agencies and Congress and the making of presentations to agency personnel related to the qualities and characteristics of products or services sought to be sold to the Federal Government.

Upon enactment of this section, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) will have 60 days to issue guidance to all agencies of government as to how compliance with these provisions is to be carried out. The Conferees expect that all agencies shall expeditiously promulgate regulations to implement the requirements of this section, and that all such regulations shall be uniform and shall comply with the government-wide guidance issued by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget pursuant to paragraph (b)(7). Also, major agencies, as designated by OMB, shall issue a common rule complying with the guidance issued by OMB.

The Inspector General or the equivalent, of every agency of government, is required to submit an annual report commenting on the effectiveness of each Agency's compliance with these provisions and recommending any changes that may be necessary to strengthen or improve upon these provisions.

The provision exempts grants, contracts, cooperative agreements, subcontracts and subgrants of $100,000 or less and loans (and Federal commitments to insure or guarantee loans and certain contracts and subcontracts relating to loans) that do not exceed $150,000. This serves to exempt small contractors and individuals who seek Federally-insured loans (for the purchase of personal residences, for example) from these provisions.

The definitions of "recipient" in (g)(1) and "person" in (g)(3) are expanded to exclude Indian tribes, tribal organizations, or any other Indian organization for specific purposes permitted by other Federal law. Such Indian tribes and tribal organizations are defined in (g)(11) based on the Indian Self-determination and Education Assistance Act. Alaska Natives are included for this purpose under the definitions of Indian tribes in that Act.

The Conferees have deleted provisions of the Senate amendment which would have authorized cancellation or termination of a contract, grant, cooperative agreement, loan, loan insurance, or loan guarantee for violation of the payment prohibition or the reporting requirement of this section. This action was taken in light of the Conferees' concern with the legal or practical problems raised by authorizing the head of an agency to take such action in these circumstances. The Conferees recommend that the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives review and report appropriate legislation to institute such authority as is deemed appropriate and necessary.

APPLICATION OF GENERAL REDUCTIONS

The level at which reductions shall be taken pursuant to the Deficit Reduction Act of 1985, if such reductions are required in fiscal year 1990, is defined by the Committee as follows:

As provided for by section 252(a)(1)(B)(i) of Public Law 99-177 and for the purposes of a Presidential Order issued pursuant to section 252 of said Act, the term "program, project, and activity" for items under, the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Subcommittees on the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies of the House of Representatives and the Senate is defined as (1) any item specifically identified in tables or written material set forth in the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, or accompanying committee reports or the conference report and accompanying joint explanatory statement of the managers of the committee of conference; (2) any Government-owned or Government-operated facility; and (3) management units, such as national parks, national forests, fish hatcheries, wildlife refuges, research units, regional, state and other administrative units and the like, for which funds are provided in fiscal year 1990.

The Committee emphasizes that any item for which a specific dollar amount is mentioned in an accompanying report, including all increases over the budget estimate approved by the Committee, shall be subject to a percentage reduction no greater or less than the percentage reduction applied to all non-defense accounts.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BOND ACT OF 1989

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3287) to waive the period of congressional review for certain District of Columbia acts authorizing the issuance of District of Columbia revenue bonds, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, but as the original cosponsor and patron of this bill I would ask the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON] give us an explanation of the bill.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the purpose of H.R. 3287 is to permit four revenue bond acts already adopted by the council of the District of Columbia to become law without waiting for the 30-day congressional layover period.

The goal of this legislation is to remove special congressional hurdles from the District's revenue bond enactment path. It is for a limited purpose and is aimed at insuring that the congressional recess does not place undue burdens and impediments on these revenue bond acts as a result of the 30-day congressional review period mandated by the District of Columbia Home Rule Act. The 30-day period relates to legislative days and typically converts to 90 calendar days.

In the absence of this legislation, the bond acts will not become law before Congress recesses, and the bond revenues provided for will not be available to the nonprofit institutions until some time next year.

This legislation has been requested by the Mayor of the District and the need for it has been emphasized in comments made by the chairman of the D.C. Council as well as letters from bond counsel for the respective institutions.

Let me stress that these acts incur no obligation or guarantee to the Federal Government whatsoever.

Congress is not being asked to vote on the merits of the bond issues or the construction projects that these nonprofit organizations will undertake. This bill would permit the issuance of these bonds to proceed as is the case with any other jurisdiction. We are only allowing the local laws to take effect.

Similar bills waiving the 30-day period for revenue bonds for hospitals and universities in the District of Columbia passed Congress in 1985, 1986 and 1987. Each bill passed the House and Senate overwhelmingly, and each was signed by the President.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 3287

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "District of Columbia Revenue Bond Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. WAIVER OF CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW PERIOD FOR CERTAIN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ACTS AUTHORIZING THE ISSUANCE OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BONDS.

(b) CERTAIN ACTS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AUTHORIZING ISSUANCE OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BONDS.—The District of Columbia acts authorizing the issuance, sale, and delivery of District of Columbia revenue bonds referred to in subsection (a) are as follows:

(1) The Howard University Revenue Bond Act of 1989 (District of Columbia Bill 8-299, introduced in the Council of the District of Columbia May 30, 1989) in such form as such act may be enacted by the Council of the District of Columbia, except that the authorization for the issuance of bonds under such act may not exceed $82,850,000.

(2) The National Rehabilitation Hospital, Inc. Revenue Bond Act of 1989 (District of Columbia Bill 8-298, introduced in the Council of the District of Columbia May 30, 1989) in such form as such act may be enacted by the Council of the District of Columbia, except that the authorization for issuance of bonds under such act may not exceed $48,300,000.

(3) The Association of American Medical Colleges Revenue Bond Act of 1989 (District of Columbia Bill 8-258, introduced in the Council of the District of Columbia April 27, 1989) in such form as such act may be enacted by the Council of the District of Columbia, except that the authorization for issuance of bonds under such act may not exceed $39,000,000.

(4) The Catholic University of America Revenue Bond Act of 1989 (District of Columbia Bill 8-300, introduced in the Council of the District of Columbia May 30, 1989) in such form as such act may be enacted by the Council of the District of Columbia, except that the authorization for issuance of bonds under such act may not exceed $13,000,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STEEL TRADE LIBERALIZATION PROGRAM IMPLEMENTATION ACT

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3275) to implement the steel trade liberalization program, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3275

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act".

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSES; SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE STEEL TRADE LIBERALIZATION PROGRAM.

(a) FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.—Section 802 of the Steel Import Stabilization Act (19 U.S.C. 2253 note) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 802. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

"(a) The Congress finds that—

"(1) since 1984, the United States steel industry has made significant progress toward adjustment, through modernization of production facilities, elimination of excess capacity, reduction of production costs, and improvement of productivity;

"(2) an extension of import relief, through transitional bilateral arrangements, for a period of two and one-half years will facilitate the steel industry's continued modernization and worker retraining;

"(3) liberalization of market access during the period of transitional bilateral arrangements, with preferential treatment for countries who support fair and open trade, will help ensure an orderly return to an open market;

"(4) the negotiation of an international consensus through the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations and through bilateral agreements to address subsidies and tariff and nontariff barriers will strengthen the international trading system and conditions of global steel trade; and

"(5) the termination of transitional bilateral arrangements by March 31, 1992, and the full and forceful application of the United States unfair trade laws, will protect the United States national interest in preserving conditions of fair and open trade in the United States market.

"(b) The purposes of this title are—

"(1) to endorse the principles and goals of the steel trade liberalization program as announced by the President on July 25, 1989, and provide for its implementation;

"(2) to grant specific enforcement powers to the President to carry out the terms and conditions of bilateral arrangements entered into for purposes of implementing that program; and

"(3) to make the continuation of those powers subject to the condition that the steel industry continue to modernize its plant and equipment and provide for appropriate worker retraining.".

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—Section 803 of the Steel Import Stabilization Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 803. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE STEEL TRADE LIBERALIZATION PROGRAM.

"(a) The Congress supports the full and effective implementation of the steel trade liberalization program.

"(b) It is the sense of the Congress that the steel trade liberalization program should be implemented in a manner which provides for liberalized market access for steel products during the period in which bilateral arrangements remain authorized in order to prepare for the eventual termination of such arrangements in 1992 and reliance thereafter on market forces and the full enforcement of United States trade laws. In particular, liberalized market access should be provided to those foreign countries that work with the United States to achieve the goals referred to in subsection (c).

"(c) It is further the sense of the Congress that the United States Trade Representative should promptly conduct negotiations, through the Uruguay Round of negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and through complementary bilateral arrangements, to seek an international consensus regarding steel trade that provides for—

"(1) strong disciplines over trade-distorting government subsidies;

"(2) the lowering of trade barriers so as to ensure market access; and

"(3) enforcement measures to deal with violations of consensus obligations.

"(d) The President shall provide to the Congress an annual assessment of the progress of the negotiations referred to in subsection (c). The President may include the assessment in the annual report required under section 163(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2213(a)) regarding the trade agreements program.".

SEC. 3. EXTENSION OF ACT.

(a) EXTENSION UNTIL APRIL 1, 1992.—Section 806(a) of the Steel Import Stabilization Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "the fifth anniversary of the effective date of this title" in paragraph (1) and inserting "March 31, 1992"; and

(2) by striking out "or fourth" in paragraph (2) and inserting "fourth, fifth, sixth, or seventh".

(b) SPECIAL PROVISION.—If the Steel Trade Liberalization Program Act is not enacted on or before October 1, 1989, then section 806(a)(2) of the Steel Import Stabilization Act (as amended by subsection (a)) shall be applied by treating the reference therein to the close of the fifth anniversary of the effective date of the Steel Import Stabilization Act as a reference to the close of the 30th day after the date of the enactment of the Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act.

SEC. 4. ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY.

(a) INTERIM AUTHORITY.—Section 805(a) of the Steel Import Stabilization Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The President is further authorized to carry out, between October 1, 1989, and the date of the concluding of any bilateral arrangement, such actions as may be necessary or appropriate to ensure an orderly transition to that arrangement.".

(b) SHORT SUPPLY SITUATIONS.—Section 805(b) of the Steel Import Stabilization Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) If—

"(A) a bilateral arrangement includes a provision relating to short supply situations; and

"(B) the Secretary of Commerce (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the 'Secretary') determines, in accordance with this subsection, that a short supply situation exists in the United States with respect to a steel product that is subject to a quantitative limitation under such arrangement;

the Secretary shall authorize the importation of additional quantities of that product without regard to any aggregate quantitative import limitation in effect under such arrangement.

"(2) In determining under this subsection whether a short supply situation exists in the United States with respect to a steel product, the Secretary shall take into account all relevant factors, including—

"(A) (to the extent information is available) the recent levels of capacity utilization for domestic facilities producing the product;

"(B) the quantity of the steel product requested in a short supply petition and the ability of domestic producers to supply the product in such quantity;

"(C) the willingness of a domestic producer to supply the steel product at a price which is not an aberration from prevailing domestic market prices;

"(D) reasonable specifications requested by the purchaser or any end user; and

"(E) delivery times to the purchaser and any end user of the steel product.

"(3)(A) A petition requesting a determination under this subsection may be filed with the Secretary. The petition must be in such form and contain such relevant information as the Secretary requires.

"(B) If the Secretary considers that a petition filed under subparagraph (A) is adequate, the Secretary shall promptly cause to be published in the Federal Register a notice that a determination under this subsection with respect to the steel product concerned is under consideration.

"(C) The Secretary shall provide opportunity for comment by interested persons regarding the issues raised in a petition.

"(D)(i) The petitioner shall certify that the factual information contained in the petition and any additional submission is accurate and complete to the best of the petitioner's knowledge.

"(ii) An interested person shall certify that the factual information submitted by that person to the Secretary is accurate and complete to the best of the person's knowledge.

"(4)(A) If an adequate petition is filed under paragraph (3)(A), the Secretary shall determine, not later than the day specified in subparagraph (B)—

"(i) whether a short supply situation exists in the United States with respect to the steel product; and

"(ii) if the determination under clause (i) is affirmative, the quantity of the steel product that the Secretary will authorize for importation.

"(B) The Secretary must make a determination with respect to a petition not later than—

"(i) the 15th day after the day on which the petition is filed if—

"(I) the raw steel making capacity utilization in the United States equals or exceeds 90 percent,

"(II) the importation of additional quantities of the steel product was authorized by the Secretary during each of the 2 immediately preceding years, or

"(III) the Secretary finds, on the basis of available information (and whether or not in the context of a determination under this subsection), that the steel product is not produced in the United States; or

"(ii) the 30th day after the day on which the petition was filed if neither subclause (I), (II), or (III) of clause (i) applies.

"(C) In making a determination with respect to which subparagraph (B)(i) applies, the Secretary shall apply a rebuttable presumption that the short supply situation alleged in the petition exists.

"(D) The Secretary shall cause to be published in the Federal Register notice of each determination made under this subsection setting forth the reasons for the determination.

"(5) If under this subsection the Secretary authorizes the importation of a specified quantity of a steel product, the Secretary shall notify a representative of the appropriate foreign government and issue to the petitioner the necessary documentation to permit the importation of that quantity.

"(6) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations to carry out this subsection. The interim text of such regulations shall be issued on or before the 30th day after the date of the enactment of the Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act. The regulations shall provide for transparency and fairness in the process of making short supply determinations, and shall be consistent with the President's announcement on July 25, 1989, establishing the steel trade liberalization program.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 805 is further amended—

(1) by amending subsection (c) by striking out "may provide" and inserting ", in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, shall provide".

(2) by striking out "President's Steel Policy," in subsection (d)(3) and inserting "steel trade liberalization program".

SEC. 5. DEFINITIONS.

Section 804 of the Steel Import Stabilization Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "or the steel trade liberalization program" before the period at the end of paragraph (1); and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) The term 'steel trade liberalization program' means the program, announced by the President on July 25, 1989, designed to achieve an orderly transition to open markets, the continued modernization and adjustment of the steel industry, and the negotiation of an international consensus to restore fair and open steel trade.".

SEC. 6. DOMESTIC INDUSTRY EFFORTS TO IMPROVE QUALITY AND SERVICE AND TO PROVIDE WORKER TRAINING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 806(b) of the Steel Import Stabilization Act is amended—

(1) by amending paragraph (2)(A) to read as follows:

"(A) The term 'major company' means an enterprise that produces iron and steel and whose raw steel production in the United States during 1988 exceeded 2,000,000 net tons."; and

(2) by adding at the end of paragraph (3) the following: "For purposes of this paragraph, the United States International Trade Commission shall seek to—

"(A) obtain information from purchasers of domestic steel products, as well as from domestic producers of steel products, regarding recent improvements in domestic quality and service, including those that result from industry modernization; and

"(B) obtain information on—

"(i) the general nature of the worker retraining efforts undertaken by the steel industry, and

"(ii) with respect to the moneys referred to in paragraph (1)(B), the amounts used to retrain displaced former employees as compared with the amounts used for on-the-job retraining within the industry.".

(b) SPECIAL RULE.—The amendment made by subsection (a)(1) shall not affect the definition of "qualified corporation" contained in section 212(g)(1)(A) of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act take effect on October 1, 1989.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3275, the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today the House is considering H.R. 3275, the Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act. This legislation was reported favorably by the Committee on Ways and Means, by unanimous voice vote, on Wednesday of last week. It represents the culmination of months of consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means, and especially its Trade Subcommittee, of proposals to extend the Steel VRA Program.

H.R. 3275 as reported provided the necessary and appropriate legislative authority for the President to implement the Steel Trade Liberalization Program, as announced by President Bush on July 25 of this year.

Specifically, H.R. 3275 provides a 2½-year extension of authority for the President to enforce the terms of steel voluntary restraint agreements which are negotiated with steel-exporting nations. The enforcement authority which has been in effect since 1984, under the Steel Import Stabilization Act, expired over the weekend. This bill extends that enforcement authority until March 31, 1992.

The bill also reauthorizes the requirements under the 1984 act that the major domestic steel producers commit substantially all of their net cash flow to modernization and reinvestment, commit not less than 1 percent of net cash flow to worker retraining, and take sufficient action to maintain their international competitiveness.

Consistent with the President's announced intention to negotiate an international consensus on stronger rules and disciplines for unfair trading practices, the bill expresses the sense of Congress that the U.S. Trade Representative should promptly conduct negotiations, both bilaterally and multilaterally, to achieve such goals. The President is required under the bill to report annually to the Congress on the progress of such negotiations.

In addition, the bill provides authority and procedures for the Secretary of Commerce to approve short supply requests, allowing additional steel imports during periods of short supply. Consistent with the findings and recommendations of the General Accounting Office, the bill establishes criteria and procedures designed to make the administration of the short supply program more transparent, fair, and predictable.

Finally, the bill contains various provisions to update the 1984 act and otherwise provide for the effective implementation of the President's program.

The bill is supported by all the major interested parties in the private sector—steel producers, steel users, steel service centers, and steel importers—as well as by the administration. I urge my colleagues to support the motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 3275.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE].

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I hate to be the odd man out, and I fear I am going to be today, but I do rise in opposition to H.R. 3275, the so-called Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act.

I think it is worthwhile to go back and review where we have been with this legislation. We enacted this so-called voluntary restraint system for steel 5 years ago to address problems that faced our domestic steel industry. Certainly 5 years ago the problems were much different than they are today. This was done to give the industry time to regroup—to make the necessary upgrades in investments and capital improvements—to improve its standing. We intended that during the 5 years of the VRA's, our domestic steel industry would take the kind of measures that were necessary to compete in today's world. That was the purpose of the legislation at that time.

Mr. Speaker, it was also supposed to give Government time to address trade-distorting practices through negotiations.

Perhaps at that time this measure was necessary. Certainly it has worked in the sense that the steel industry in the United States today is far more competitive than it was, far more profitable than it was at that time.

Today steel manufacturers in this country are enjoying record profits. They have regained their competitive edge. But at the same time while VRA's may have helped U.S. producers, I am not sure how helpful VRA's will be in the long-run as the steel industry in this country postponed necessary capital investments because they had this protection from competition.

But in any event, if it was valuable then it certainly hurt other countries.

While the United States is known for extolling the virtues of free trade, we often continue to hurt those countries who are actually implementing the policies that we support and that we demand others follow.

A prime example of this, Mr. Speaker, is the country of Mexico, which along with the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE], I had a chance to visit just a few weeks ago. During our visit this question of the voluntary restraint agreements was one of the issues mentioned frequently by the Mexican officials we met.

Mexico is a country that has made enormous progress in recent years. It has joined the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, has reduced its tariffs, and has eliminated its import licensing procedures. Because of these changes, the United States and Mexico signed a framework agreement outlining the procedures for addressing disagreements in trade between our two countries.

These changes have benefited U.S. exporters of steel a great deal; United States exports to Mexico increased 40 percent in 1988. They are expected to gain another 20 percent this year. That is overall trade.

In the area of steel, Mexico has made a lot of improvements. There are no quotas for steel in Mexico, and United States exporters of steel have gained and benefited tremendously from the fact.

United States steel exports to Mexico increased by 74 percent last year alone. The expectations are that we will run a surplus with Mexico in steel trade this year.

Mexico is an example of a country that is following our rhetoric even as we are ignoring it.

While we encourage Mexico and other developing countries to open themselves to more trade so that they can develop more quickly, we continue to move in the opposite direction by putting further restrictions on our own trade.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is improper to do this. If the time was right for voluntary restraint agreements 5 years ago, they certainly are not correct today and we should not adopt this measure.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I take this time simply to comment on the remarks made by my distinguished colleague from Arizona who, as he noted, is cochairman with me of a new United States task force on Mexico.

I would say in general that the voluntary restraint program has been needed for the last 5 years; I believe it is needed for the next 2½ years.

American industry has made great strides in the last 5 years. It is still only about two-thirds as far down the path toward continuous casting, for example, as the Japanese industry. I think an additional 2½ years will be time well spent.

Beyond that we do not have in place as yet a regimen for guaranteeing the absence of dumping and subsidies in the steel industry.

□ 1350

Mr. Speaker, I think the part of this extension which calls on the administration to negotiate such agreements is very, very helpful. Having said that, I want to join my colleague from Arizona in commending Mexico for their efforts over the last couple of years to encourage free trade, to remove the barriers for the imports.

I would like to say that for myself, at least, I hope the administration will do everything it can to help Mexico in particular, with the 1-percent bonus which we reserve under this bill for their traders in steel. With a couple of changes, I think Mexico will qualify under that provision. I can think of no better way to use that provision than to reward Mexico for having taken the steps it has over the last few years.

As the gentleman points out, we not only import steel from Mexico, we also export, so it is a genuine two-way street. That is the way it ought to be in the steel trade business.

I commend the gentleman for bringing to our attention the unique situation regarding Mexico, and I hope very much that the administration will recognize that unique situation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAYDOS].

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE], and congratulate him for his leadership on this item.

Let me respond to the gentleman from Arizona in this respect: I think he is cognizant of the fact that over the last 15 years, in the corporate community, profits are running something like 16, 17, to 20 percent. That was a normal average of profits, while the U.S. steel corporate community was averaging in the neighborhood of 7 or 8 percent. That was between a 15- and 20-year period.

When the general call for the cleanup of the Nation's air—and granted, a lot of pollution did originate in the steel industry—the steel industry in this country was in the vanguard, in expenditures and in accomplishment, costing them literally hundreds of millions of dollars during that period of time. I just want to point these facts out for the report to justify that this legislation basically and fundamentally giving the steel industry of this country just a little bit more time to become competitive. They are well on their way. They have been putting their profits back into the industry, more so than any comparable industry in the Nation today.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3275—the Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act—which extends the steel voluntary restraint agreements for 2½ years.

As chairman of the congressional steel caucus and as a representative of a one-time steel district, I had hoped and strived for a 5-year renewal. But recognizing the realities of the situation, I and the entire steel caucus support the 2½-year extension that we can get.

I want to see the VRA's extended because I am convinced that the steel industry is basic to the economic health of this country, that a strong steel industry is vital if the United States is to remain competitive in the world market.

When I testified on the VRA extension before the Trade Subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee last July, I pointed out that the steel industry stimulates production in 300 of the 400 sectors of our economy.

And the so-called high-technology industries such as computers and semiconductors are in the top 100 sectors that benefit from increased steel production.

The American steel industry is looking better than it has in over 10 years, reporting profits of $3 billion for the past 2 years.

These gains are the result of prudent planning and massive modernization efforts which have been brought about in spite of unfair competition from foreign steelmakers who subsidize their steel industries and, at the same time, make it difficult for imports to enter their markets.

From 1982 to 1987, when things were really tight, U.S. producers reinvested $9 billion in modernizing plants and equipment. That's roughly one-third more than their cash flow from steel. Last year, they added another $1.8 billion to the total.

But modernization takes time to put in place. Steelmakers just can't go out and buy a continuous caster like you can a computer. It's just not that simple.

It involves huge sums of money and long-term planning—2 or more years to design, engineer, construct, and make it operational and the spending of at least $250 million.

When Inland Steel committed itself to building a new world class cold rolling mill in 1985, for example, the price tag was $400 million. More than 3 years later, that project has just about come on line.

Now, Inland is going ahead with the construction of a $500-million galvanizing facility tied to its new cold rolling operation.

Last year, Bethlehem Steel announced a major modernization of its hot strip mill at Sparrows Point in Maryland. That effort is going on now, at a cost of over $200 million.

I am well aware of the steel industry's current prosperity, and I have hope for the future. Yet, the memory of McKeesport's abandoned National Steel is fresh in my mind and I can't forget USX's Homestead Works in West Homestead, PA, which used to employ 15,000 people.

This summer, on the grounds of that now-dismantled steel mill is a giant water park, which employs about 135 people, less than 1 percent of the former work force and certainly at much lower wages than the salaries once paid to those former steelworkers there.

I have followed the steel industry long enough to know that it has its up-and-down cycles. Even last year—one of the best years steelmakers have seen in a long time—they earned less that a 10-percent return on assets, still below the average for other major industries.

The VRA program was not and is not a cure-all. But it has been the most effective method so far for curbing those dumped steel imports.

In 1984, when we made the VRA's a part of our trade policy, steel imports had reached an annual level of 26.4 percent. Today, steel imports claim even less than that goal of 20.2 percent penetration we set when we put the VRA's into effect.

Two days ago—on September 30—those VRA's expired. Already, at least eight new VRA agreements are unofficially in place—that is, they have been negotiated, but will not be signed until President Bush signs H.R. 3275.

Until this legislation is signed into law, there are no limits on steel shipments, even from those countries that have already negotiated new VRA's. So, I suggest we get a move on and pass this legislation.

I urge my colleagues to support and vote for H.R. 3275.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in support of passage of H.R. 3275, the Steel Liberalization Program Implementation Act. This legislation effectively implements the President's program to extend voluntary restraint agreements for an additional 2½ years granting the President authority to enforce international agreements that limit steel imports.

Mr. Speaker, during the first half of this decade, before negotiation of VRA's with major steel exporting nations beginning in 1984, the U.S. steel industry suffered nothing short of financial crisis. Jobs were lost that will never be recovered as we witnessed foreign steel's share of the U.S. market escalate in large part due to excess dumping and other unfair trading practices that today are often and euphemistically referred to as "trade distorting subsidies." I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this reference gives a rather benign impression of something that has demonstrably yielded such harsh effects on American steelworkers.

While I joined a number of my colleagues in cosponsoring H.R. 904, offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to extend the Steel Import Stabilization Act for an additional 5 years, I recognize the competing interests involved. I believe that the 2½-year extension will enable our steel industry more time to modernize, adapt, and become more competitive while providing the President the tools necessary to encourage our trading partners to pursue more free market policies that are in all our best interests.

The good news is that stability and profitability appear to be on the upswing and we are seeing modernization efforts implemented. This is good news for America and good news for Missouri, where the wire rope industry remains a vital component in assuring our State's economic well-being.

As we enact this legislation I think we all do so with the purpose of promoting fairness in the near term while in the long term, fostering an economic and trade environment where government intervention is increasingly unnecessary.

I wish to commend the President for moving swiftly on his campaign promise to ensure that American steelworkers get a fair shake at the negotiating table and I appreciate the support offered by both the producing and consuming steel industries who came together to support the President's compromise package. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY].

(Mr. VISCLOSKY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I would, first of all, like to thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding me this time and also to thank the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] and all the members of the Subcommittee on Trade for doing what I think is a very good job on H.R. 3275.

Mr. Speaker, as the representative of the largest steel-producing district in the country, I offer my assessment of H.R. 3275. I would also like to outline some of my ideas as to how we can facilitate the continued recovery of the domestic steel industry through enforcement of the VRA's and an international consensus if and when it is developed.

H.R. 3275 replaced H.R. 904, which called for a full 5-year extension of the VRA's. H.R. 3275 incorporated the major elements of President Bush's proposal announced on July 25, 1989 calling for a 2½ year extension of the VRAs. I would have preferred a full, 5 year extension of the VRAs in order to give the American steel industry sufficient time to complete its extensive and costly modernization process.

H.R. 3275 contains an annual reporting requirement. I am proud to say that this was largely the result of my bill, H.R. 3093, the Steel Fair Trade Review Act, which has 119 cosponsors.

I am pleased with the short-supply provisions in H.R. 3275. These provisions were modeled after the recommendations contained in the GAO report on short-supply administration that I requested.

There is, however, an ominous and potentially significant change in the extended VRA Program from the one first implemented in 1984. The 1984 VRA Program set a 20.2-percent import penetration level—which includes both VRA and non-VRA countries. Under the extended VRA Program, if the quota limits are filled—which they were not in 1988—total import penetration would rise.

VRA imports would be initially set at 18.4 percent. However, non-VRA countries currently comprise about 6 percent of the U.S. market. If the quotas are filled, total imports would rise about 24.4 percent.

This is not including the potential "bonus shares" which would be allotted to countries cooperating to achieve an international consensus on steel to eliminate unfair trade practices and other distortions of the global steel market. The bonus shares would comprise an additional 1-percent per year of the extended VRA's—possibly totaling an extra 2½ percent import market share by the end of the VRA Program in March 1992.

There have been indications from the administration that the new VRA quotas will be increased for countries such as Korea, Brazil, and Mexico. These countries have tended to utilize their VRA allotments under the original VRA Program. It is rumored that Japan and the European Community—countries that have typically not filled their quota allotments—will get less.

Unfortunately, President Bush has not yet announced the specifics of the new VRA's. This is troubling because the program adopted in 1984 has now expired without a new one ready to take its place. This is unacceptable because the administration has had ample time to negotiate the new VRA's. However, given the late announcement of the Steel Trade Liberalization Program on July 25, there has been an extremely limited timeframe within which to work. I urge the President and the U.S. Trade Representative, Carla Hills, to give the completion of the VRA negotiations the priority that it deserves.

According to a recently-released report by the Congressional Research Service [CRS], if the VRA limits of the new VRA Program are fully utilized, there would be significant ramifications for the domestic steel producers, those sectors of the economy that supply it, and domestic steel users.

The liberalized market share allotted for imports would translate into lowered prices for the steel-using industries and consumers generally. However, the CRS report concludes by saying that the benefits to steel users would probably be more than offset by a severe contraction of the domestic steel industry. It is estimated that employment could drop by more than 10,000 workers with a potential revenue loss to the domestic industry of $2 to $4.5 billion. The report concludes on this rather ominous note:

* * * The costs to the steel industry and steel-related industries could be substantially greater than the benefits to the economy as a whole.

This is particularly unsettling because while the domestic steel industry has, in fact, recovered from the recession of the mid-1980's, there could be another devastating recession if certain steps are not taken to ensure the effective enforcement of the new VRA system.

Many of the world's steel-producing countries continue to unfairly subsidize their domestic industries. These subsidized foreign producers are often inclined to dump steel in the United States, while continuing to deny U.S. steel exporters open access to their own fiercely protected markets.

The centerpiece of President Bush's steel import program is the attainment of an international consensus to eliminate unfair trade practices and ensure market access to all countries participating in the global steel market.

I would welcome such an international consensus, but I am skeptical as to whether the USTR will be able to negotiate such a consensus within the short timeframe of 30 months.

Further, how would such an international consensus be enforced? The primary forum for achieving an international consensus in steel will be the Uruguay round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] currently underway and scheduled to end on December 1990. There are 97 members of the GATT, and it is extremely difficult to negotiate a multilateral agreement with the diversity of the GATT's membership and the members' often differing agendas.

After the issuance of its midterm report in December 1988, there was general disappointment with the halting progress of the Uruguay round negotiations—exemplified by the lack of progress in the negotiations to eliminate widespread agricultural subsidies. Why should steel negotiations be any easier?

My concern is that recognizing the formidable task at hand and the uncertain prognosis for success, it is necessary to safeguard the U.S. steel industry from the pernicious effects of unfair foreign trade practices in the event that an international consensus is not forthcoming in 30 short months.

It is appropriate that there is a reporting requirement contained in the extended VRA legislation. This provision will allow Congress to assess the progress of the multilateral negotiations, and implement corrective measures if it appears unlikely that an international consensus will be reached.

In the short term, I believe that we must strictly enforce our existing trade laws. There is growing evidence that circumvention of the VRA limits is occurring in certain instances. I have seen evidence to indicate that countries whose exports to the United States are contained by the VRA Program are conspiring with non-VRA countries to exceed their quota limits.

Concerned by the prospect of this activity, I have contacted Congressman JOHN DINGELL, chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee's Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigation to request a hearing on VRA circumvention.

My proposal to counter circumvention of the VRA's is to examine how imported steel enters the United States and how existing regulations are enforced. The 1988 Trade Act contained a provision require steel melted and poured in one country to count toward that nation's quota ceiling even if it is processed elsewhere. However, enforcement of this provision is discretionary and the administration has been reluctant to follow through.

The Department of Commerce is responsible for enforcing the VRA Program. To monitor the VRA's, Commerce typically receives copies of the export licenses in advance of the actual entry of steel into the United States. It is the U.S. Customs Service, however, that facilitates the processing of steel imports upon entry. The main function of the Customs Service is to prevent fraud and to ensure the collection of legal duties. To accomplish this end, it inspects and classifies products entering this country.

Commerce can coordinate its activities with the Customs Service by comparing the official export licenses with the Customs documents presented at the ports of entry. One of these documents is the special steel summary invoice [SSSI], which details the type of product, its country of origin, and its value. By carefully evaluating the SSSI system, it would be possible to determine whether imported steel is circumventing the VRA Program.

The hearing I propose would be an appropriate forum to determine the extent to which circumvention could be more effectively monitored and enforced through existing measures rather than attempting to tackle the problem by additional legislation.

Rigorous and swift enforcement of our other existing trade laws will be critically important when the extended VRA Program ends on March 31, 1992. The antidumping and countervailing duty laws now on the books—but emasculated by the VRA's—often take so long to process that foreign steel producers can profit by selling their subsidized goods in the U.S. market. They know that by the time U.S. trade laws catch up with them—if ever—the transactions will have been completed. We must ensure that our current mechanisms for dealing with unfair trade practices are streamlined and expedited so that the incentives are eliminated.

While I am a strong advocate of the VRA Program, I recognize that VRA's are not a long-term solution or panacea for the American steel industry. I truly believe that with the absence of foreign government intervention in the global steel market, U.S. companies can be competitive with foreign producers.

In the short term my concern is that we allow our domestic producers the stability to complete the restructuring and modernization afforded by the VRA Program. In the long run, an international consensus has the potential of bolstering the U.S. steel industry's ability to compete on a level playing field with foreign steel producers. Achievement of an international consensus may not be possible in 30 months, but it is certainly a goal toward which we should strive.

If these multilateral agreements can be negotiated, implemented, and enforced, both steel producers and consumers will reap the benefits and we will once again see the American steel industry emerge as the preeminent force in the global steel market.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY].

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for yielding me this time.

I rise to support H.R. 3275, the extension of voluntary restraints agreements for steel, and to express my gratitude to Congressman JOE GAYDOS and Congressman BILL FRENZEL, member of the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Trade, for moving H.R. 3275 legislation to the floor so promptly.

Representing the Bethlehem Sparrows Point Steel Mill, one of the largest in the country and one of the largest companies in Baltimore County, I am well aware of how constructive the past 5 years of VRA's have been for the industry. In that breathing period, "Beth Steel" has invested hundreds of millions of dollars in modernizing its plants, a benefit not only to the company and the community, but to the industry as a whole, and to the country.

However, I want the record to show that I prefer H.R. 904 which would provide a 5-year extension, the additional time I believe the steel industry needs to be able to complete their modernization which involves billions of dollars. I hope that foreign steel producers will not misread the intent of the 2½-year extension contained in this bill.

I am always particularily appreciative of the work done by our colleague, Hon. JOE GAYDOS of Pennsylvania, chairman of the steel caucus, who has been a pioneer in developing legislation to aid the steel industry.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR].

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3275, to extend the voluntary restraint agreements for steel now in place.

The VRA Program certainly has helped the steel industry to recover, and in my district and State it has helped the taconite industry, the principal raw material from which steel is made, to rebound from the literal depression we experienced in the 1980's. In 1981 and 1982, we went from 15,000 jobs in the taconite mining and processing industry to 1,500 jobs. We have had an exodus of 28,000 people from the northern part of my district because of unemployment in the taconite industry and the lack of markets for our product due to the downturn in steel. We went from an industry that accounted for 55 percent of the gross regional product of our area to an industry that, financially was on its knees begging for mercy. That mercy came in the form of the voluntary restraint agreements. A lesser remedy than the quotas on steel which I advocated, but nonetheless a measure that opened the doors to a recovery in the steel industry and in taconite.

Domestic steel production now is up. We are projected to have some 80 to 81 million tons of domestic steel production in 1989. Investment is up: Over $11 billion has been invested in the steel industry's recovery. The productivity of the American steel worker is the best in the world, averaging 6 man-hours per ton, which is some 20 percent better than any other country in the world.

Our steel industry is healthier, but its problems are not over. Fifteen percent of the domestic steel industry is still in bankruptcy. Real return on investment is only 2-plus percent. World steel capacity outside the United States is averaging 10 to 15 million tons growth a year, while the United States is averaging considerably less than that. Foreign governments impose tariffs averaging 10 percent on imported steel, while the U.S. tariff is only 4.5 percent on steel imports.

Since 1981 foreign governments have pumped some $60 billion of subsidies into their steel industry, and yet we continue to be the world's largest open, free market. Foreign governments are masking their own unemployment with subsidies, waiting for an opportunity to reinvade the U.S. marketplace and undercut our domestic steel industry.

Mr. Speaker, we need these VRA's in place for the foreseeable future to continue the recovery in steel and protect American jobs in steel, taconite, and related industries.

I urge an "aye" vote on H.R. 3275.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not my first choice to support H.R. 3275, a bill which will regulate steel imports, but I would have to agree that it is about the best compromise we could have achieved.

In my judgement, VRA's should not have been extended at all. The domestic steel industry has had protection through VRA's, the trigger price mechanism, and other programs for 20 years. As a result, the industry has restructured and has modernized much of its production far beyond the ability of most U.S. industries which do not have the benefit of this kind of protection.

In fact, the steel industry, aided by the weaker U.S. dollar, is now a low-cost producer. Many of our major steel trading partners have phased out capacity and will continue to do so. The 1988 earnings for the U.S. industry were over $2 billion, steel prices are up, and capacity utilization has been in the 90-percent range.

Some companies are exporting as well, and the import share of the U.S. market is declining. A recent GAO report has noted a strong recovery for the domestic steel industry and stated that termination of the VRA's would have little effect on the steel market as a whole. The ITC noted that $12.3 billion was lost in sales by users due to VRA's.

None of this vindicates the need for extending VRA's. In my opinion, it was time to end the VRA's and return to the use of our trade remedy laws to counteract unfair trade practices by foreign steel producers.

However, the administration was committed to extend the VRA's in some manner. Considering the strength of the steel industry and the steel users, the President's proposal, implemented by H.R. 3275, is the best we could do, even though I believe that more attention should have been focused on the users' needs. If you look at employment figures alone that makes more sense. There are 200,000 steel workers versus 5.5 million workers in the heavy steel-using industries. Steel users do not have a protected market. They face tough international competition and must find the lowest-cost steel and best quality inputs possible to maintain their competitiveness abroad.

The bill does contain some positive sections which I do support. One is the negotiations to achieve an international consensus on steel trade. Another is the administration's intention to increase the overall quota limit by 1 percent each year of the VRA to be given to those countries which cooperate in our efforts to achieve an international consensus. There is, of course, no guarantee that any of the 1-percent growth will be granted. The short supply program has also been improved modestly.

I do have some problems with the bill, however. My main concerns are in the area of short supply. It seems to me that products which are not produced in the United States should be exempt from the quotas. A 15-day short supply determination will help, but users of steel not produced in the United States should not have to petition at all.

Also, tolling, which permits some steel inputs to be exempted if exported, should be extended to include imports used in finished products, if exported. It also might have been a good idea to permit all small businesses to use the 15-day fast track on short supply. The bill permits the 15-day short supply consideration during periods of 90 percent industrywide capacity utilization. That should have been 90 percent on a product basis to be helpful.

Another factor which triggers use of the 15-day is prior approval of short supply petitions for two consecutive years. That is unreasonable, since a company may have had adequate supply to avoid annual filing, or Commerce may have delayed responding to a short supply request until the start of a new year which would make some companies ineligible which actually filed rquests in consecutive years. Also, some companies were told they would have had petitions approved but negotiations with supplier countries resulted in a shifting of quotas to cover the needs of the company in question. These companies probably would not qualify for the 15-day determination.

It also seems to me that there should be far more emphasis on pricing and quality from the users standpoint in the short supply process. There will be many situations whereby a price would not be considered an aberration yet could be high enough to make a user's product noncompetitive. While I realize that there may be isolated cases where steel specifications have been designed to force the use of an imported product, most users and many steel finishers have a need for exact quality, and many producers of inputs of finished products have the specs dictated by their customers and must supply what has been requested. I hope that Commerce will implement the entire short supply program fairly and efficiently.

I would also have liked to see the reinvestment area tightened up through an amendment. In my judgement, capital raised by debt bonds or selling stock or assets should also be reinvested in the steel industry, not used to purchase unrelated businesses.

Lastly, I have some problem with the effect the VRA's have on some developing countries. Specifically, Trinidad has recently pledged to end its steel subsidies, reduce its tariffs and improve its market access, yet preliminary reports show that the United States is not willing to increase its quotas to a level which would help this democracy in the Caribbean which is facing severe economic and political pressures due to declining oil prices. Trinidad has restrained its exports in the United States even when it did not have a VRA, and it attempts to fill niche markets the United States industry ignored. It should receive a far greater quota increase than what is rumored.

Mr. Speaker, this should be the last protection granted to the industry. It is ready to strike out on its own. We must continue our work to negotiate the international consensus, either separately or through the Uruguay round, but lack of what the industry believes to be adequate progress should not automatically qualify it for an extension.

With the reservations stated earlier, I will reluctantly and grudgingly support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1410

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time on my side, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I think the subject has been well covered by the previous speakers.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to commend two persons who are very much responsible for this bill being on the floor today. One is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], the chairman of the full Committee on Ways and Means, and the other is the honorable gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], chairman of the Trade Subcommittee. I think that it is not too much to say that neither of those gentlemen were entirely enthusiastic about extending the VRA's, and yet both of them worked very cooperatively with Members like myself who are enthusiastic about the bill, and members of the Steel Caucus, and those in the steel industry and the administration to fashion the bill that we have on the floor today. Mr. Speaker, I think that both of them deserve a great deal of credit for the cooperation and spirit of compromise which they showed in advancing this legislation.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of legislation before the House of Representatives today, H.R. 3275, the Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act.

While this legislation could go further, it moves us in the right direction to protect and preserve our Nation's steel industry. The existing voluntary restraint agreements have started the domestic steel industry on the road toward full international competitiveness. Between 1982 and 1987, U.S. producers reinvested $9 billion in modernizing plants and equipment. As a result, U.S. producers have been able to make significant cost reductions, labor productivity gains, and quality improvements. Unfortunately, the industry still needs to improve such key areas as product yield, energy efficiency, and continuous casting rate, in order to become fully competitive by international standards.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to reaffirm my support for the American steel industry. I commend Chairman GIBBONS and the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Trade for quick action on this bill and I urge its passage.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3275, the Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act.

Although I still firmly believe that a 2½-year extension is insufficient, I am just as firm in my belief that both sides on this issue must now unify behind this legislation, and do so with conviction. In attempting to eliminate the damaging steel subsidies employed by certain trading partners, and improve market access opportunities abroad, our negotiators will need every ounce of congressional might behind them which can be mustered.

Briefly, the legislation extends the termination date for enforcement of bilateral steel arrangements until March 31, 1992. This is critical because a VRA program is only going to be successful if our U.S. Customs Service has sufficient authority to enforce it at the ports.

Second, this bill addresses the concerns of small- to medium-sized steel users who have had occasional difficulties in sorting through the short supply procedures at the Department of Commerce.

By making the short supply program more transparent, and streamlining the timeframe in which Commerce will decide on short-supply requests to 30 days, Congress and the Commerce Department help ensure that steel users who rely on the short supply program will be able to understand how it works without having to spend thousands of dollars on Washington trade lawyers.

Last, this legislation expresses steadfast support for the Bush administration's efforts to achieve an international consensus with our trading partners geared toward eliminating trade-distortive steel subsidies and lowering trade barriers so as to ensure market access.

Importantly, H.R. 3275 also requires the President to report to Congress annually on the progress of the multilateral and bilateral negotiations to seek such a consensus. My only concern in this regard, however, is that a 2½- as opposed to 5-year extension doesn't give our negotiators the bargaining power necessary to achieve a consensus agreement which is truly in the best interests of the United States. I can only hope history will prove my skepticism unfounded.

We all know that extending steel VRA's is not an issue of free trade versus protectionism. Rather, it is a more complex question about what to do about foreign-government intervention in steel, especially in the lesser-developed and Third World nations. Between 1980 and 1987, while steelmaking capacity in the developed Western World—the OECD countries—saw a 17-percent decrease, capacity in the developing world increased over 48 percent. Make no mistake about it, this is not just a blip on a screen. It is a very real trend, and it spells very real trouble.

I find this particularly disturbing because, in an era in which the No. 1 priority of these developing nations is to maintain political stability by creating as many jobs as possible, their governments don't really care whether these jobs are created by private enterprise, or through 100 percent governmental subsidization. To those of my colleagues who represent agricultural and high-tech interest, you know darn well that the steel industry is not the only one to have suffered at the hands of unfair competition.

Accordingly, also critical is the future and fate of U.S. unfair trade laws, such as our antidumping and countervailing duty laws.

The U.S. Congress has worked long and hard, Mr. Speaker, to enact tough, effective unfair trade laws. I note that in the Steel Trade Liberalizaton Act, the Congress specifically finds that "the full and forceful application of the U.S. unfair trade laws will protect the U.S. national interest in preserving conditions of fair and open trade." I couldn't agree with that more.

What concerns me is that many of the same business people who—during the VRA hearing process—told the Ways and Means Committee that the steel industry should use the unfair trade laws are the same people now urging the administration to weaken existing law both in the GATT round and through domestic changes. It seems to me that we should not expect any industry to rely upon our unfair trade laws if we intend to weaken those laws. Indeed, that's unfair on our part.

If we want full and forceful application of the U.S. unfair trade laws, then we need to ensure that we keep the current unfair trade laws full and forceful. Many Members of this body realize, as do I, that for many U.S. industries, these laws represent not only the last, but the only, line of defense against the pervasive and crippling unfair trade practices employed by some of our trading partners.

I will commit today to say that I vehemently oppose any weakening of our current unfair trade laws in the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations, or through administrative regulation, and hope that the entire House membership will do the same.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is not perfect, but it represents a viable and fair compromise. Two colleagues in particular, Ways and Means Committee Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI and Trade Subcommittee Chairman GIBBONS deserve a great deal of credit for their leadership in this regard. Throughout the legislative process, they have shown a genuine commitment to working with me and Congressmen MURTHA, REGULA, and GAYDOS, as representatives of the Steel Caucus, toward a proposal acceptable to all. And, as unlikely as it seemed months ago, today we are voting on just such a proposal.

I urge my colleagues to vote "aye" on H.R. 3275 and, pending its approval, express my hope that the other body will act on this measure just as expeditiously.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, today's consideration of H.R. 3275, the Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act, reflects the type of compromise which often must be made if we are to pursue a pragmatic trade policy.

In 1984, President Reagan announced a steel VRA program designed to control imports of unfairly traded steel. The VRA program was to last for 5 years, to allow a breathing period during which our domestic steel producers would be committed to reinvesting and modernizing our production facilities, and providing adequate retraining for displaced workers. In October 1984, the Congress passed legislation which I sponsored to provide the President with authority to enforce the steel agreements and ensure the domestic industry's continued commitment to improving its international competitiveness.

Five years have passed, and conditions are in many ways different today than they were in 1984. Domestic production has been rationalized and is more efficient. Productivity, as measured in manhours per ton, has dramatically improved. Our technological competitiveness, such as in continuous casting rates, has also improved. As can be expected when one's overall competitiveness increases, the industry's profitability has also turned around.

Despite these major improvements, the domestic steel industry asked for a continuation of the VRA program beyond its scheduled expiration this year. The producers argue that unfair trading practices still persist, and that their modernization and investment plans are not yet complete. On the other hand, domestic users of steel complain of lack of adequate supply of competitively priced steel, which in turn affects the user-industries' competitiveness.

The Committee on Ways and Means earlier this year held thorough hearings on the issue and received extensive testimony from all sides. Both producers and users have compelling arguments.

On July 25, President Bush announced his support for a limited extension of the VRA program. I believe the new program is a fair and pragmatic response which takes into account both producer concerns and consumer concerns.

I want to particularly commend Congressman SAM GIBBONS, chairman of the Subcommittee on Trade, for his leadership and cooperative spirit in drafting the legislation which is before the House today. Chairman GIBBONS is a strong defender of free and open trade, and I know that his first choice would have been to have no extension of the steel VRA program at all.

But Chairman GIBBONS put aside his personal agenda, and used his considerable leadership to forge a consensus coalitiion around the President's program. He worked closely with Members on both sides of the aisle, with Members on both sides of the aisle, with Members of the Steel Caucus, and the administration, to draft a consensus bill which I was proud to cosponsor. By the time H.R. 3275 was taken up by the Trade Subcommittee, the major steel producers, steel users, and the administration were all committed to supporting this bill without amendment through both the House and the Senate.

This bill extends the enforcement authority for the President's steel VRA program for an additional 2½ years, to March 1992. I expect this to be the last extension of this program, and I fully expect the administration to vigorously enforce our trade laws at the conclusion of this period to address any lingering unfair trade practices in the steel sector.

This bill is not perfect. Each one of us can probably come up with a way to tinker with it and improve it a bit more. But if it pleased any one side completely, then it would not be a consensus bill. Everyone had to compromise a little in this process, in the interests of a balanced, pragmatic policy. Now it is important for us all to unite behind this legislation so that the President's program can be implemented without further delay.

The statutory authority for the VRA program lapsed over the weekend. With today's passage of H.R. 3275, the Steel Trade Liberalization Program will have the unequivocal support of the House. I hope the Senate will soon follow suit.

I urge my colleagues to join me in strong support for the enactment of H.R. 3275.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this bill. Since the steel import restraint program was first authorized in 1984, the domestic steel industry has done a remarkable job regaining profitability and market share while making great strides toward being internationally competitive. But, while the program has succeeded in meeting challenges of the 1980's, our daunting task this year has been to create a new policy to meet those of the 1990's.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill represents that policy. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of the bill before us today and want to thank trade subcommittee chairman Mr. GIBBONS for his leadership on this bill.

As the economy has expanded in recent years, I have spent a great deal of time working with my companies in Connecticut to help them gain access to adequate supplies of steel. They are a diverse group, ranging from metal stamping shops which may employ only a few workers, to the Stanley Works which manufactures a wide range of tools and other products, and Theis Steel, a small high-quality specialty steelmaker. While these firms generally have supported the VRA program, the short supply process has at times forced them to expend more time in Washington working on short supply requests than in Connecticut manufacturing.

The significance of this bill is not that the VRA's are being extended but that the program is being improved. A straight extension of the VRA's would not have met the needs of the economy and would not have gained the wide support this bill has. Our bill, H.R. 3275, will support the modernization of our steel industry, but it will also ensure that steel users will have access to as much steel as they need in an expanding economy.

In recent years, with the domestic industry at near-capacity, the domestic steel makers have not always been able to supply the full needs of our manufacturers. When domestic steel makers cannot fill an order, we need to ensure that steel users have prompt access to steel from other sources.

Moreover, our bill also gets to the root of the problem that led to the original VRA program: unfair trade practices. Mr. Speaker, if when the VRA's expire 2½ years from now subsidized steel is still reaching our shores we will not have done our job. If, 2½ years from now, foreign steel makers can dump steel to gain U.S. market share, we will have failed. The U.S. steel industry has done a remarkable job regaining its competitiveness over the past 5 years, but the job is not finished. Our bill puts the world on notice that we are serious about ensuring that our market will only be open to fairly traded steel.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee which has jurisdiction over this program, I am proud that this bill has the support of interests who, at the beginning of this debate, were on opposite sides of the issue. I urge my colleagues to support the bill and hope the Senate acts quickly to approve this important program.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support the extension of the Voluntary Restraint Agreements for steel imports included in H.R. 3275. However, my support is only lukewarm.

As someone who was personally involved in bringing VRA's into existence in 1984, I firmly believe that while there has been significant progress, there is still much to be done. This is why I would rather see a 5-year extension, rather than the 2½-year extension as included in this legislation. I'm not sure 2½ years is enough to accomplish the intricate negotiations needed to provide an international consensus to remove unfair trade practices and to provide more time for the industry to adjust and modernize.

But I also understand the tough negotiations which took place between members of the Congressional Steel Caucus, U.S. steel producers, U.S. steel users and the administration which went into producing this legislation.

This 2½-year extension is a compromise, balancing the interests of steel producers and users. I will abide with this compromise and not offer any amendments today. But, be assured, I and my colleagues who care about the future of an American steel industry will be closely monitoring the progress which the administration makes, both bilaterally and through the Uruguay round of GATT, during the next 2½ years. If, in that time, insufficient progress is made in negotiating international agreements curbing steel subsidies which have given foreign producers an advantage over U.S. steelmakers, Members of the Congressional Steel Caucus will work to have Congress revisit this issue.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I introduced H.R. 3275 and am supporting its enactment with mixed feelings. I have never been a supporter of the steel voluntary restraint agreement [VRA] program and I strongly believe that the country would have been far better off if the program was allowed to expire this year. But this bill, and the program it implements do represent a reasonable compromise to craft a steel trade policy which addresses the concerns of both steel producers and steel users.

The bill gives U.S. steel producers another 2½ years—for a total of 7½ years—of import protection through the negotiation and enforcement of voluntary restraint agreements. Moreover, it must be remembered that this 7½-year VRA program follows a long history of various types of Government protection for the domestic steel industry.

The bill gives U.S. steel users the prospect of liberalized market access over the period of transitional VRA's and the certainty that, at the end of March 1992, the steel VRA program will terminate permanently. It also sends the clear message that, in 1992, imports of steel will be regulated by the same unfair trade laws that govern trade in all other products.

Although a consensus has emerged for this temporary extension of steel VRA's, I want to emphasize that this consensus is possible only because of the clarity of President Bush's commitment that the steel VRA program terminate in March 1992. This is a final extension, good only for 2½ years.

I applaud the President's intention to seek stronger international rules and disciplines on the use of subsidies and other unfair trade practices, particularly those that affect world steel trade. Any international agreement in this area, however, must not sanction cartelization of steel trade. International rules must lead toward freer, more open steel trade.

Furthermore, I want to emphasize the need to reinstate the application of U.S. trade laws in the steel sector. I firmly believe that all industries must learn to compete under the same rules of trade. A fundamental flaw with the VRA system is the protection we give to foreign producers by waiving the rigorous enforcement of our unfair trade laws. By March 1992, U.S. trade laws will be fully enforced to address all vestiges of unfair trading practices by foreign steel exporters.

Let no one misinterpret the broad support and consensus behind today's vote; steel import protection is not a noncontroversial subject. The Trade Subcommittee held 3 exhaustive days of public hearings receiving testimony from many parties about the economic costs and burdens imposed on steel users through VRA's. The record is clear: VRA's are not good for the economy. And the only reason I am supporting their extension today is because of the President's commitment to terminate the VRA's in March 1992.

I want to extend my thanks to all of the people who worked so hard to develop this consensus legislation—both Democratic and Republican members of the Trade Subcommittee, members of the steel caucus, the administration, as well as representatives from the domestic steel producers, steel users, steelworkers' union, and steel service centers. This legislation is a tribute to the cooperative spirit of all those who are affected by it, and their willingness to compromise. I urge the expeditious enactment of H.R. 3275, so that the President's program can be implemented effectively and we can turn our attention to other pressing matters of the day.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3275, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

TORTURE VICTIM PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1662) to amend the United Nations Participation Act of 1945 to carry out obligations of the United States under the United Nations Charter and other international agreements pertaining to the protection of human rights by providing a civil action for recovery from persons engaging in torture, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 1662

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Torture Victim Protection Act of 1989."

SEC. 2. TORTURE VICTIM PROTECTION.

(a) LIABILITY.—Every individual who, under color of law of any foreign nation, subjects any individual to torture or extrajudicial killing shall be liable to the party injured or that party's legal representative in a civil action.

(b) LIMITATIONS ON REMEDIES.—The court shall decline to hear and determine a claim under this section if the defendant establishes that clear and convincing evidence exists that the claimant has not exhausted adequate and available remedies in the place in which the conduct giving rise to the claim occurred. The court shall not infer the application of any statute of limitations or similar period of limitations in an action under this section.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "torture" means any act by which severe pain or suffering (other than pain or suffering arising only from or inherent in, or incidental to, lawful sanctions), whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purpose as obtaining from that person or a third person information or a confession, punishing that person for an act that person or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing that person or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind; and

(2) the term "extrajudicial killing" means a deliberated killing without previous judgment pronounced by a regularly constituted court affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples.

SEC. 3. JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

(a) JURISDICTION OVER NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.—Chapter 85 (relating to district court jurisdiction) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"The district courts shall have jurisdiction over civil actions under section 2 of the Torture Victim Protection Act of 1989.".

(b) TABLE OF SECTIONS AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 85 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"1367. Cases under law creating remedies against torture and extrajudicial killings.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1662, the Torture Victim Protection Act, provides any person, whether a citizen of the United States or alien, a cause of action in Federal court for damages resulting from torture or extra-judicial killing. Specifically, this legislation states that any invidual committing such acts under color of law of any foreign nation shall be liable for money damages, or any other appropriate relief to the injured party or that party's legal representative. The legislation places torturers on notice that they will not find safe haven in the United States.

Acts of official torture and summary execution violate standards accepted by vitually every nation. For this reason, international initiatives seeking to address these human rights violations have placed special emphasis on enforcement measures. An example is the "Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment," which was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly, with strong support from the U.S. government. This convention obligates nations to adopt measures to ensure that torturers within their territories are held accountable for their acts. H.R. 1662 accomplishes this goal.

In the 100th Congress a similar bill, introduced by Mr. YATRON, was unanimously adopted by the Foreign Affairs Committee and the Judiciary Committee. The House passed the bill by voice vote on October 5, 1988.

In the 101st Congress, H.R. 1662 was again introduced again by Mr. YATRON. The full Judiciary Committee approved it by voice vote. Chairman DANTE FASCELL of the Foreign Affairs Committee, to which H.R. 1662 was jointly referred, has informed me that his committee will forgo action on this bill, without prejudice to that committee's jurisdiction. His letter is as follows:

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, September 8, 1989.

Hon. JACK BROOKS,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing to inform you that the Committee on Foreign Affairs will forego action on H.R. 1662, the Torture Victims Protection Act of 1989, without prejudice to the Committee's jurisdiction.

It is my understanding that the Committee on the Judiciary has reported this measure and would like to bring this matter before the House under suspension of the rules during the week of September 18, 1989. Therefore, I have no objection to the consideration of this measure and would request that you make our correspondence on this issue a part of the record during Floor consideration.

With best wishes, I am
Sincerely yours,
DANTE B. FASCELL,
Chairman.

Mr. Speaker, this is a small but important step forward in the protection of human rights and I am proud to speak in support of it.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] very much for his handling of this bill, and I rise in strong support of H.R. 1662, the "Torture Victim Protection Act", which was introduced by my colleague on the Foreign Affairs Committee, Gus Yatron, chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations. I would like to commend Chairman Yatron for pursuing the issue of civil redress for torture victims and for his consistent attention to human rights abuses wherever they may occur. I also want to thank the ranking minority member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Congressman BROOMFIELD and the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, Congressman BEREUTER for their part in this bipartisan effort to combat the practice of torture. Chairman BROOKS of the Judiciary Committee has also been a key player in considering this legislation and bringing it to the floor in such a timely fashion, as well as Chairman MORRISON of the Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law.

Identical legislation was marked up by the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations and the full Foreign Affairs Committee during the 100th Congress. The Torture Victim Protection Act then passed the House by voice vote last October. We should, once again, demonstrate our strong bipartisan support for universally recognized human rights by encouraging the development of effective domestic human rights laws in the United States.

Virtually every nation condemns torture and extrajudicial killing in principle, but in reality more than one-third of the world's governments engage in, condone and encourage such acts. During the past decade alone, hundreds of thousands of people have been killed by state authorities and thousands more have been persecuted and intimidated into silence through torture.

H.R. 1662 will clarify and expand existing human rights law and make our domestic law more effective in protecting basic human rights. This legislation will enable U.S. citizens, aliens, or their representatives who reside in the United States to bring a civil damages suit in Federal district courts against their oppressors. The Torture Victim Protection Act will not only provide tangible relief to victims, but will also be of symbolic value, showing that the United States is serious in denouncing the practice of torture.

The limitations outlined in the legislation require that the torturer was acting under the actual or apparent authority of their government and that they are present in the United States when the victim brings a civil action. In addition, the victim must have exhausted all remedies in the country where the torture took place before filing suit in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has been in the forefront in promoting respect for human rights throughout the world. If international human rights are to be given legal effect, we and other nations must provide domestic remedies to victims of torture. By passing the Torture Victim Protection Act we will convey the seriousness with which the U.S. Congress condemns torture and we will signal our unwillingness to provide safe havens to those who commit torture.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 1662, the Torture Victim Protection Act of 1989. This legislation provides a civil remedy in U.S. district courts in cases involving torture or "extrajudicial killing" inflicted under "color of law of any foreign nation."

We cannot allow individuals to get away with conduct that violates the most basic human rights because the countries that authorize or condone such conduct do not provide effective remedies to the victims. Injured parties or their legal representatives, however, must exhaust "adequate and available remedies" in the countries where the torture or extrajudicial killing occurs.

The infliction of torture under color of law is conduct so offensive to basic civilized norms as to justify providing a remedy in our courts even though the conduct occurs outside our borders. The legislation, of course, does not dispense with the requirement that the U.S. district court acquire personal jurisdiction over a defendant.

The additional burden this legislation imposes on the Federal court system is minimal. And few cases on the dockets of Federal courts will be more important than those contemplated by this legislation.

H.R. 1662 is an expression of our national determination to discourage torture and provide compensation to those who are victimized. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, as the ranking minority member of the Human Rights and International Organizations Subcommittee and an original cosponsor of H.R. 1662, I rise in strong support of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, we in the United States are a nation where rule of law and respect for the individual are recognized as paramount virtues. However, there is no disguising the fact that such is not the situation in many other nations that do not follow the U.S. examples. With disturbing frequency, certain regimes and juntas employ terror and torture to maintain contol.

Torture is a pervasive, insidious threat to the well-being of mankind. Those dictators who engage in torture seek to dehumanize their populations, turning the people into cogs in a totalitarian regime. Of course, the practice of torture violates the most basic of democratic values. We do not tolerate the practice of torture in the United States. Nor should we excuse torture if practiced by others, whether they are friends or adversaries.

The Torture Victim Protection Act [TVPA] is an important bipartisan piece of human rights legislation. It allows victims of torture residing in the United States to bring civil action in Federal court against the torturer. Any person who, under actual or apparent authority of a foreign nation, subjects others to torture or extrajudicial killing would be liable. The TVPA is designed to protect not only aliens living in this country, but also U.S. citizens who have been tortured abroad.

The Torture Victim Protection Act is very specific and narrowly drawn legislation, and as such is unlikely to result in an inappropriately large number of lawsuits. However its approval will serve as a strong message and deterrent to those who engage in torture. The TVPA alerts the world that the United States is not a safe haven for torturers.

Mr. Speaker, the TVPA was considered and approved by this body last year. During that process, extensive hearings were conducted regarding the potential impact of this legislation. At these hearings, witneses from the human rights community and the legal community agreed its passage would call attention to the fact that the practice of torture does, in fact, continue to exist. It was further agreed that providing a highly visible legal mechanism for exacting compensation should provide a powerful incentive for those who engage in torture to cease this inhumane behavior.

It should be noted that, from its inception, this legislation has been a bipartisan effort. The leadership of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] should be commended. Likewise, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] should be praised for bringing this legislation to the floor in such an expeditious manner. The special effort and energy of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who has been quite active on this issue, also deserves commendation.

Mr. Speaker, as an original cosponsor of the legislation presently before this body, this Member would urge his colleagues to join in supporting the Torture Victim Protection Act.

□ 1420

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, this bill is virtually identical to legislation which was passed by the House in the 100th Congress, but was not acted on by the Senate. The Torture Victim Protection Act seeks to remove whatever ambiguities may be argued to exist with regard to whether a noncitizen of the United States may maintain a cause of action in Federal court for damages resulting from torture or extrajudicial killing, and the bill also expands existing law by providing that U.S. citizens have that same right to redress in U.S. courts.

Specifically, the legislation states that any individual acting under color of law of any foreign nation shall be liable to the party injured or that party's legal representative for any torture or extrajudicial killing.

The bill is crafted to reach those cases where a remedy in U.S. courts is most appropriate. It would allow the adjudication of claims based upon torture or summary executions only when the perpetrator seeks the protection of our shores or otherwise subjects himself to the personal jurisdiction of a U.S. court.

On April 5, this bill was unanimously approved by the Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law of the Committee on the Judiciary. On April 29 it was adopted by the full Committee on the Judiciary. As the chairman of the Judiciary Committee has noted, the Foreign Affairs Committee has waived jurisdiction to expedite consideration of the bill on the floor.

This legislation is essential to the U.S. obligation to make not only international agreements in opposition to torture, but to make clear that U.S. courts remain open to those individuals who are victims of torture and who may find that the perpetrator of that torture is here in the United States or within the reach of our judicial process.

By itself, H.R. 1662 will not eliminate torture. We need a panoply of actions in our foreign policy, as well as in our domestic law, to make sure that torture is discouraged, condemned, and punished. Nonetheless, the bill does provide a critical element to our effort by keeping our courts open to anyone who might be able to redress their injuries in those courts.

I appreciate the support and leadership of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. BROOKS, as well as the ranking member of our subcommittee, Mr. SMITH, as well as the ranking member of the full committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who have cooperated to bring the bill to the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this measure deserves the broad support of the Members of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH].

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the eminent Dutch legal scholar Hugo Grotius observed some three centuries ago that a civilized international society requires the establishment of common rules and institutions, and the willingness and ability of the community to enforce them. Otherwise, he suggested, lawless elements will cynically trample down the social order and the law of the jungle will prevail. To paraphrase the English philosopher Thomas Hobbes, life itself would become "nasty, brutish, and short."

Tragically, however, the victims of torture and extrajudical killing around the world are grim testimony to the fact that while Hobbes' law of the jungle may have been slightly tamed, it has not yet been entirely superseded by the laws of civilization. While almost every nation around the world has in principle condemned these heinous crimes of violence, in practice many governments continue to engage in, tolerate, or condone such unconscionably brutal acts. In almost every corner of the world, torture and the torturer remain a terrible scourge of the human race—mute and somber evidence of mankind's capacity, from time to time, to commit unmitigated evil.

Neither the United States nor the world community can afford to stay silent in the face of such despicable crimes. This bill—the Torture Victim Protection Act—helps hold human rights violators accountable for the gross misdeeds by amending the United Nations Participation Act of 1945 to carry out our obligations under the United Charter and other international agreements pertaining to the protection of human rights by providing a civil action for recovery from persons engaging in torture, and for extrajudicial killing.

While some principles of public international law remain highly unsettled and subject to ongoing academic debate, there are some legal principles so fundamental to the existence of international society that they acquire the attributes of jus cogens, or peremptory norms of international law.

The right of the individual to be free from torture is such a norm.

In the words of a distinguished American jurist, deliberate torture perpetrated under color of official authority violates universally accepted norms of the international law of human rights. The torturer, therefore, has become hosti humani generis, or an enemy of humankind.

As the International Court of Justice declared in the 1980 Hostages Case between Iran and the United States: "recognition of the existence of fundamental human rights has spread throughout the international community. The existence of such fundamental human rights for all human beings, nationals and aliens alike, and the existence of a corresponding duty on every state to respect and observe them, are now reflected" in a number of international covenants and declarations, including the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and corresponding portions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

One of the enduring principles of the foreign policy of the United States, and of American democracy, has been a decent respect for the opinions of mankind, and commitment to individual rights and the rule of law. We have, with rare exceptions, adhered to this principle and sought to assume a special responsibility in the world community to promote respect for human rights and the rule of law.

One of the ways in which the United States can promote and enforce peremptory norms of international law is through enforcement of human rights in our own domestic courts.

As article VI, section 2, of the U.S. Constitution makes clear, "all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges of Every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding."

In addition to treaties the other major source of international law—settled rules of customary international law—has been held by the U.S. Supreme Court in the Paquete Habana to be "part of our law, and must be ascertained and administered by the courts of justice of appropriate jurisdiction, as often as questions of right depending upon it are duly presented for their determination."

In 1984, after a series of hearings before the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the continuing problem of torture, Congress adopted and the President signed a joint resolution on torture. In reaffirming America's abhorrence of the use of torture under any circumstances, the resolution called upon the Congress to develop concrete mechanisms by which the United States can help combat torture throughout the world.

In 1980, in the case of Filartiga versus Pena-Irala, a former Paraguayan official was found to have civil liability in U.S. Federal court under a 1789 statute known as the Alien Tort Claims Act. The Alien Tort Claims Act has subsequently been used successfully in other human rights cases. But the Federal courts remain divided on the question of whether the Alien Tort Claims Act provides a proper basis for civil suits of this nature.

The Torture Victim Protection Act, in keeping with the mandate of the joint resolution on torture, is an effort to clarify this area of Federal law. At the same time, it is a clear manifestation of the willingness of the United States to undertake to respect, observe and enforce this fundamental international human right.

This act establishes a Federal right of action against violators of human rights by authorizing civil suits by both aliens and U.S. citizens—for whom relief is unavailable under the Alien Tort Claims Act—who have been victims of flagrant human rights abuses.

Mr. Speaker, the continued perpetration of torture is nauseating and an affront to civilized society. It would be equally revolting, however, if a torturer was physically present in the United States but could not be sued by the victim because of inadequacies or ambiguity in our present law. This modest bill would address that issue by clearly establishing a Federal right of action by both aliens and U.S. citizens against persons who, under color of foreign law, engage in acts of torture or extrajudicial killing as defined by the law of nations.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, today this body takes an important step to discourage human rights abuses abroad and provide recompense to the victims of brutality. Under the terms of H.R. 1662, our Federal courts will hear civil cases brought by individuals subjected to torture and the legal representatives of persons who lose their lives in extrajudicial killings.

The Alien Tort Claims Act, which dates back almost two centuries, provides an alien with a civil remedy for a tort committed in violation of the Law of Nations—28 U.S.C. 1350. This old legislation, however, extends no protection to U.S. citizens and uncertain protection to noncitizens living in our country. The explicit language of H.R. 1662 clearly is needed.

The countries that encourage torture and killing generally are the least likely to be able to adjudicate victims' claims fairly. The torturer who becomes subject to the jurisdiction of our courts must not be shielded by the lack of remedies in the very country that encourages his action.

This legislation has been the subject of substantial congressional scrutiny. Last year, the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations held hearings on similar legislation. The Committee on Foreign Affairs concluded:

It was the consensus of opinion of expert witnesses in the legal field, as well as prominent members of the human rights community, that passage of this legislation would be very beneficial in calling attention to the plight of torture victims, and curtailing this practice.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1662, which is virtually identical to the bill passed by this body last year.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1662, the Torture Victim Protection Act, which I introduced earlier this year. I want to thank Chairman FASCELL and Congressman BROOMFIELD for their continued consideration and support of this effort to combat torture. I also want to commend Congressman BEREUTER, the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations for his support of H.R. 1662, as well as Chairmen BROOKS and MORRISON and Congressman FISH for their thoughtful deliberation of this legislation in the Judiciary Committee.

As some of you may remember, this bipartisan initiative passed the House last Congress. The Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations conducted hearings, made recommendations, and reported the Torture Victim Protection Act to the full Foreign Affairs Committee by unanimous voice vote in March and April of last year. The full committee marked up the legislation in June 1988 and reported the bill, as amended, favorably to the House by voice vote. On October 5, 1988 the bill passed the House by voice vote. I reintroduced the Torture Victim Protection Act, H.R. 1662, without changes on April 4, 1989.

It is time for us to, again, endorse the Torture Victim Protection Act which will further human rights law. In this way torture victims may seek recourse for the crimes committed against them and hold their tortures accountable for their actions.

H.R. 1662, The Torture Victim Protection Act of 1989, provides a Federal cause of action against any person who, under color of law of any foreign nation, subjects any individual to torture or extrajudicial killing. The victim, or their representative, and the torturer must be in the United States at the same time in order for the victim to seek civil redress and, then, only when the victim has exhausted remedies in the country where the violation took place.

The Torture Victim Protection Act provides a clear basis for a cause of action which has existed under the Alien Tort Claims Act of 1789, but which provides a remedy only to aliens. The Torture Victim Protection Act would give U.S. citizens who have been tortured abroad a remedy, as well as aliens.

Mr. Speaker, official torture and extrajudicial killing is condemned by every nation in the world. However, while condemning torture and summary executions, many governments condone and perpetuate these types of actions. By passing this legislation, we will send a clear message to these nations that we do not condone acts of torture and summary executions and we will support victims who choose to press for civil damages if their torturer is within our borders.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, virtually every nation in the world condemns the use of torture. However, torture in its many repugnant forms is still used in many areas of the world.

H.R. 1662, the Torture Victim Protection Act, would provide legal substance to our Nation's opposition to the use of torture. It allows victims of torture or their representatives to bring civil action in Federal court against tortures or individuals who commit political killings.

Enactment of this bill is necessary because the Alien Tort Claims Act of 1789 has been successfully used in some cases to limit claims resulting from torture committed under official authority.

H.R. 1662 corrects this ambiguity. It would declare the United States off limits to those who would torture or murder their fellow human beings in foreign countries under the authority of foreign governments.

It is unfortunate that the Department of State opposes this bill. I can appreciate the Department's view that Congress should focus its attention on retifying the Torture Convention. But I do not believe these two approaches to addressing these horrible crimes need to be an either/or matter.

The United States should have a full arsenal of weapons against those who commit torture or murder under the cloak of official authority. Adopting the Torture Victims Protection Act will enhance the protections available to the victims of torture in the courts of the United States.

The Department of State is also concerned that through this bill the United States would be unilaterally extending its jurisdiction over actions that occur overseas. If there were ever a reason to extend the jurisdiction of our courts, however, this is certainly it. Enactment of this legislation would continue the leadership role of the United States on human rights.

I wish to congratuate Congressman GUS YATRON and Congressman DOUG BEREUTER, the chairman and ranking Republican of the Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, Congressmen JACK BROOKS and HAMILTON FISH, the chairman and the ranking Republican of the Judiciary Committee, and Congressman JIM LEACH of the Foreign Affairs Committee for their dedication and perseverance in bringing this legislation before us.

The bill is supported by several private human rights groups including Amnesty International and the Lawyers Committee on Human Rights, and by the American Bar Association. A version of this bill was passed by the House during the last Congress.

As an original cosponsor and a strong supporter of this proposal, I urge my colleagues to pass the Torture Victim Protection Act again in this Congress, and make it part of the law of the land. Let us firmly say that the United States will never be a safe haven for those who engage in torture, murder, or other gross human rights violations under the color of law.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my strong support for H.R. 1662, the Torture Victims Protection Act of 1989.

Despite the universal consensus condemning torture and summary execution perpetrated by official government organs, many governments continue to break the parameters of decency and humanity by tolerating the torture of their own citizens.

This act gives an injured party or his legal representative the right to take civil action against an individual who, under the color of law of any foreign nation, subjects any individual to suffering from mental or physical pain inflicted for purposes of obtaining a confession, punishment or coercion. The bill also allows an individual to take action against a government guilty of condoning extrajudicial killing. This legislation gives jurisdiction to the Federal district courts, and requires that the plaintiff must prove that a foreign government was involved in such killing or torture.

Mr. Speaker, it is macabre that in the 20th century we still need to discuss this issue, nonetheless to pass such legislation. Yet, Amnesty International and other human rights groups remind us on a daily basis that human beings continue to be subject to heinous acts perpetrated by other human beings.

Mr. Speaker, this bill requires that the claimant must have exhausted every available and adequate remedy in the country in which the alleged torture, or extrajudicial killing took place. It is an appropriate measure. Accordingly, I strongly urge its passage.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1662, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed until the previously announced time of 4:30 p.m. today.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1662, the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

AMENDING ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT IMPEACHING WALTER L. NIXON, JR., JUDGE OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I send two privileged resolutions to the desk and ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

H. RES. 251

Resolved, That the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against Walter L. Nixon, a judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, are amended in the second paragraph of article II and in paragraph (2)(G) of article III, by striking "in any way influence anybody" and inserting "that in any way influenced anybody".

H. RES. 252

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate by the Clerk of the House, informing the Senate that the House of Representatives has adopted amendments to the articles of impeachment exhibited against Walter L. Nixon, Jr., a judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, and that the amendments will be presented to the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the first of these resolutions is to make certain technical amendments to articles II and III of the articles of impeachment against Judge Walter L. Nixon. At the time the House passed the original text of the articles in question, Judge Nixon had stipulated to the language of his grand jury testimony, upon which the articles were based. Since that time, through the use of sophisticated electronic equipment to conduct an analysis of the tape recording of the grand jury testimony, all parties have agreed that certain changes, which the managers believe to be minor and nonmaterial, should be made in that language.

The managers of the impeachment on the part of the House offer these minor and purely technical amendments to the articles of impeachment out of an abundance of caution. It is the judgment of the managers that the fact that the judge made false and misleading statements to the grand jury is not affected in any way by these minor changes in the text of his statement.

The second resolution merely directs that the Senate be informed of the amendments to the articles of impeachment.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he many consume to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER], an outstanding member of the impeachment staff.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] in support of the two resolutions.

Basically the first resolution proposes a one-word addition to articles 2 and 3 of the articles of impeachment previously adopted by the House of Representatives. As the gentleman from Texas has so adequately explained, this one-word addition came from an analysis of the tape of Judge Nixon's grand jury testimony by sophisticated electronic equipment.

It should be noted that the judge himself stipulated to the accuracy of the prior transcripts that did not contain this one-word omission, and that was used for purposes of both the House proceedings as well as certain parts of the Senate proceedings.

It is the position of the managers on the part of the House in the Nixon impeachment trial presently being conducted in the other body that the addition of the word "that" in one point in article 2 and in one point in article 3 makes no change in the substance of the false statements that Judge Nixon made to the grand jury. The resolutions are before us today merely to clean up the record as a result of the sophisticated electronic equipment being able to make the corrections in the tape that everybody thought was correct for 3 or 4 years up until this point.

Mr. Speaker, I do support the motion of the gentleman from Texas to adopt these two resolutions.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolutions en bloc.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolutions.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I, further proceedings on these resolutions will be postponed until after the votes today no motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 1486) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for the Maritime Administration, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] if he would be so kind as to explain for the purposes of the Record what exactly is in this legislation passed by the Senate.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. BENTLEY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, we have noted the changes made by the Senate and find that, overall, they leave intact the most salient and important features of this bill that passed the House by unanimous voice vote on May 2, 1989.

In two areas, the Senate added language that did not appear in the House-passed version, and we have no difficulty with the legislative language so added. We note that the Senate report—in discussing the changes to the language extending the period of the war risk insurance program to 1995—correctly suggests, as is stated in section 7 of the bill, that vessels eligible for coverage under the program be available if required by the United States.

The report goes on to seemingly require that—in order to be eligible—that vessels be "subject to requisitioning." "Requisitioning" is a term of art that is not used in the statutory language, and we view its use in the report as merely illustrative of devices that may be employed to insure that vessels indeed will be made available in time of emergency if required by the United States.

It is not the judgment of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries that a vessel be subject to requisition as a condition precedent to eligibility for war risk insurance under title XII of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentleman from North Carolina and the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee for his perseverance, persistence and hard work in bringing this bill to the point it is today. It is through your fine work, Mr. Chairman, that H.R. 1486 moved through the Senate with only minor changes. The changes that were made by the other body are, in my opinion, acceptable, and I concur with the chairman's comments particularly concerning the Senate changes to the War Risk Insurance Program.

On another point, I am particularly pleased to see that the Senate has retained a provision which I had included in H.R. 1486, upon its first introduction in this body back in the spring. This provision, section 4 in the House bill, section 5 in the Senate version, increases the direct payments to the Great Lakes Regional Academy. No additional budget authority is required and our review indicates that sufficient funds are available in MarAD's operating budget to implement this change. Under this change, moneys contributed by Michigan and other Great Lakes States will be matched by the Federal Government up to certain limits. This added funding will also give the Great Lakes Academy an added incentive to appeal to Great Lakes States other than Michigan for funding.

With job prospects strong for Regional Maritime Academy graduates, this change to existing funding provisions could not come at a better time.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for his explanation, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. I have a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, could the Chair inform the House how we intend to handle the balance of today now, given that Members have been informed that there would not be votes before 4:30?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the procedure and statements announced on Friday, it is the Chair's intention to go to special orders, at which time, if we have reached the hour of 4:30, the Chair would interrupt those special orders for the purpose of going to the votes which were postponed under previous suspension of the rules and two privileged resolutions en bloc, and proceed thereafter with special orders.

In the event that we conclude special orders prior to 4:30, the Chair would seek a recess until 4:30 or immediately thereafter in order to proceed with those votes as previously described by the Chair.

Mr. WALKER. So it is possible, Mr. Speaker, that the Chair would seek recess authority to allow us to get to the 4:30 time if we run out of special orders? Is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct. The Chair does not intend to proceed to votes prior to the announced 4:30 time.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Chair.

THE SELLING OF AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, when a Japanese real estate agent visiting Manhattan was quoted as saying, "Everything here is so cheap," warning bells and red flags immediately came to mind.

This statement is a symbol of the times and represents the changing way our Nation conducts its business.

It is no secret that foreign interests, including Japanese, South Korean, West German, and Swiss have instituted a smorgasbord mentality toward purchases of United States companies and assets. Factories, skyscrapers, shopping malls, farms, ski resorts, vineyards, medical and bio-tech companies, refineries, and more, are just a few of the goodies on the menu.

But these purchases are not enough. Foreign buyers see profit in other, less traditional service industries, such as banking, and their presence is being felt throughout the financial world.

Buying stakes in American banks seems to be good policy for foreigners—but there are those who believe these advancements are detrimental to the health of the American banking industry and the economy as a whole.

An article in the Wall Street Journal dated September 11, 1989 notes:

Japan has only 158 commercial banks, the U.S. has more than 14,000. Aided by "cooperative leveraging", the booming Tokyo stock market has recently become a major source of funds and the market capitalization of the 13 largest Japanese banks now totals some $500 billion dollars.

The article also points out the losses that U.S. banks are hiding.

Loans to the third world, farm loans and bad mortgages all lower the assets of American banks making them virtually incapable of competing against wealthy foreign banks.

If the U.S. maintains an open-market policy in financial services, it is easy to imagine how the foreign share of the domestic banking marketplace could expand dramatically during the 1990's. Once barriers to American interstate banking come down next year, the Japanese could use their strong California base to expand into retail banking throughout the Western United States . . . Because of their highly competitive pricing, some Japanese officials believe that Japanese banks could increase their share of the U.S. commercial-banking market to 25 percent by the mid-1990's.

Looking at Japanese companies alone, establishment of a 25-percent share of the U.S. banking market by the mid-1990's is no laughing matter. The people of California were not laughing this past August when they began discovering that Japanese-owned banks now hold "25 percent of their banking assets, up from 10 percent seven years ago."

Gene Bylinsky of Forbes Magazine writes, "The newspapers were quick to note that if California's Japanese-owned banks were combined into one, their $93.4 billion in assets would outweigh even the Bank of America's $83 billion."

To discover the full impact of what it means when our banks are no longer our banks, consider the following example.

A fictitious company, we will call it American Steel, is experiencing short-term cash-flow difficulties, preventing a much needed upgrade of the manufacturing facilities.

American Steel chooses to borrow funds from a bank, which, under most circumstances, would not be a problem. However, American Steel will be borrowing from Mitsubishi Bank of Japan.

Mitsubishi Bank owns a stake in Mitsubishi Heavy Industries who also manufacture steel. Mitsubishi Bank will have access to information about these companies—a financial gold mine and something our own companies disclose only on a voluntary and confidential basis.

It is interesting to note that the Japanese have concentrated, thus far, on business lending. An article in the October 1, New York Times, by Michael Quint points this out. Mr. Quint says, "* * * the Japanese have concentrated on business leading rather than the consumer market."

The article follows:

JAPAN'S GIANT BANKS ON THE MARCH—AMERICANS GET THE JITTERS AS TOKYO' BIG PLAYERS RAISE THEIR U.S. STAKES

Dai-Ichi Kangyo, the world's largest bank, isn't trying to catch the fancy of millions of American consumers, as Toyota and Sony have. It will settle for a close relationship with 10,000 or so corporate treasurers.

When Dal-Ichi Kangyo agreed to invest $1.4 billion in the Manufacturers Hanover Corporation in mid-September, the deal underscored just how attractive the American banking market had become to the Japanese. After years of laboring quietly to the United States, buying a few banks in California and arranging low-profit loans to large businesses, more Japanese bankers have been raising their sights laterly to take aim at the so-called middle market of business borrowers, the most profitable sector of all.

The deal with Manufacturers Hanover, for instance, will give Dal-Ichi a 60 percent share of the CIT Group, a major finance company with 50 offices around the country. Besides having a projected profit of about $135 million this year, CIT is an ideal network to gain entree to medium-sized companies.

"Expanding in the U.S. is of primary importance to us," siad Yuko Oana, a senior managing director at Dal-Ichi who orchestrated the deal with Manufacturers Hanover. Through its New York branch, and other offices is Los Angeles, Chicago and Atlanta, Dal-Ichi already has more than $30 billion of assets in the United States, a level that would put it among the 20 largest American banking companies. The American market is particularly attractive, Mr. Oana said, because it produces higher profits than Japanese banks can get at home.

Those profits have been the catalyst for several other deals by the Japanese in recent years, albeit not on the scale of the Dal-Ichi purchase, which was by far the largest American acquisition by a Japanese bank. Now, however, the Dal-Ichi deal is seen as a harbinger of other large purchases by the Japanese.

"The Japanese banks were slower than others to expand overseas, but they are clearly making up for lost time," said Thomas H. Hanley, managing director at Salomon Brothers, the New York investment banking firm. Flush with fresh capital from a series of new equity offerings, and readily able to raise more capital at a lower cost than other banks, "the Japanese banks have a real competitive advantage," Mr. Hanley said. Future alliances on the magnitude of the recently announced merger of Mitsui Bank and Taiyo Kobe Bank, creating the world's second-largest bank, will not be limited to Japan, he added.

"As might be expected, the prospect of more competition from Japan's banking behemoths is giving the jitters to at least some American bankers. They fear that the Japanese will compete so fiercely for business from middle-market companies that they will cut prices and make do with smaller profits than American banks are used to.

"And there is plenty of room to maneuver. Over the past nine years, excluding 1987, when they suffered huge losses on Latin American lending, large American banks on average earned three times more per dollar of assets than their Japanese counterparts. The largest American banking company, Citicorp, is the world's most profitable, even though it is only the 10th largest in terms of assets.

"The Japanese success in industries like cars and consumer electronics raises the question of whether banking faces a similar future, and if so, what the benefits and costs might be.

"We will receive a supply of good products as the Japanese buy their way into the forefront of the financial services business," said Ricahrd W. Wright, a professor of international management at Willamette University in Salem, Ore., and co-author of "The Second Wave: Japan's Global Assault on Financial Services."

But the danger, he added is that Japanese dominance in banking would be "another threat to our overall competitiveness and innovative capacity."

Not everyone is worried, Economists claim that if businesses can borrow more cheaply because of Japanese lending, the American economy and consumers benefit. And it still has not been proved that Japanese capital can buy success in other key lines of the banking business, including retail banking or financial advisory services like arranging mergers and acquisitions.

Robert E. Litan, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, said there is no doubt that the Japanese pose a major challenge to American banks. But while that competition might prove painful in some banks in the United States, he sees little danger to its economy as a whole.

"The more alliances the Japanese banks form in the United States, and the bigger their market share, the less likely they are to rock the boat," Mr. Litan said.

And in Washington, there has been no move in the Senate or House of Representatives to investigate or limit the activities of Japanese or other foreign banks. In the past, legislators have threatened to prevent Japanese banks and securities firms from acting as primary dealers in Treasury securities. Primary dealers are a prestigious group of firms designated by the Federal Reserve that dominate trading in the Treasury securities market. But the threat of legislative action has become more remote as the Japanese gradually opened their financial markets to more American companies.

Much of the impetus for the push to expand overseas has come from the saturation of the Japanese banking market. Corporate lending opportunities for Japanese banks have been cut as large companies turned to the financial markets for their funding. With savings in Japan growing by about $1 billion per day, the keen competition for local investments keeps profit margins low and encourages banks to look elsewhere for new opportunities.

"At first in the 1960's and 1970's, Japanese banks just followed the industrial companies who were their customers in Japan," said Takanori Mizuno, New York director of the Institute for Financial Affairs, a Japanese information and educational organization. "But about 1980, they began to approach U.S. corporations, and by the middle 1980's, they saw the opportunities in the middle market,"

The push overseas gained momentum in the past two years after banking regulators in major Western countries agreed on uniform financial standards that required Japanese banks to greatly increase their capital. After raising $26.5 billion of equity, or shareholder money, in the past year, the Japanese banks are comfortable with the new standards and have a new-found sense of their financial muscle.

Michiya Matsukawn, chairman of the Nikko Research Institute and a former senior official in Japan's Ministry of Finance, noted that the additional capital has put the Japanese banks in a position where they are more tempted than ever to gain market share overseas by shaving interest rates on loans.

That practice, while it benefits borrowers, is worrisome to bankers and regulators in countries where new capital cannot be raised as cheaply as in Japan. In those countries, including the United States, banks rely heavily on the higher profits to accumulate a cushion against hard times.

The Japanese banks got still another reason late last week to pay more attention to foreign lending opportunities when the Bank of Japan, in an effort to curb inflationary pressures, ordered the banks to reduce the growth rate of lending in Japan during the fourth quarter.

American bankers have for several years lamented the influx of foreign banks, which accounted for 27.6 percent of all outstanding domestic business loans by the middle of 1988, up from 21.4 percent five years earlier. Japanese banks lending, up from a 34 percent share five years ago. Most of that growth bankers agree, has come from "bargain basement" pricing of loans to large corporations that owe no allegiance to any bank, except the one offering the lowest price.

"The term 'house bank' is quickly disappearing," said Rainer E. Gut, chairman of Credit Suisse, Zurich, an internationally minded lender. And outside Japan he said, "Corporations are gradually losing the fear of entering business relationship with Japanese banks."

Since the 1950's, when Japanese banks first began to appear on the American scene, they have concentrated on corporate banking, first with Japanese companies, then with American corporations doing business with those Japanese companies. While Japanese banks operate huge branch systems in their home country, they have yet to tackle the retail market here, except in California.

The strong presence of Japanese industrial companies and a large Japanese community have made California so attractive to Japanese banks that they now control about a quarter of the state's deposits and more than 30 percent of its business loans.

About 10 Japanese banks, including the Bank of Tokyo, Sanwa, Sumitomo and Mitsubishi, now own full-service banks in the state. Through a series of acquisitions in the past few years, they have dramatically increased their stake in the retail market, to the point where they now have 424 branches, up from 247 in 1982.

But even with these branches, the Japanese have concentrated on business lending rather than the consumer market. In line with that philosophy, they have not bought any savings and loans, despite the availability of many financially troubled savings institutions in California and other parts of the nation.

Two of the largest acquisitions they have made have been from British banks that found the California market too tough for their liking. The Bank of Tokyo, for example, bought the Union Bank, a San Francisco-based specialist in middle-market lending and construction financing, from Standard Chartered P.L.C. for $750 million a year ago, and now has the fifth-largest bank in California. Lacking a branch network in Japan, the Bank of Tokyo now has more than 9,000 employees in the United States.

The other British deal came in 1986, when the Sanwa Bank of California, now the state's sixth largest, paid $263 million to acquire the Lloyds Bank of California.

Despite their growth, the Japanese in California have not broken the grip of the four largest American banks, which continue to control about two-thirds of the market. And so far, the Japanese have not managed to operate efficiently enough to generate the same amount of profit from each dollar of assets as the Americans.

Gary C. Zimmerman, an economist at the San Francisco Federal Reserve Bank, noted in a recent study published by the bank that "there is no compelling evidence that Japanese commercial banks have an advantage in providing retail banking services in California."

The California experience has been humbling enough that some Japanese bankers, including those at Dai-Ichi, which operates the largest branch system in Japan, disavow any intention of making a major push into the American consumer market. In fact, Dai-Ichi sold its retail banking operation in Chicago this year.

Similarly, Hisaya Nara, deputy president of the Mitsubishi Bank of Tokyo, said he expects rapid growth to continue at the Bank of California, which Mitsubishi acquired in 1984, but not necessarily in the retail sector. Assets at the Bank of California, now the seventh largest in the state, are expected to rise to $10 billion within two or three years, from about $7 billion now. But rather than going after consumers in a big way, Mitsubishi's primary effort will be to pursue middle-market business customers, Mr. Nara said.

The middle market that the Japanese are courting more assiduously than before in the United States is loosely defined, but is generally meant to include the thousands of companies that have revenues above $5 million yet are not large enough to rank among the Fortune 500.

As the largest corporations have learned to bypass banks and borrow directly in the capital markets through the sale of commercial paper or bonds, bankers have avidly cultivated the middle-market companies. Because those companies lack access to the capital markets, they rely more on bank financing, and tend to pay higher interest rates than the largest corporations.

The average interest rate on loans to all borrowers at Manufacturers Hanover, for example, is 2.4 percentage points higher than what the banking company must pay for its borrowed funds. But at the CIT Group, which leads exclusively to middle-market clients, the interest spread is more than 5 percentage points.

Even if Japanese banks resist the temptation to gain market share by cutting prices, they gain other benefits from their financial strength. John F. McGillicuddy, chairman of Manufacturers Hanover (which continues to hold 40 percent of CIT), said that profits at the finance company would be helped as the backing of the capital-rich Dai-Ichi reduces CIT's cost of borrowing.

Japanese banks have long recognized the profit potential in the American middle market, but they have also recognized that it is a hotly contested area that relies more on personal relationships with borrowers than does lending to the largest corporations. So far, the Japanese have found it easier to gain middle-market customers through acquisitions, particularly from companies in some sort of financial difficulty.

Manufacturers Hanover, for example, did not want to sell control of CIT, a company that it had worked hard to improve after buying it from RCA in 1985. But the New York bank faced a dire need for capital to cover losses on its loans to Latin American countries.

Earlier, in 1985, the Sanwa Bank bought a leasing unit with more than $500 million of assets from the Continental Illinois Corporation. That deal came at a time when Continental was selling most of its non-bank assets to recover from losses on fraudulent oil loans it bought from the Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma.

In 1983, the Fuju Bank paid $425 million to buy the Walter E. Heller International Corporation, a struggling finance company that was about to be acquired by the Security Pacific National Banks in Los Angeles for $400 million. Although Fuji has since invested more than $1 billion in Heller, and has only recently begun to show a profit, it gained a foothold in thousands of corporate boardrooms through Heller's network of offices in 68 cities.

Not all the recent Japanese purchases have been from distressed sellers;

In June, Security Pacific sold 5 percent of its consumer and commercial finance operations to Mitsui Bank for $100 million and gave Mitsui an option to buy another 5 percent at the same price.

Later in the summer, Orix international Japan's largest leasing company, bought the leasing operations of the Los Angeles-based First Interstate Bancorp for $190 million.

And in mid-September, Daiwa Bank, Japan's 15th largest, paid $200 million to buy a pool of American middle-market loans from Lloyds Bank of London. Daiwa also picked up 15 offices in the United States from Lloyds, taking a shortcut around the normal process of obtaining approval from Japanese regulators for each new office.

According to Dai-Ichi's Mr. Oana, there are many other opportunities in the United States. While running the banks New York branch during the past three years, he said, he was approached at least 10 times with offers to buy American financial companies. Last week, Dai-Ichi announced an alliance with Clayton & Dubilier Inc., a New York-based specialist in mergers and acquisitions, and promised to invest $100 million in a corporate buyout fund managed by the New York company, Dai-Ichi is still looking to acquire a California-based finance company that could operate in tandem with a small bank it owns in San Francisco.

The pressure to expand into American financial markets is not confined to the largest Japanese banks. So for, 32 of Japan's 64 regional banks have offices in the United States, along with 9 of the country's 88 "sogo" banks, a kind of mutural savings institution.

"Right now, there are only four or five regional banks that have gone beyond their Japanese customers to seeking business with American firms," said Bruce E. Aronson, a partner at the law firm of Hughes, Hubbard & Reed. "But in three to five years I expect to see another 20 or 25 doing that."

While the prospect of even more Japanese competitors is daunting to many American bankers, they should remember that the imposing size of the newcomers relects the limited number of banks in Japan. The Japanese market is divided among only about 150 banks, compared with more than 13,000 in the United States.

The best way to help American banks meet the challenge posed by the powerful newcomers is to "modernize the U.S. financial system by eliminating barriers to interstate banking and bank activities in the securities markets," said Lawrence R. Uhlick, executive director of the Institute of International Bankers, which includes several Japanese members.

"In a global economy, Americans have to recognize that there is going to be a significant segment of the U.S. financial market owned and operated by non-domestic institutions, just like American firms own and operate significant businesses in other countries," Mr. Uhlick added.

Business lending has its benefits—foreign-owned banks will have access to American corporate information. Once Japanese banks gain a solid, stable foothold in the business end of the banking industry, the consumer market will fall into place—following the money.

Some individuals view this trend by foreign banks as a healthy result of financial globalization; but it seems more akin to what has been going on in the financial world with inside trading and in the export-import world with dumping.

In the first instance, foreign-owned banks will have access to internal information about our industries. These deals remind me of the words to the song, "Santa Claus Is Comin' To Town."

The words, "He knows when you've been sleeping, he knows when you're awake, and he knows if you've been bad or good," are prophetic. Mitsubishi Bank will know everything and more about American steel.

These banks will know if a company is healthy by the assets they hold, just as they will know when a company is unhealthy and a prime candidate for takeover.

The American banking system's desperation for capital has thrown out over 200 years of caution, acting as though American rules will be observed by foreign banks.

It is not against the law to share in Japan and we know of many instances where American corporation information has been passed around Japan.

Every major American steel corporation, with the exception of Bethlehem Steel, has gone into joint ventures with foreign corporations. This sets up a situation where American steel companies are not allowed under antitrust laws to meet together and share plans for information on pricing or targeting market share—and most foreign corporations do not operate under these restrictions.

Think about it—our free enterprise steel companies are going into business with government-owned and/or government-controlled foreign steel producers who are free to meet abroad and share all of the information they have received from their American partners. This enables them to put together a strategy for that nation to takeover American markets.

Author Marvin Wolfe described this phenomenon in his book the "Japanese Conspiracy" and recalled how the Japanese targeted the United States television market. In this instance, foreign firms united and shared information taken from their American counterparts. And now our television industry is off the air.

If one would guess why a foreign company would invest $1 billion in an American joint venture and then sabotage its own U.S. interests, consider investing $1 billion in order to gain control of a multibillion-dollar market for your own national industry.

At one time, our industries scoffed at the Japanese practice of targeting market share—now, no one is scoffing. Michiya Matsukawa, chairman of the Nikko Research Institute and a former senior official in Japan's Ministry of Finance, is quoted as saying, "The additional capital has put the Japanese banks in a position where they are more tempted than ever to gain market share overseas by shaving interest rates on loans."

If this declaration does not shake up our domestic banks, I suggest they talk to representatives of the machine tool industry or representatives of our former television industry. Among other things, these industries were eroded by an influx of cheap, foreign imports—more commonly known as dumping.

When large Japanese banks begin shaving their interest rates, we need look no further than recent history to tell us the future of the American banking and finance industry—an America without a dominant finance industry and without American-owned banks.

This hollowing out effect is happening now—and Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask permission to insert a chart that shows just how dramatically Japanese banks are increasing the size of their United States operations. This chart was taken from the New York Times article by Michael Quint, and is a good barometer of what is occurring within our banking industry. [The chart was not reproducible for the RECORD.]

American banks are selling all or part of their operations for a colloquial shot in the arm—and they crave this shot to cover losses from countless poor investments and because of greed—it is a good way to make a fast buck.

And now we find that our Nation's comprehensive financial picture may be just another domestic casualty exported to Japan. Many of us were assured that there was no need to worry about the loss of our manufacturing base—that service industries like banking would take up the slack.

We know now that this was a fairytale view of our service sector as the announcement of our first service industry deficit rolled off the presses.

Foreign owners of American banks could conceivably contact their overseas counterparts and say, "American Steel is not doing so well—don't worry about competition from them." Inside information, if you will, would be readily available and any transfer of information would be difficult to prove.

The United States has not fully recognized this threat because it has not really experienced foreign financial competition on-shore before. Many industries are totally unaware of the value of their internal information to foreign banks because our laws have proscribed others from obtaining this information.

Many times we mistakenly believe other nations' laws are similar to our own—a very dangerous, and costly, misconception.

The banking industry has had its share of peaks and valleys—but more recently, the industry seems to be stuck in the valley. We have not yet seen the last of the S&L crisis and, adding to this, an article by Jerry Knight in the September 20, Washington Post entitled, "Trouble Seen for Banks, Congress Told," warns of the vulnerability of U.S. banks.

Economist R. Dan Brumbaugh, Jr., recently completed a study on U.S. banks and his message to Congress is certainly frightening, but not too surprising. He echoes the Wall Street Journal article, stating:

> Hidden bank losses could wipe out $10 billion of the $14.1 billion reserves of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) leaving the fund too weak to protect depositors against a major economic downturn.

In other words, "the Nation's banks are beginning to show signs of some of the same kinds of problems that led to the $164 billion Government rescue of the thrift industry." Our banking industry may soon know what Atlas was feeling with the weight of the world resting on his shoulders.

Mr. Speaker, this news is devastating—after wrestling with the S&L crisis and now to hear about our banks, leaves me numb. I hope that what Dr. Brumbaugh says is not true—but from what I have seen recently, his warnings may be right on target.

The study also tells of "30 large banks with $23 billion in assets that are secretly insolvent and roughly 10 percent of the big banks do not have the capital they are supposed to have to protect against losses."

This indeed is a gloomy picture of U.S. banks and evidence supporting this assertion is mounting. For instance, on June 5, 1989, a Wall Street Journal article announced Manufacturers Hanover was discussing a capital infusion from Japanese banks because they were "burdened by a huge $1.4 billion portfolio of troubled Argentine country loans."

To bring this story up to date, a September 9, 1989, clip in the Wall Street Journal announced Manufacturers Hanover was near an agreement with Dai-Ichi Kangyo Bank Ltd., the world's largest bank with assets totaling $414 billion.

Dai-Ichi agreed to acquire a 4.9-percent stake in Manufacturers Hanover and a 60-percent interest in CIT group, its asset-based lending subsidiary.

CIT is Dai-Ichi's goldmine—purchase of the controlling interest in CIT gives Japan's largest bank an inside look into any American company which borrows from CIT. And if some of us do not think this is a problem, then we should take a long, hard look at an announcement by Wang, Inc., one of the oldest and largest manufacturers of computer hardware in the United States.

An AP newswire article dated September 25, 1989, and entitled, "Wang Announces Borrowing Scheme" is a case in point. Wang's financial difficulties are well known in the business community; and now Wang will be borrowing $175 million from CIT Group. This deal was announced as part of Wang's restructuring plan.

Well, it seems to me that the Wang scheme emphasizes the dangers. CIT Group, controlled by Japanese interests, will be privy to Wang's financial blueprint—and I would not be surprised if Wang, in the next month or two, announces a joint venture with a Japanese computer firm. This type of information is really worth its weight in gold.

Deals like this one will become increasingly common as American banks become more dependent on large Japanese banks for capitalization. Already Japanese institutions make about 5 percent of all United States loans and hold about 9 percent of our banking assets; and many experts are predicting a dramatic rise in these figures.

As more banks begin realizing their losses, Japanese banks will be there with cash in hand—buying shares, investing in stocks, and purchasing Treasury bonds.

The WSJ article, "How Serious a Threat Are Japan's Huge Banks," quotes David D. Hale, chief economist at Kemper Financial Services, Inc., as saying:

Japanese banks are charging ahead with powerful advantages.

Are there national security risks in letting U.S. entrepreneurs become heavily dependent on foreign institutions for financial research and development?

If Japanese banks have large cross shareholdings with Japanese industrial companies, can they be considered autonomous players in the way they handle classified information from U.S. customers in sectors potentially vulnerable to Japanese competition?

These tough questions are not being answered. American banks continue to accept capitalization from Japanese banks while our Government depends on Japanese purchases of Treasury notes to float the debt.

As author Daniel Burstein points out in his new book, "Yen":

An investment community that doesn't yet understand the degree to which America's finances are now subject to foreign controls—and continues to rely one-sidedly on American thinking—is capable of sleeping through the apocalypse and waking only after it is too late.

The potential for hollowing out of America is a very real threat. Analysts should be warning of the long-range dangers of selling themselves to a stranger.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 11, 1989]

JAPAN'S HUGE BANKS: HOW SERIOUS A THREAT?

(By Henry F. Myers)

Aided by huge trade surpluses, high savings rates and low costs of capital, Japan now has, by most measures, all 10 of the world's largest banks. Will they soon dominate global banking?

Perhaps. Noting that "the financial-service industry is now experiencing the same movement toward globalization which occurred in many goods-producing industries during the 1950s and 1960s," David D. Hale, the chief economist at Kemper Financial Services Inc., sees the Japanese banks charging ahead with powerful advantages.

He cites their concentration: Japan has only 158 commercial banks; the U.S., more than 14,000. He also says that, aided by "cooperative leveraging," the booming Tokyo stock market "has recently become a major source of funds," and the market capitalization of the 13 largest Japanese banks now totals some $500 billion.

"Because of their access to cheap equity," Mr. Hale adds, "Japanese financial institutions are poised to dominate the world financial system during the 1990s while American Banks will be constrained by low share-price multiples and a stock-market capitalization of only $95 billion for the nation's 50 largest institutions."

Another advantage enjoyed by Japanese banks, says Edward J. Kane, a professor of economics and finance at Ohio State University, is the fact that "they are holding strong assets, while U.S. and British banks have had hidden losses, on Third World loans, farm loans and bad mortgages."

So, Mr. Hale sees dangers ahead.

"If the U.S. maintains an open-market policy in financial services," he says, "it is easy to imagine how the foreign share of the domestic banking marketplace could expand dramatically during the 1990s. Once barriers to American interstate banking come down next year, the Japanese could use their strong California base to expand into retail banking throughout the Western United States. * * * Because of their highly competitive pricing, some Japanese officials believe that Japanese banks could increase their share of the U.S. commercial-banking market to 25 percent by the mid-1990s."

In California, according to Gary C. Zimmerman, an economist at the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, Japanese owned banks "held one-quarter of the banking assets and over 30 percent of all business loans" at the end of 1988. However, he says their "expansion has not occurred at the expense of domestic banks' market share. * * * Japanese banks essentially have replaced other foreign banks as the dominant foreign banking power," mostly by following long-time customers into the state. And so far, he finds little evidence that Japanese banks in California are relying heavily on low-cost funds supplied by their parent companies.

In any event, a Japanese conquest of U.S. banking isn't a sure thing.

Noting that Japan's big securities firms have flopped on Wall Street, Jeremy Siegel, a professor of finance at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, comments: "Competition in banking is much like competition in any other area. Largeness doesn't always mean more efficiency. You can become top-heavy and fall to find niches. And, unlike automobiles, quality doesn't enter into it; money is money." He adds:

"I don't know if they know the American market, how to judge the risk of a loan or what they know about the bankruptcy law. Getting the flavor of the legal as well as the financial structure isn't easy."

And American banks benefit from some competitive edges of their own. Prof. Siegel observes that the U.S., unlike Japan, has a deposit-insurance system that gives them "a very cheap source of deposits." In addition, "we still have the most liquid market in the world for short-term securities."

Moreover, trends within Japan may reduce Japanese banks' advantages. As more savings flow offshore," Mr. Hale says, "the cost of capital in Japan should rise." He also expects Japan's rapidly aging population "to start consuming the financial surpluses now being accumulated" in retirement nest eggs. And he suspects that Japanese of all ages, tired of economizing, might switch to a freer-spending life style.

If Japan keeps expanding its economic power here at a politically unacceptable pace, Mr. Hale expects the U.S. to respond "by pursuing managed-trade policies in both financial services and manufactured goods. Despite his free-trade rhetoric, Ronald Reagan was the most protectionist U.S. president since the early 1930s, and the odds are high that the Bush administration will edge further away from free trade."

Mr. Hale also suggests Japan's central bank will eventually act to ease the tension with the U.S. by restraining its banks.

But what if Japan's banks do keep growing—and take full advantage of their power? Mr. Hale asks disturbing questions:

"If Japan controls the world's largest supply of long-term capital, will Japan be able to buy technology in the U.S. and Europe which it is not capable of developing at home? Are there national-security risks in letting U.S. entrepreneurs become heavily dependent on foreign institutions for financing research and development?

"If Japanese banks have large cross-shareholdings with Japanese industrial companies, can they be considered autonomous players in the way they handle classified information from U.S. customers in sectors potentially vulnerable to Japanese competition. If Japanese banks use their capital advantage and pricing power to dominate the wholesale lending market for high-quality corporations, will American banks be forced to go down market in terms of credit quality and thus become de facto repositories for 'junk' loans?"

□ 1712

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to make rollcall vote No. 258 for H.R. 3275, the Steel Trade Voluntary Restraint Agreement and rollcall vote No. 259 for H.R. 1662, the Torture Victim Protection Act. If I had been able to vote, I would have supported both of these measures.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, due to a series of cluster voting, I was not recorded on rollcall No. 259. Had I been recorded, I would have voted "aye."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, October 2, 1989, circumstances prevented me from casting my ballot on rollcall votes 258, 259, and 260. Had I been able to vote, I would have voted "aye" on all three votes.

Mr. Speaker, I am thankful to have this opportunity to submit this statement for the RECORD.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, due to inclement weather my airline flight from New Jersey to Washington was delayed. I was therefore unable to vote on the Suspension Calendar on October 2, 1989. If I had been present I would have voted in the affirmative on each of the votes cast.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, October 2, 1989, I was unavoidably away from the Chamber, and was not able to record my votes on rollcall numbers 258, 259, and 260.

Had I been present, I would have voted as follows:

Rollcall No. 258: "Yea," H.R. 3275, Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act.

Rollcall No. 259: "Yea," H.R. 1662, Torture Victim Protection Act of 1989.

Rollcall No. 260: "Yea," House Resolution 251 and House Resolution 252, en bloc, technical amendments to the articles of impeachment of Judge Walter Nixon.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present yesterday for rollcall votes 258, 259, and 260. Had I been present I would have voted "aye" on each of these rollcalls.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on official business during rollcall votes 258, 259, and 260 on Monday, October 2, 1989. Had I been present on the House floor I would have voted in the following manner:

Rollcall 258: "Yea" on passage of H.R. 3275, Steel Trade Voluntary Restraint Agreement.

Rollcall 259: "Yea" on passage of H.R. 1662, Torture Victim Protection Act.

Rollcall 260: "Yea" on passage of House Resolution 251 and House Resolution 252, relating to the impeachment of Judge Walter Nixon.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained Monday and missed two votes: The vote on H.R. 3275 (rollcall 258), a bill to authorize the extension of the bilateral voluntary restraint agreements on steel imports for 2½ years, and the vote on H.R. 1662 (rollcall 259), the Torture Victim Protection Act of 1989. I was chairing a subcommittee hearing in New York, and my plane from Newark to Washington was delayed by heavy rain. Had I been here I would have voted "aye" on both bills.

MAKING IN ORDER ON TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1989, OR ANY DAY THEREAFTER, CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2788, DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I took seriously the criticism advanced by Members of the House last week about the possibility of appropriations bills again being massed into one huge conference report. I have discussed this matter, and so have the ranking members, Mr. Speaker, and the conferees have all agreed to the bill.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2 of rule XVIII, it be in order at any time on tomorrow, Tuesday, October 3, or on any day thereafter, to consider the conference report on the bill, H.R. 2788, and that motions to dispose of amendments in disagreement may be considered as read when called up for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOAKLEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so only to inquire of the gentleman if he has some idea as to when exactly this will come up?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I asked the leadership about that. They have an important bill up tomorrow, and the prospect is that this would come up either before the bill is brought up or after the bill is brought up. I do not know which the leadership has decided.

Let me say to the gentleman that I have cleared this with the ranking member of the Republican side, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], and I have cleared it with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], the ranking member of my subcommittee. All the members have signed the conference report except Senator LEAHY, and he was not here today. If he were present, I am told he would have signed it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, the likelihood is that the conference report will be on the floor tomorrow?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, if I receive unanimous consent from the House today, the likelihood is that I would bring the conference report up tomorrow for disposal tomorrow.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

SCHOOL RECOGNITION PROGRAM HONORS HAWAII

(Mr. AKAKA asked and was given permission to address the House for one minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker the President held an awards ceremony last Thursday in conjunction with the U.S. Department of Education's School Recognition Program; and I would like to congratulate Hawaii's honorees—

Kahuku, Kailua, and Waiakea high schools.

The School Recognition Program commends the best schools in our nation that are notably effective in educating their students. I am especially proud that three out of Hawaii's four nominees were selected for this signal honor and that all four schools are from my district—the Second Congressional District of Hawaii.

These institutions are setting the trend in our nation on outstanding student achievement, active community and parental involvement, institutional vitality, innovative curriculum reform, strong leadership, and productive teaching and learning environments.

Behind every successful school is a supportive network of parents, entrusting their children to the disciplines and guidance of the faculty. Each of these schools has that special ohana—or family—of parents, teachers, and administrators, communicating and working together to ensure the futures of our children.

This award highlights the genuine commitment and concern of the teachers and administrators of Kahuku, Kailua, and Waiakea high schools to provide the best educational opportunities for their students.

I am proud to extend my heartiest congratulations to the schools' representatives: Principal Lea Albert, Leialoha Fina'i and Debi Hartmann of Kahuku, Principal Meredith Meada and Dr. June Yamashita of Kailua, and Principal Danford Sakai and Vice Principal Donald Romero of Waiakea. I share their pride in this exceptional achievement.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the 60-minute special orders for today, October 2, 1989, for the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN] be amended to 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. MFUME). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

INTRODUCTION OF THE SAFE TRANSPORTATION OF FOOD ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, earlier today I introduced H.R. , the Safe Transportation of Food Act. This measure, if enacted, would: First, prohibit hauling solid wastes—including medical wastes and hazardous wastes—in refrigerated vehicles; second; prohibit cargo tanks used to haul loads of hazardous materials or hazardous waste from carrying liquid foodstuffs, such as orange juice pulp; and third, direct the Secretary of Transportation to undertake a study to determine if additional regulations are required to insure that food products hauled inside other types of vehicles, including dry vans, are necessary.

Earlier this year a newspaper in my district, the Centre Daily Times, published a series of articles detailing a growing trend of trucks hauling foodstuffs in the same trailers used to haul garbage. Typically, the truck, carries a load of food, produce, or frozen meat to the east coast and returns to the Midwest with a load of baled garbage.

On August 2, 1989, the Public Works and Transportation Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight held a hearing on this dangerous practice. Testimony received from two anonymous haulers, as well as from other witnesses, pointed out that backhauls of regular commodities and freight from the east coast to the Midwest has become scarce as more and more trucks entered the market following deregulation. Competition is so fierce, and prices so low, that truckers can no longer afford to deadhead on a return run. To do so results in significant financial losses.

Coincidentally in the past decade east coast cities have begun to suffer a serious shortage of landfill capacity. Stiffer regulation by the States and the Environmental Protection Agency caused the number of landfills to dwindle, forcing cities to conserve what little space they had remaining and to refuse shipments from nearby communities that did not own a disposal facility.

Waste transfer stations began to bale garbage received from a variety of local sources, load it onto long distance trucks, and pay to have it hauled a considerable distance for disposal at private landfills. Testimony received from industry and Federal witnesses revealed numerous instances of refrigerated trucks being used to backhaul garbage.

This legislation also prohibits the same cargo tanks used to haul liquid food products from carrying hazardous materials or hazardous wastes. This Thursday the Investigations and Oversight Subcommittee will hold a hearing on this practice. They have interviewed truck operators who will provide firsthand accounts of their experience hauling liquid food products in one direction and backhauling with a load of hazardous materials in the same tank, only to turn around and make another run with a load of liquid food products.

Mr. Speaker, during the August 2 hearing, it became quite clear that no comprehensive set of Federal regulations exists to ban this very dangerous practice of mixing loads of food products with other dangerous, hazardous commodities on the same truck. Testimony received from the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Agriculture, and the Food and Drug Administration revealed that this practice is not illegal and that a huge loophole in Federal law is being exploited to the detriment of the public health.

Backhauling of chemicals and garbage is dangerous, disgusting and unfortunately legal. My bill makes it a crime. Most of us don't dine out of garbage cans and we shouldn't eat food hauled in garbage trucks either. Likewise we don't drink orange juice out of empty formaldehyde bottles but as of today we can't be sure our juice wasn't hauled in a truck that hauled formaldehyde the day before.

Before closing, I want to thank the leadership of the Investigations and Oversight Subcommittee, Chairman ANDERSON and the ranking Republican GUY MOLINARI, and my friend and colleague, Representative BOB BORSKI, for their cooperation and assistance. Without their help and guidance, this legislation would not have been possible.

COUNTRY MUSIC MONTH

(Mr. CLEMENT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, "from out the wide Pacific, to the broad Atlantic Shore," Americans love country music. Country music legend Roy Acuff immortalized those words in a song written by A.P. Carter and copyrighted in 1933 by Peer International Corp.

I use those words to reflect the broad appeal country music has in our Nation. Today country music has also gained international appeal, spreading across our planet.

Today I join a majority of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives in officially proclaiming the month of October as "Country Music Month."

With the adoption of House Joint Resolution 401, designating October as "Country Music Month," the U.S. House of Representatives will be honoring an industry that has annual sales of $550 million.

According to a recent Harris survey, country music is the best liked music in America, with over 60 percent of adult Americans stating that country music is their favorite music.

Over 2,200 radio stations in America are full-time country music stations, up 92 percent over a decade ago.

From the Soviet Union to Australia people love country music. People always know about my home city, Nashville, TN, because it is the home of country music. Since being elected to the U.S. House of Representatives, I have had the opportunity to visit many parts of the world.

More than once I've had foreign citizens ask me, "Do You Know Dolly Parton."

This illustrates the unique "Americanism" of country music. It is a musical style that was born in the hills of Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas. Country music draws its roots from religious hymns, traditional ballads, folk songs and even the soulfulness of rhythm and blues, and embodies the spirit of America.

If fact, there is nothing more American that apple pie, our flag and country music.

I am proud to represent "Music City U.S.A.," the home of country music. I am also proud to present House Joint Resolution 401 to declare October as "Country Music Month" on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives.

I urge my colleagues to join me and the millions of country music fans across this Nation and throughout the world in recognizing this great American style of music on the 25th or silver anniversary of "Country Music Month."

Mr. Speaker, I also want to thank my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives for helping me circulate this resolution where the majority signed on, and, as a matter of fact, I had no one refuse to honor country music, and in particular I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COSTELLO], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORDON], and the gentleman from California [Mr. HERGER].

BENEFICIARIES OF THE CAPITAL GAINS TAX

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, in Time magazine this week there is a classic example of fair, and impartial and unbiased journalism in their lead article. It begins by saying, "Bill me later."

Mr. Speaker, it talks about the desire of the American people to hold on to their own earnings and the fact that they should be allowed to invest in American industry, but Mr. George Church of Time magazine refers to it as: Once again Washington chooses voodoo economics over responsibility.

Then, Mr. Speaker, it goes on to point out that by voting to fulfill George Bush's campaign promise to cut capital gains, Republicans and renegade Democrats jumped at a short-term boost in revenues against a long-term-get this—cutting taxes for working people, which stimulates economic growth, which increases tax revenues to the Treasury, and he calls it a giveaway which fractures the foundation of the landmark 1986 tax reform bill.

Mr. Speaker, it goes on to point out that Democrats contended correctly that 80 percent of the benefits from the capital gains slash would go to people making more than $100,000 because, when a senior citizen sells their four-bedroom home at age 65 when the children have moved out and they want to buy a one- or two-bedroom condominium, those who oppose the reduction in capital gains said, "Uncle Sam is entitled to a third of that money."

Mr. Speaker, if they spent their whole lifetime building a little nestegg of a home, or a farm or a little business, and they sell it, they are not entitled to it, Uncle Sam ought to have at least a third.

We said: we were so bold that we said, "We think Uncle Sam only ought to take 20 cents out of every dollar."

The point is, Mr. Speaker, when we are competing in international markets, as we are every day, and Japan has a 5-percent capital gains tax, and Korea has a zero-percent capital gains tax, and Taiwan has a zero-percent capital gains tax, and West Germany has a zero-percent capital gains tax, it is totally absurd to force the American entrepreneur, the American farmer, the American homeowner to have a 33-percent capital gains tax, and since it was the highest of any of the major industrialized nations on earth, we began to lower it. We wanted to lower it just a little bit where it would still be the highest of any major industrialized nation on Earth, and so in presenting those arguments to the American people, Democrat and Republican alike in this House chose to do it, which causes a great deal of consternation to our good, unbiased observers at Time magazine.

Mr. Speaker, they pointed out the reference to voodoo economics over responsibility. We said in the late 1970's; my colleagues remember when we had a declining standard of living, we were losing jobs at the rate of 50,000 a week, and they told us, Mr. Alfred Kahn, who was the head of the Council of Economic Advisers for Mr. Carter; they told us that America had crested, that we were entering an era of limits in which we needed to think small. My colleagues remember all of that.

They said we had to learn to live with less, we had to learn how to ride our bicycles and wear sweaters and turn down our thermostats and all that sort of thing.

We said under our economic program that there is not any problem with the American people. They are just carrying too much of a burden. If you cut taxes for working people, if you allow people to keep a little bit of it, they will save a little bit, they will invest a little bit and they will buy a little bit, and when they buy more lawnmowers and more widgets and repair their homes, they will put people to work. That is what we proposed in 1981.

The left screamed "voodoo economics," but nevertheless, in 1981 we did it.

What happened? By 1983, we hit a 35-year high in long-term capital investment. We began to reinvest in America. Instead of closing factories, we began to build new factories.

In 1984, we hit a 38-year high in long-term capital investment. We began to create jobs more rapidly than any place on earth.

The longest period of growth in our economy and in the history of the United States has been a 56 consecutive month growth up until 1982. When the 1981 tax bill went into effect, America began to grow and to prosper and to create more jobs at the rate of 300,000 a month for now 83 consecutive months. In other words, America has created 20 million new jobs since 1982.

How does that compare with the rest of the world? That means that more than 6 out of every 10 jobs, nearly 7 out of every 10 jobs created on this planet since 1982 have been created in one country, the United States of America.

Now, if you are a German businessman or if you are a Japanese businessman or if you are an Ohio businessman or you are a California businessman and you want to add on to your plant or you want to build a new factory, you do not build it in Taiwan and you do not build it in Western Europe and you do not build it in Latin America. You build it in the United States of America.

All of us, every Member of Congress here is cutting ribbons and attending dedications and presenting New American flags to new American factories in their districts that are owned by Americans, that are owned by West Germans and Britons and British citizens, as well as anyone around the world who wants to invest in the United States. That is what we said would happen if you created the economic climate that would attract capital from around the world.

Well, to say that somehow or another we have engaged in an orgy that is unwise to allow the American people to keep their own funds, listen to this next paragraph, you will love it:

It is said that by cutting taxes for these people that it will increase Federal revenues by $6.7 billion between now and 1991. Of course, if you lower taxes and allow people to trade so that they do not have to give it all to Uncle Sam, they will do more of it. As they do more of it, Uncle Sam benefits.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I could add more, but the fact of the matter is the truth speaks for itself, regardless of the tired, worn-out wailings of the left.

EDUCATION, LIKE CHARITY, BEGINS AT HOME

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] is recognized for 5 minutes

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, American experts are dispensing advice on fiscal and monetary reform in Moscow, including advice on how to borrow at 3 percent interest.

This is no joke, Mr. Speaker. American experts, one of them an incumbent Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, are educating top Soviet economic planners: First, how to make the ruble the most sought-after currency in the world; second, how to make the cost of capital in the Soviet Union the lowest in the world, lower even than Japan's; and third, how to generate more savings domestically by putting gold-denominated earning assets at the disposal of the savers.

I would like to call my colleagues' attention to the relevance of this expert advice to our domestic problems:

First, we, too, could benefit from an interest rate structure around 3 percent per annum. In this way, we could eliminate the budget deficit in 5 years, by replacing the high-interest, short-term debt as it was maturing by low-interest, long-term debt. Better still, the deficit-reduction would be accomplished in the absence of cuts in social and defense spending, and without new taxes.

Second, we too, could benefit from a dollar which was once again the world's most sought-after currency. In this way, we could turn our trade deficits into a surplus. After all, the Germans and the Japanese owe their huge trade surpluses to their strong mark and yen. It is easy to see that producers are uniquely assisted by a strong currency, which alone can secure the best terms of trade for them and for their country. This was the secret of the American trade surpluses before 1968; and this is the secret of the German and Japanese trade surpluses since then.

Third, we, too, could benefit from more domestic savings. In this way, we could reclaim control over our own financial destiny.

An America in control of her financial destiny, an America running budget and trade surpluses instead of perennial deficits is no dream, Mr. Speaker. The expertise to make it a reality is available right here, on Constitution Avenue, at the Federal Reserve. In fact, for lack of domestic interest, and for want of domestic use, this expertise is now being exported to the Soviet Union.

But the authority to take the necessary steps in order to restore the dollar to health rests right here. The buck stops on Capitol Hill. Our Constitution has vested Congress with monetary powers which cannot be delegated. Properly used, these powers shall enable the Government to borrow at the lowest interest rate available in the world at any particular time. Other benefits, in the form of a higher rate of domestic savings and productivity, greater international competitiveness, expanded time horizon for business, higher national income, and many others too numerous to list here, will follow almost automatically.

The dollar has become a second-rate currency, which retains respectability only on condition and only to the extent that we allow the Japanese and others with hard currencies to pick up prime American assets at bargain-basement prices. This deplorable state of affairs is entirely our own fault. It is due to the fact that Congress, in a moment of absentmindedness, abdicated its constitutional monetary powers back in 1971. Prior to that the dollar used to have a legal definition. Since that fateful year it has had none and, accordingly, its value has been a plaything in the hands of speculators. It has been gyrating in the foreign exchange markets, demoralizing the bond market in the process. Ever since 1971 we have been stumbling from crisis to crisis, and can only survive by heaping deficit upon deficit.

To remedy this abnormal situation and in order to return to the path of fiscal and monetary rectitude Congress should, following the expert advice emanating from the Federal Reserve Board, take immediate steps to stake out America's claim in the world's gold-loan market. It is important that we do this before the Soviet Union invades the field and establishes a monopoly position there unopposed.

This is what we have to do. Congress must authorize the Treasury to issue gold-bonded obligations without any further delay. The Treasury should immediately start marketing long-term gold bonds. It should use the proceeds to retire the fast-maturing short-term debt. The Treasury operations, if carried out with the necessary skill, will stabilize the dollar.

I insert my letter on this subject to my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives for the benefit of Members of the Senate, adminstration officials, the Governors of Federal Reserve Board, and for the benefit of the general public:

THE SAUCE FOR THE GOOSE IS NO SAUCE FOR THE GANDER

DEAR COLLEAGUE: On the editorial page of Barron's magazine (September 25, 1989) we may read an intriguing story. Earlier that month Federal Reserve Board Governor Wayne Angell went to Moscow at the invitation of the Soviet government to advise officials there on fiscal and monetary reform. He recommended an immediate government commitment to gold covertibility of the ruble, and the financing of the government deficit by selling gold bonds to the world at large at 3% interest. Governor Angell predicted that "Soviet gold bonds would be snapped upon in New York and London" and, after the reforms, the Soviets would have "The most sought-after currency in the world". If that was not enough enticement, he also told the Soviet that a gold ruble would give them the lowest cost of capital in the world—even lower than that of Japan. In a lecture at the Institute of U.S. and Canadian Studies in Moscow on September 4, Governor Angell said: "Gold rubles and gold ruble-denominated financial instruments would be desirable savings vehicles, encouraging more domestic savings". In conclusion he told his audience how the genie of inflation, now on the rampage in the Soviet economy, could be bottled up: "Upward price pressure resulting from pent-up consumer demand would be less likely to shake market confidence under a gold-ruble standard, as any price advance would be perceived as temporary".

The story raises some awkward questions. In the Governor's script, the gold sauce for the goose is apparently no sauce for the gander. He is dispensing golden precepts to the managers of the Soviet currency, precepts which could be used in-house on Constitution Avenue at the Federal Reserve, but aren't. He travels five thousand miles eastward to lecture Soviet legislators on the merits of gold-bond financing of the government; let us hope that he can find time to travel two miles eastward on Constitution Avenue to testify on Capitol Hill to the effect that the same principles are patently valid on this side of the water as well. One should think that the first duty of Federal Reserve officials is to let their own government have the benefit of advice on the principles of sound money.

The American economy is every bit as much in need of domestically generated savings as the Soviet. American savers would appreciate gold-denominated earning assets no less than Soviet savers. Had we had them, we wouldn't have been forced to sell prime American assets to the Japanese at bargain-basement prices.
